What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
  For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

J. H. GARRISON.

Hazing.

The serious treatment of the question of hazing at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, ought to be eye-opening to a great many bright college youths. A court-martial, appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, has been trying the cases of two cadets accused of hazing. The cadets at Annapolis are counted as officers in the navy and are, therefore, subject to the formalities of naval discipline. They can not be dealt with as ordinary college students, but have a right to trial before the same sort of tribunal that would try a rear-admiral on a charge affecting his honor. On the other hand they can not plead that "boys will be boys" and that "college spirit" requires an occasional riotous outbreak; for they are not boys, they are officers. If they claim the rights and dignities of officers, they must be brought to account by the standard of conduct suitable for officers. Under these circumstances, the hazer before the court-martial is apt to appear foolish—as foolish as the hazer in college appears when brought before the court of extra-college public opinion. It is reported that the evidence already brought out by the court-martial at Annapolis implicates a very large proportion of the student body in various hazing scrapes and a great many cadets are very uneasy at the serious turn of affairs. Perhaps it will have a wholesome effect upon college opinion at large to see what a court of naval officers, who are supposed to know something about honor and courage and the other militant qualities of manhood, think about hazing.

A Great Library.

The acquisition of the historical library of Mr. Hubert Howe Bancroft by the University of California is an event of real importance to the cause of American learning. Mr. Bancroft (who is not related to George Bancroft who wrote the history of the United States) went to California in 1852 and almost immediately, even while the gold fever was at its height, formed a plan to which he adhered until its completion. It was to collect a library containing all possible data regarding the early history of the west and to write the history of the Pacific states. Fortune came to him in the course of trade and he devoted both his money and his life to the pursuit of books and documents. He and his agents ransacked the libraries and bookshops of Mexico and of Europe. They collected valuable letters, searched out and secured valuable original documents. They secured, often by direct dictation, the memoirs of surviving participants in the stirring events of early Californian history. The literary output was vast in proportion to the vastness of the collection gathered. A five-volume work on "Native Races of the Pacific" was followed by the great thirty-four volume "History of the Pacific States." These many volumes—and they are large ones—contain rather a transcription and condensation of the raw material than digested history, but in them and in the fifty thousand volumes of the Bancroft library which lay back of them, are contained practically everything that is known or ever can be known about the field which they cover. Few special historical libraries are so complete within their own territory, and few fields of history are better worth study. It is a matter of congratulation that this great collection has come into the keeping of a public institution which can adequately care for it.

Postal Reforms.

It is scarcely too much to say, as Secretary Cowles, of the Postal Progress League, says, that "the post office is the citadel of American liberty." The privilege of sending written or printed matter from any point to any point in the country, regardless of distance, location or volume of business, at a fixed rate, has been an immense factor in building up the country's prosperity and scattering the population throughout our territory. Rural free delivery has added vastly to the value of the postal service. Two suggestions have been made which, it is claimed, would add yet more to it. The first is that rural delivery should include, as a recognized part of the postal service, the carrying of passengers and freight up to the capacity of the conveyance. Such service would be, in a way, a restoration of the functions of the old stage coach of ante-railroad days, and would be both a convenience to the patrons and a source of revenue which would reduce or destroy the annual deficit which the rural delivery service contributes to the post office budget. The other suggestion is a very radical one, which has been made before, that there should be established a passenger and freight post, covering the whole country, by which persons and merchandise would be transported from any point to any other at a rate fixed without regard to distance. It would be the application of the postal fixed rate plan to all railroad traffic. In testifying recently before the Senate interstate commerce committee in regard to the matter of rate regulation, this plan was heartily endorsed by a professor from the University of Chicago.

Reform from Within.

The present is an excellent time for the railroads to undertake on their own account those reforms which, by common consent, ought to be made, and there are indications that they are thinking seriously of it. The free-pass evil bears about the same relation to the passenger department that the rebate evil bears to the freight department, and it has never been possible to legislate effectively against it. In spite of spasmodic protests from conscientious governors, the vast majority of legislators and judges have continued to ride on passes, and congressmen have done the same. It is now reported that, by agreement of the railroads, there will be no more passes for congressmen and their families after January 1, 1906. Since members of congress receive in addition to their salaries, mileage equal to several times the actual cost of transportation from their homes to Washington and back, this change of policy will work no great hardship on them. It will bring in quite a little sum to the railroads in fares, and it will give the constituents a feeling of increased confidence to know that their representatives are not in receipt of substantial favors from a great corporate interest whose wishes, with reference to the pending legislation may not at all points coincide with the will of the public. It is to be hoped that the railroads will carry still further the anti-pass reform. So long as the present system is in vogue, of course we will all want our share of the passes, but doubtless even those who have been recipients of such favors would admit that the complete abolition of them would be both just and desirable. The railroads have this reform in their own hands.

It is reported also that the rebate evil is likely to be dealt with by the railroads. The recent convictions and indictments at Kansas City, Chicago and elsewhere have presented the matter to the roads in a very serious light, and some of them have been holding conferences and forming agreements looking to the abolition of the practice. So far as rebates are concerned, the formation of something like the old-fashioned "pool," which was the forerunner of the trust, or at least an ironclad agreement to maintain rates, would afford a solution of the problem. The other side of rate regulation, the prevention of excessive rates, would still remain to be dealt with by legislation and outside control.

The Walsh Failure.

It is perhaps something of a relief from the monotony, if not exactly reassuring in other respects, to have evidence that Wall Street is not the only place where Frenzied Finance flourishes. The recent failure of John R. Walsh, millionaire banker, promoter and railway operator, shows what is apt to happen when one embarks in too many enterprises at once and spreads out his capital over too large a field. Mr. Walsh was a tolerably rich man, but he was not rich enough to carry all the enterprises which he attempted, for they were many and vast. Feeling the need of more money than his own, he established banks and also a trust company. The savings deposits on which the savings bank paid three per cent afforded a fund which he could use profitably in his business. The deposit of public moneys in the other bank was even more profitable to Mr. Walsh. But to secure these deposits it was necessary to organize and maintain a political machine to control officials whose business it was to choose the state depositories. The real purpose of these banks was not to do a general banking business, but to get hold of money which could be loaned to John R. Walsh.

Christian Union Historically Considered.

PRELIMINARY.

The greatest task before the church is the evangelization and Christianization of the world. The successful accomplishment of this task involves the harmonious co-operation of the various parts of the divided church. Hence the supreme problem before the church is such a unification of its sundered parts as will secure the needed co-operation. The chief motive to Christian union is that it is an essential condition to the conversion of the world. Jesus prayed that his disciples might be one, "that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." This prayer of our Lord defines both the reason for Christian union and the kind of union he desires. The reason is "that the world may believe," and the kind of union prayed for is that which will promote and hasten that end.

At no time in the history of the church since its divisions have occurred has there been so deep and widespread interest on the subject of Christian union as there is to-day. At no time, therefore, has there been so favorable a time for the re-study of this subject in the light of New Testament teaching and church history. Bitterness of party spirit has subsided. Narrow prejudices have given way before increasing light and a larger charity. The will of Jesus Christ is more potent in molding the religious thought and life of men today than it has been for many generations and centuries. If he, our sovereign Lord and Head of the church, desires his followers to be one, the church now is ready to pause and ask, reverently and thoughtfully, "In what sense, Master, wouldst thou have us one, and how may it be accomplished?" Believing the time, therefore, to be propitious for such a re-investigation of the subject we purpose to contribute a series of articles to such study, both for our own benefit and for that of our readers.

As the modern mind has become accustomed to the historical method of study, it is believed that the subject of Christian union can be seen in the clearest and best light when it is looked at through the perspective of history. It is our plan, therefore, in conducting this investigation, to begin with the beginning of Christianity, and to ascertain, as far as possible, what kind of Christian union existed and to what causes it owed its existence in the first and successive epochs of church history. We believe that God has been teaching us through these centuries past by the events of history, and especially in these modern times is he speaking to us in the movements of our age in language which can not be misunderstood by those who have eyes to see, ears to hear and hearts to understand. We feel sure that any discussion of this great theme that is unillumed and uninfluenced by the providential movements of our time would be inadequate. We shall therefore seek to know the meaning of what God is doing in our day as well as of what he did in days of old.

Two motives impel us to this fresh study of the subject of Christian union. We believe that we who are designated as "Disciples of Christ," or "Christians," and who, together with our fathers, have stood for nearly a century as advocates of Christian union, need to re-study this subject both in the light of the past and of the present that we may renew our zeal in its behalf, and get a clearer grasp of the subject in its relation to the times in which we live, and to the principles for which we stand. Like others, we are not immune from the party spirit, and there is constant danger that we may make the plea of Christian union a mere party slogan, much as a political party sometimes raises a popular cry to catch votes. On the other hand there is danger that some may grow weary of the slow coming of the desired unity, and may seek to hasten it in a way that would compromise important principles and furnish a new occasion for division. To prevent either of these extremes, it seems to us a fresh study of this whole question is desirable. The other motive is a desire to contribute any light which we may be able to give for the benefit of our brethren in other religious bodies who, with us, are seeking to solve the problem of unity and to find a closer bond of fellowship that will enable them to co-operate, as members of a common family and citizens of a common kingdom, in spreading the reign of Christ over the earth. Hitherto the ears of these brethren have not been so open to hear anything we had to say on the subject as they are at present. We shall have that larger constituency in view in writing these articles and we shall be grateful for any help which our readers may be able to render in bringing what is said in this series of articles to the attention of their religious neighbors who are interested in this subject. Our earnest desire is, and our earnest effort will be, to avoid writing as a partisan, but to write rather as a free member of the body of Christ, claiming fellowship with all Christians, and seeking only to bring them into such relations with Christ and with each other as that the will of God may speedily be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

We are at the dawn of a new era on the subject of Christian unity. Men may shut their eyes to the fact if they will but the fact exists nevertheless. A new spirit has entered into the hearts of Christian people, and the church has caught the sight of a new vision which will henceforth be a controlling factor in its life. Having once seen this fair vision, it can never live and labor contentedly under the limitation of its division walls. It is with the view of hastening the realization on earth of this vision of a united church, if only in some small degree, that we undertake this work.

It is with a profound sense of our inability to deal adequately with so great and vital a theme, that we undertake the task outlined above. We do so, however, relying confidently upon the gracious aid of that divine and immanent Spirit an important part of whose mission in the church is to promote its spiritual development and unity.

A Neglected Work.

A representative of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the field, in writing from one of our great cities, states this astonishing fact: "Out of seventy-five calls made last week I did not find over twenty families who even knew the name of either THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST or the 'Christian Standard.' The ignorance that prevails in our city churches as respects the work of the Disciples is nothing less than appalling. * * * Another fact: In all those seventy-five families visited I found but three of our own papers." We have no right to suppose that the condition of things is very different in that city from what it is in many others. What can we expect of the future of our Cause in the cities, as long as this state of things exists? What proportion of these seventy-five families, representing at least a hundred and fifty members, are likely to rally to the support of our general enterprises? How many of them can give a reason for the hope that is within them?

Here is a situation that demands a great deal more serious thought than it is receiving. No doubt the minister of the church where these families belong visits these homes occasionally, but has he noticed that they are taking none of our religious papers, and has he made an effort to remedy that defect? How many pastors have preached a special sermon on the value of the religious journals in the home, and the important part which they fill in developing the spiritual life and in keeping the members in touch with the larger work of the brotherhood? There is reason to fear that thousands of our young people are growing up without any correct knowledge of the principles for which we stand. These uninstructed people naturally fall into that flabby condition of mind which expresses itself in the saying that "One church is as good as another." Such persons need to be instructed in the meaning and aim of our religious movement if they are to be of any value to the church. The preacher may do something, and should do something, to train members in the knowledge of these principles, but his pulpit instruction needs to be supplemented by the weekly visits of a good religious journal which stands for the things for which his pulpit stands.

We venture to call the attention of our preachers and church officials to the importance of this work at the beginning of the new year and to request their hearty co-operation with us during the year in placing THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in thousands of homes which are now unblessed with a religious journal. We solicit correspondence with ministers and others interested, and our circulation manager will be willing to furnish all necessary information, blanks, etc. We feel that we have a right to ask for the active co-operation of all our ministers and members who are in sympathy with what THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stands for. It is thoroughly committed to the work of restoring New Testament Christianity, and to the unity of all Christians on the simple basis of fellowship laid down therein. It believes that the method of realizing Christian unity is through brotherly love, sympathy, humility and co-operation. It believes in a spiritual Christianity, and in a spiritual church; it emphaszes the continuity and perpetual mission of the Holy Spirit as the essential condition both of unity and spirituality. If all who are in sympathy with the position of the paper on these great questions will manifest it in some practical, helpful way during the coming year we shall greatly extend the influence and power of the paper and of the cause which it represents. Can we rely upon such co-operation?

"Home Missions to the Front."

One of the things we have needed for some time to awaken a deeper and more widespread interest in Home Missions and to furnish the ministers with their necessary ammunition for a vigorous campaign in behalf of the evangelization of America, has been a book devoted to this great theme. We are glad to announce to our readers that arrangements are completed for the publication of such a book at an early date. Benjamin L. Smith, who, of all the men among us, is best qualified to prepare a work on that subject, has just placed in the hands of the Christian Publishing Company the manuscript for such a work. Its scope may be judged by the following table of contents:

Chapter I. "Beginnings of Christianity in America;" II. "The Home Missionary Enterprise;" III. "The Prize of Home Missions—America;" IV. "The Place of Home Missions;" V. "Continued Need of Home Missions;" VI. "The American Christian Missionary Society;" VII. "The Plea for Christian Union and Home Missions;" VIII. "Our Day of Opportunity and Obligation;" IX. "What You Want to Know in Home Missions;" X. "Battle Cries of the Missionary Church;" XI. "Missionary Methods;" XII. Pioneers in Home Missions;" XIII. "Fuel for Missionary Fires;" XIV. "The Conclusion of the Whole Matter."

Such a work will be very timely now in helping on the advancing preparation for our Centennial celebration, part of which will be the doubling up of our contributions to Home Missions. We are glad to be able to make this announcement and we are sure that the brotherhood will give the book a very hearty reception.

In the Interest of Justice.

For several weeks past our Cincinnati contemporary—the "Christian Standard"—has been throwing out dark hints of a conspiracy which has been entered into by certain "far western states," and a certain publishing company, by which their State Boards have practically sold themselves out to the said publishing company, to work for its private interests. Several other states, it announces, have been "approached" by the same company but have spurned this attempt to bribe them. Another state is mentioned where "for many years one of our great state brotherhoods has been groaning under the prostitution of its missionary and Sunday school interests to the supposed advantage of private parties." In the last number of the "Christian Standard" two of the state secretaries rightly complain of this indefinite charge as doing injustice to those State Boards which have not yet sold out to the religious octopus that is seeking to secure control of the State Boards in its private interests. We have been waiting for the "Christian Standard" to carry out its threat to make public the names and facts in the case, but there is an intimation in its last issue that it thinks this will not be necessary. We therefore feel it our duty to call upon the "Christian Standard," as a matter of simple justice to all our State Missionary Boards and to all our publishing companies, to turn over whatever facts it has in its possession to any three fair-minded, representative men in the brotherhood, and ask them to investigate fully the cases which it has in mind and report their findings to the brotherhood through our papers. It seems to us that the "Christian Standard" is in honor bound to do this. We pledge our hearty co-operation with such a committee in getting at all the facts of the case, and will take pleasure in giving its findings in our columns.

Notes and Comments.

The fact that the Sunday school lessons for the whole of the year 1906 are devoted to the study of the three Synoptic Gospels—Matthew, Mark, and Luke—offers a splendid opportunity for the whole church to engage in a fresh and more systematic study of the life of Christ. Our ministers everywhere should call attention to this fact, and turn their churches into Bible schools, to study the life of Christ during the next year. No revival among us is needed more than a revival of Bible study in our churches, and no part of the Bible is so important as that which records the life of Jesus. We trust that an earnest effort will be made to get the entire membership of our churches enlisted in the study of these Gospels during the coming year, either in the Sunday school, or, when that is impossible, in the home. We should be glad to hear from a large number of pastors who will agree to call attention to this important matter and urge their members to devote the year 1906 to gaining a better knowledge of Christ as he is presented to us in these Synoptic Gospels.

Wisconsin claims to have the oldest state federation movement in this country, dating its genesis back to 1898. We are in receipt of an interesting address delivered at their eighth annual meeting by Rev. H. A. Miner, giving a history not only of the movement in that state but in the country at large, and showing that the Wisconsin churches are well up to the front in this movement for the coalition of Christian forces for aggressive Christian work. Concerning the work in that state Dr. Miner says: "It has aided in securing a better legislation and better law enforcement." The anti-cigarette movement, the Anti-Saloon League and the Sunday Rest Day Association, have all been mightily reinforced by this co-operative movement of the churches. The organization "has proved itself a magnet, drawing together the forces of righteousness. It expresses the 'getting together' spirit that animates those who would crown Jesus Lord of all." We congratulate the Wisconsin churches on the spirit of unity which they are manifesting.

A dispatch from New York says:

> "'The doctrinal differences which once divided the two Baptist denominations have passed away, and there now exist no doctrinal differences which should prevent their acting together as one denomination.'
> "This was the substance of a resolution adopted at a meeting of representatives of three national organizations—the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, the American Baptist Missionary Union and the Baptist Publication Society, here.
> "The differences referred to concerned close communion, which is now abolished after having been part of the church practice for more than a century."

It will be a little time, perhaps, before there is general acquiescence in this agreement between representative men of these organizations, but it is as inevitable as gravity. Neither the question of open or close communion, nor the frequency of its observance, can be made a test of fellowship in the church of Christ without violating the very spirit and meaning of the ordinance.

A correspondent expresses his surprise that so very few of our churches are encouraging their young men to enter the ministry, and that even many ministers are indifferent about enlisting young men in this holy calling. He is right in supposing that this is one of our great needs, and much can be done by churches and pastors in turning the minds of young men towards the work of the ministry. But, after all, the only satisfactory solution of the problem is the better endowment of our colleges that are preparing young men for the ministry. This is one of the lines of work which needs to be pushed well to the front during the next four years as a part of our Centennial movement. When our own colleges are able to furnish ample facilities for training young men for the ministry they will attract young men in larger numbers, and a great many of these will decide to devote their lives to the ministry of the Word.

We saw one automobile outside a church the other Sunday, and it recalled a statement in "The Saturday Evening Post" that "there has been no terrible accident due to the crush of automobiles before the church doors on Sundays." Possibly when the new method of locomotion has worn off its novelty, people may use the automobile for going to church, rather than for purposes of Sunday pleasure. At present, undoubtedly, the automobile is a Sunday desecrator, rather than a Lord's day observer.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair resumes the work of the new year with something of the same feeling which a school-boy has when he turns a leaf to a new white page of his copy-book, resolving to do better work than he did on the ink-stained page he has left behind. Is it not strangely suggestive of something immortal in man that he never does anything so well but that he feels he can do it better? The musician never feels that he has sung his song quite as well as he is capable of singing it. The artist is confident he can paint a nobler picture than any which he has ever put on canvas. So of the poet and the preacher. Neither of these feels that he has fully expressed himself, but that there is something better in him that is yet to be said. Well, editors feel the same way about their work. No volume of their papers satisfies their ideal. Moreover, they feel that the editorial gift which is in them has never yet come to perfection, and that they can produce something superior to anything they have ever yet accomplished. If this be a delusion it is a very pleasing one. But it is more than that. It is one of the proofs of man's immortality. It shows that man is greater than his work, and that he never comes to full and adequate self-expression here, but requires another sphere of life and activity where the fair ideals of the soul may come to perfect realization.

Speaking of the desire of man for self-expression as manifested in all the works of art, of music, of literature, of architecture and invention, has not that been the desire and purpose of God through all the ages of the past? What is the universe, with its countless worlds and systems of worlds, but the expression of the infinite wisdom, power and goodness of the Almighty? It was not, however, until man was created that there existed an adequate vehicle through which God could express his character and will. And it was not until the perfect man came in the person of Jesus Christ that God could fully express himself. In Christ we have a complete and perfect expression of God in relation to all our human needs. But it is not enough that God should express himself in one great character. He thus manifested himself in Christ Jesus that he might manifest himself in all the followers of Jesus. This is the end and meaning of all Christian education and growth. We are fulfilling our mission as disciples of Jesus Christ just in proportion as we allow God to express himself—his character and his will—through us. We are Christians only to the extent that our lives reflect the likeness of God in Christ. It is a proof, therefore, of man's God-likeness that he is forevermore struggling after a better expression of the divine that is in him.

"In the beginning God." Thus the Bible begins. Thus every year should begin. If God be in the beginning of the year, shaping all our life-plans and purposes, and giving motive and character to all our actions, the year will not be a failure. God should be in the beginning of every great enterprise which men undertake. He should be in the beginning of every life, to mold it and fashion it for his own high purposes. Too many would put God at the end of their life on earth, rather than in the beginning. But that means a wasted life, "In the beginning God." This is the divine order. And so, as we face the duties of the new year, we face God, the Supreme Reality of life. We can not advance a step in our work without him. He is cause, motive, guide, inspiration and goal. Without him we can do nothing. Not only is it true that "in him we live and move and have our being," but it is only in him—within the scope of his purpose, will, and gracious aid—that we can accomplish any permanent good. We do not know the future, but we do know God, and we are willing to trust him. Looking back over the dead year and into the future we can say with Whittier:

> "Beneath the moonlight and the snow
> Lies dead my latest year:
> The winter winds are wailing low
> Its dirges in mine ear.
> I grieve not with the moaning wind,
> As though a loss befell;
> Before me, even as behind,
> God is, and all is well."

It is only in the strength of such a conviction that we have heart to resume our tasks for the new year. It is a very great responsibility, the magnitude of which grows upon us with the passing years, to edit a religious journal having a national and even a world-wide circulation. This is especially true in a young and rapidly-growing religious movement which has for its aim the realization here on earth of the divine ideal of a united church, fashioned according to the divine pattern shown us in the Mount. To occupy the humblest position in a movement having such an aim is greater honor than to occupy an earthly throne; but to hold a place of responsible leadership in such a movement, as an editor of a religious journal necessarily does—who is sufficient for such responsibility? He would be least sufficient for such a place who should fail to realize his insufficiency for its responsible duties. If Paul were placed in such a position he could only say, as he said of his apostolate, "Our sufficiency is of God." He would be sure, also, to repeat the request he made of old: "Brethren, pray for us." An editor's pathway is often a thorny one, if he considers himself a servant of Christ, and not of man. But why should he complain of this? Did not the Master for our sake wear a crown of thorns? Should the servant expect to be above his Master?

But the editorial pathway is not all thorns. There are many beautiful flowers blooming along the way, and their sweet fragrance cheers the weary Editor often when his heart needs such encouragement. The Editor has more reasons to be grateful for the flowers than to complain of the thorns. There is the flower of gratitude thrown by some one who has been helped on his way by something that has been said in these columns, and to whom life means more because of influences which have gone out hence to mold his character and plans. Than this no flower emits a sweeter fragrance in the editorial sanctum. Then there is the flower of appreciation from one whose sense of the fitness of things, or whose heart-hunger, has been satisfied by something he has read herein, and he takes the time and trouble to express his appreciation. The balm which exudes from that flower often serves to heal the wound made by some sharp thorn of unkind criticism. And then there are flowers of brotherly advice and criticism, springing from love, and the desire to make better what love regards as good, that every editor appreciates and is profited by. Oh, yes, there are flowers as well as thorns along the Editor's path, and the flowers far outnumber the thorns, and, the beauty of it is, they are perennials! They bloom throughout the year. And even thorns have their mission. They serve to cultivate patience and forbearance, and these are valuable graces. They also remind us of the necessity of having our feet "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," which is not a bad equipment for an Editor. Another good thing about thorns is that one is not likely to make a pillow of them and lie down to sleep, in blissful unconsciousness of danger. They cultivate alertness, and alertness, we are sure, is a good thing.

But after all, thorns and flowers, deserts and oases, scorching sands or Elam's palm-shaded wells, are mere incidents of the journey. It is not the smoothness or the roughness of the road, nor the comforts or discomforts by the way, but what the road leads to, that is the important consideration. He who follows the cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night; that is to say, who is divinely guided in his course through life, need not concern himself very much about the hardships of the way. It is the destination that counts. As a matter of fact however, the man who is sure of his destination gets a good deal of comfort along the journey. No man gets so much real enjoyment out of this life as he who sees it and measures it in the light of the life that is eternal. But the point of this homily is that we should not seek for ease or luxury, enjoyment or amusement, as the ends of our being, but should follow rather the path of duty, which, in the light of love, is often transformed into a path of privilege and delight. What we wish for our readers, then, the coming year is that, whether through joy or through sorrow, through evil report or through good report, the year may bring us development in character, enrichment in spiritual possessions, and a better equipment for services for God and fellow men. What shall be said of the possibilities of the human mind, which mirrors in its depths the material universe, and which sends forth its powers of thought and imagination into the universe of spirit, in quest of truth and of God? May this be a year of communion with God, who alone can fill the capacious mind and heart of man, satisfy his immortal yearnings, and bring him to a realization of all that he was intended to be in the divine plan of creation!

The Religious Value of Church Music*

By Harriet F. Smith

The religious value of church music can never be told in a single paper nor in a series of papers on the subject. There are some things that outstrip halting words. While we stumblingly speak of its achievements in the past it is piling up new victories, Pelion on Ossa, and the task remains forever impossible. "Who has sight so keen and strong that can follow flight of song?"

But we can touch the hem of its garments as it passes and can bear testimony to its power. May we first think of its power apart from its religious value? It is powerful, yet the latest born of all the arts. Its elements have not all been discovered; its possibilities are just beginning to be appreciated. A painter of today or a builder combines the researches of the past. He can do no more. He can not paint better than Raphael, nor build better than the pyramids of Egypt and the cathedrals of the Middle Ages. But we are today in a golden age of music.

We can, almost within the memory of man, touch hands with Wagner, Beethoven, Mozart, and master musicians today are using their achievements as stepping-stones to higher things.

Other arts materialize the spiritual; music spiritualizes the material. It is more potent than any other art, for it is an art of progressive action. It is not fixed and finished like a picture or a statue. The impression it gives is unfolding, vital, dramatic. The same thing is true of oratory, but music outstrips words, it takes us farther than thought could go, and lays us, throbbing with emotion, at the feet of God.

Spencer called emotion the master and intellect the servant. Music affects emotion, emotion controls thought, thought leads to action, action orders conduct and conduct crystallizes into character.

An intelligent use of music, as a wise director of emotion, will result in more nearly stainless morals and daily righteous living. Confucius asked with pertinence, "Desire ye to know whether a land is well governed, and its people have good morals? Hear its music." From a mere cry in prehistoric ages, it has passed into the pulse of our existence. We have no real right to spend much money on what has little connection with right living. We do as a nation spend money on music, and it will pay us to keep its connection with morals fresh and clear. Luther called music "the fairest gift of God," and said it "makes men more gentle and meek, more modest and understanding."

There has never been a national crisis that has not been embodied in a hymn, a march, or an air, that was the inspiration or expression of the people's emotion. Garibaldi's hymn was the essence of the Italian movement. The Marseillaise has been the song of victory or death for French soldiers a hundred years and more. Luther's "Ein Feste Burg" was the Marseillaise of the Reformation. As music once restored him from a swoon in his cell, through him it helped awaken Europe from religious stupor. "God Save the Queen" and "Star Spangled Banner" have been sung, even with their last breath, by English speaking heroes, on every land and sea. And our own loved Dixie! It stirs us yet as no finer song can do, and brings a rush of grateful tears for a race of heroes such as the world had never known. Some one has said, "Let who will make the nation's laws, I would write their national music."

But higher than any moral value stands the religious value of music. History tells us that music has always been connected with religion, and that a nation's music was enduring in proportion as its spiritual life was pure. China, Japan, Arabia, India and Egypt used their crude melodies to worship their various deities, but it was Israel, with her worship of the one true God, that first put music on a really worthy plane. The sensuality connected with heathen religious rites puts shackles on the power of music. Israel's spiritualized conception of God set her music free. "All the music of the human heart is in the Psalms" (Gladstone). From Miriam's song of deliverance, through the Hebrew services, with choir and psalms, through the various branches of the church, from that day to this, the indissoluble union of music and religion has been an established fact. Its connection with public worship has been so constant and so close as to have become an all but necessary part. It is prevalent in the public services of all religious bodies, the Quakers being the notable exception. It would never have been so honored and magnified if it had not greatly influenced both those who sang and those who listened. Its prominence in the services is natural, for music is the child of the church. Its resources were developed because the church needed them. Its earliest masters were churchmen. For ages together its study was confined to the monastery.

Every development of music as an art was, for hundreds of years, taken by ecclesiatics for the upbuilding of the church. The Gregorian style, out of which counterpoint grew, was a style peculiar to the church. Every master of counterpoint, from Dufay to Bach, has been either a churchman or notably religious.

The church nurtured and cherished music. Music has helped the church to save the world. If it had done nothing more for religion than to afford an occasion for Hebrew psalms and Christian hymns, it would have earned the right to be emphatically honored for its services, for these have served as wings to bear the Gospel far and wide over the earth.

Music's power has reigned in the nations, in the church, and in the hearts of individuals. Our Lord and his disciples, at a time when, with heavy hearts, all had been said and done at the Last Supper, sang a hymn and went out. Paul and Silas, beaten and thrust into an inner dungeon, forgot pain and humiliation in prayer and spiritual song. The Lollards, afraid of preaching their doctrines, sang them, and throughout the country, the poor and needy, who could not understand the subtleties of doctrine, worshiped in song. Music has been the very handmaid of religion. It has figured in history as a healer of sick souls, and today it is a balm and a stimulant to the weary in mind and body. King Saul, soothed by the touch of David, is a type of thousands of weaklings, from that day to this, helped heavenward by the power of music.

Ruskin says somewhere that for all practical purposes, it would suffice to draw an ugly black cloud over the heavens, at regular intervals, to give us the needed rain. But the changing pageantry of heaven is hourly unrolled before us, to draw our eyes upward. Many saints have seen, and will see, glory without the aid of music, but its beauty and suggestiveness draw the hearts of all who will to the songs of the angels. "Music is love in search of a word," and when we can not say our love to our Father, we can sing it, or, failing there, we can feel it, as music bears us on its bosom to his throne. Noble music reminds us of our immortality, and leads us through worlds unrealized. It is as the footfalls on the threshold of God's other world. We stretch forth our spiritual antennae and touch the invisible. In still moments we hear the songs of the angels, and there comes an open vision, when we see white presences among the hills.

"We can tell by the stir of the music
What raptures in Heaven can be,
Where the sound is thy marvelous stillness
And the music is light out of thee."

Church music today as a power stands next to preaching. It is the minister's prime minister. It takes more than an ordinary sermon to reach the seats of the intelligence, the will, and the emotion. Music takes up the thread where the sermon lays it down. It is penetrating and intense, and moves one to accept what the mind has already become convinced of. It is the invisible cord that unifies a mixed congregation and binds our services together. It unifies because it is universal. It has escaped, more than any other part of the service, sectarian limitations. In it is, not heresy, but the heart theology of a universal ritual. How all our petty differences slip away when the sentiment of such a song as "In the Cross of Christ I Glory" brings us upon the common ground of our insufficiency, and the Father's all-embracing love and mercy. One of the strong holds that the Catholic church has on the people today is its constant, abundant, and artistic use of music. Literary eloquence, noble architecture, and ceremonial pomp have their place, too, but the sumptuous and sonorous music attracts vast throngs and brings them again and again. When we as a people bring consecrated common sense to bear upon the question of our church music, we will have laid hands on an instrument God meant us to use in the doing of his work.

*A paper read at the Texas Christian Lectureship.

Let us take up different features of our church music today and study together the weaknesses and possibilities of each. The organ voluntary, while not a necessary, nor even a desirable, part in some localities, may be a great help in hushing the people into reverential quiet. Mothers come in with their minds still full of sweet domestic thoughts; fathers, drowsy from their unaccustomed morning nap, and business cares intruding; the children freshly arrayed and noisily conscious of their grandeur; the stranger, indifferent or amused at all the stir around him. "Many men of many minds," but the sweetly penetrating tones of the organ wash their souls clean of all worldly thoughts, and make them receptive for the ministry of song and sermon. The volatile character of music, its ethereal quality, makes it capable of being interpreted according to the need of each listener. To the discouraged it speaks cheer; on the frivolous heart it lays a restraining hand; to the perplexed it comes with soothing touch. If one would be helped it is vocal with inspiration. Browning did not overstate it when he said, "There is no truer truth obtained than comes by music."

"If God speaks anywhere, in any voice,
To us his creatures, surely here and now
We hear him, while the great chords seem to bow
Our heads, and all the organ's breathless noise
Breaks over us, with challenge to our souls!
From the mountain peaks
The strong, divine, compelling thunder rolls;
And 'Come up higher,' the words it speaks,
'Out of your darkened valleys of despair,
Behold I lift you up on mighty wings
Into Hope's living, reconciling air!
Breathe, and forget your life's perpetual stings—
Dream, folded on the breast of Patience sweet,
God's pulse of pitying love for you does beat!'"

When the last tones of the organ melt into silence, the choir is in position, ready to sing the first hymn reverently. The first purpose of the choir is to foster and support congregational singing. The choir furnishes the vocal nucleus to which the voices of the people may attach themselves, a positive mass of harmony in which every singer in the congregation can find his place. The choir singers often become leaders in sentiment as well as song, for the popular heart is quick to respond to the real inspiration the singers feel, and join in it. We can all recall times when the thrilling effect was like a glimpse of heaven.

The special music—and I discuss it first because it is relatively of less importance—can be upon the highest possible plane as a useful and beautiful part of the service. Vocal gymnastics have no place there. When a singer sings because she is paid, or for applause, or, indulging her vanity, to make the service novel and attractive to visitors, rather than for the heart message she might utter, then she loses an opportunity for using her ministry of song. But if her life is consecrated to the Master's service, and her song only "living aloud" it will leave a tender and beautiful aspiration to nobler living in every earnest heart.

Special music is of most value when noble words are rendered more powerful through their union with music. Many of the most precious truths of the Bible take on a grateful freshness when fitly set to music. Familiar passages that sound trite and formal, recover their meaning when lovingly sung. I have sometimes envied the heathen to whom the Gospel comes with an overwhelming vigor that is lost to us in our familiarity with the sound of the words. We know the passage before the preacher finishes it. Our minds race ahead of his spoken words, and often gather such momentum that they wander far afield. Happy the minister who can clothe familiar words with freshness by his rare and right emphasis. But music does this and easily. Every choir could have this peculiar ministry of tone. Choir singing is not only prayer and praise, it can be preaching also, of the most vigorous kind. This trinity of prayer, praise and preaching elevates the choir to a position of dignity that, if always assumed by them, would utterly put to rout the notorious "trouble in the choir," and would emphasize the moral tone of the whole service.

A Lesson to the Preacher in the Pulpit

By Edward Amherst Ott

President of the Ott Schools of Expression, Chicago, Illinois.

It is a well-understood principle of oratorical grace that the size and quality of a man's vocabulary largely determines his ability to express himself clearly and beautifully. It is not so well understood that the variety of action, the ease and grace upon the platform, depends upon the size and quality of the vocabulary of action. There is a school of pantomime in Japan, in which stories are told entirely by the language of motion, and inasmuch as the stories are complex, dramatic, ornate, and beautiful it goes without saying that the actor not only commands the muscular activities of his body, but that there is a wide variety of action used in the interpretation of the complex emotions of the dramatic unfoldment.

In France, pantomimic plays are very frequently presented; whole companies of actors, to the rhythm of sweet music, present plays through action. The appeal is entirely to the eye, and yet is satisfactory and clear. No meaningless movements are indulged in, but every gesture means something to the observer, and it is to be hoped is not repeated again, and again, and again, and again.

Of course the actor, with all the assistance of stage settings, with the other actors to appeal to, with the liberal stage business prepared by the skillful stage manager, has a tremendous advantage over the orator; on the other hand, the orator and the reader have a liberty and an opportunity for variety that is limited only by the imagination and the actual experiences of the artist himself. It will be interesting, therefore, to study the elements of the vocabulary of gesture and to see how far Nature provides this vocabulary. In the language of words, do we not know the scholar by his vocabulary? The ignorant man has a very few one-syllabled words which he utters in monotones, for the same intellectual experience which would limit his vocabulary to monosyllables would also limit his inflections to one-inflection styles. The unimaginative man is intellectually like a rabbit; he runs the circle of his experience vocally as well as emotionally and uses over and over the emotions which he has acquired in the getting of his daily living; so the unimaginative man who is a bookbinder stands before his labor lodge to make a speech and in the expression of his will power pushes his hand across his body just as he did when it contained the polishing tool and he was molding the ledger back. The skillful eye can almost read a man's history in his gestures, and he too frequently reveals the personal story of his life in the few oft-repeated movements of his body. The critic frequently feels like asking the orator why he does not add a few new words to the vocabulary of action; get away from his early experiences, and learn to run out into new fields of experience and observation rather than take the circular track and beat the narrow rabbit trail in the underbrush of personal experience. The actor is seldom guilty of the lack of variety. Mr. Mansfield, in his "Beau Brummel," shakes the blood out of his hands, looks, acts, and walks "the exquisite"; but in his "Richard the Third" his hands are large and claw-like; he limps and struts and growls the part out of his personal experiences and history—they are forgotten, and he rises great and sublime in his art because he forgets himself and lays aside personality. The young student of oratory, with the contrary spirit, says, "Now, I don't want to study action; I want to be entirely natural; I want to be myself." We all respect individuality, and there isn't any doubt but that most people have enough of it and a great many people to their everlasting shame keep their individuality to the end, even to their mispronunciations, ugly voice, and disagreeable manners; there is, however, an ever-increasing number of men with discernment and imagination who forget the ways, the vocabulary, the limitations of childhood and provincialisms, who enter into the new realms of experience and observation, whose style has all of the variety and light and shade of the mind that is freed from tradition and the narrow limitations of personal experience; their platform manners become faultless, their gestures are not repeated over and over like the burden of a refrain, but are as varied as the lights and shades that play on mountain scenery on days when clouds are blown across the sunlit skies.

It is as wise to appeal to the eyes of an audience through a well-chosen vocabulary of movement as it is to appeal to the minds of an audience through the vocabulary of the educated, well-cultured mind.

The Unconscious Mind and the Holy Spirit

By A. B. Jones

"The Unconscious Mind" is the title of a splendid book of over four hundred pages. The author. Alfred T. Schofield, is an Englishman. He is a physician, a scientific man, a man of scholarly attainments, wide research, large resources, and better than all, Dr. Schofield is a Christian man with broad, common sense, and no kinks in his make-up. The publication of his book, at least in America, is controlled by the Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York.

Twenty-five years ago had a physician or a scientific man published a book like this it would have been in the interest of materialism. Not so today. The whole tendency of thought has turned in the opposite direction—toward that side of life that has to do with mind and spirit and spiritual living. In the court of public inquiry it is no longer Materialism vs Spiritism, but it is Spiritism vs. Materialism. Spiritual being, spiritual thought or spiritual life as an idea or as an ideal is no longer defendant but plaintiff in the supreme court of highest thought of the twentieth century.

The whole field of man's physical, moral and spiritual nature is brought under review by Dr. Schofield in his book. And he shows himself familiar with the literature of his subject, quoting abundantly from the best thinkers and writers in the discussion of his theme. He styles his book a monograph, because the rays of his thinking all converge to the one burning question of "The Unconscious Mind."

"The object of this work," the author says, "is to establish the fact of an unconscious mind in man, and to trace in brief some of its powers and the various ways in which they are exhibited. We shall hope to show that this mind is the seat of character and of conscience and the spirit-life; the source of conduct, of instinct, of tact, and the thousand qualities that make us what we are; the home of memory, the ultimate governor and ruler of all actions and functions of the body, and in every way a most important factor in our psychical and physical life."

Is there an unconscious mind? The older writers on mental philosophy held that mind and consciousness were coextensive and virtually synonymous terms, and some still advocate this view. Dr. Schofield will surprise you with the number and character of the men who stand with him on the affirmative of this question.

The relation between the gray matter of the brain and mental operations is universally recognized, though not always in the same way and to the same extent. The division of the cerebrum into the upper, middle and lower brain, technically termed the cortex, the basal ganglia and the medulla, is held by the author to mark the limitations or spheres of activity respectively of the conscious and the unconscious mind. Experiments in vivisection demonstrate that these several parts function in different directions—subserve different purposes in the economy of life.

These evidences of the unconscious mind are with us in our daily experience. In our dreams there is a mental activity of which we are not conscious. The somnambulist who rises in his sleep, dresses himself and walks safely about in dangerous places, is guided by his unconscious mind. The artist, of whom we read in works on mental science, who arose on several nights and worked on a picture that he was painting, and inquired next day who had been working on his picture, was directed by his unconscious mind. In hypnotism the subject exercises mental activity in various directions of which he is wholly unconscious. We learn names and facts and acquire knowledge, which pass out of consciousness, but are stored away in the unconscious mind to be returned to consciousness when the conditions arise to favor the modification. Is anything ever really forgotten, any knowledge ever really lost? Instances are recorded of persons who in childhood acquired a knowledge of their mother language, but who afterward, in early life, emigrated to another country where they learned another tongue, and apparently lost all knowledge of the language of their childhood. But such persons have been known, in cases of sickness, fever and delirium, or in their dying moments, to talk fluently in the language of their youth. What a splendid conception—in the future life, where the conditions shall all be favorable, the unconscious mind shall return all its hoarded and hidden treasures of thought and knowledge to the conscious illumined soul—nothing ever lost!

We have indicated above that the author divides the brain into three departments—the upper, the middle, and the lower. Correspondingly he divides the mind into conscious, supra-conscious and sub-conscious. The supra-conscious is that part of our unconscious mind that connects us with the spiritual world, with God and all spiritual verities. The sub-conscious mind is that part of the unconscious mind that relates to the body, the functions of respiration and digestion and circulation of the blood, etc. Here the author finds the explanation of all modern "faith cures" and "divine healing," etc. But I must let Dr. Schofield speak more for himself:

"Our conscious mind, as compared with the unconscious mind, has been likened to the visible spectrum of the sun's rays, as compared to the invisible part which stretches indefinitely on either side. . . . As these invisible rays extend indefinitely on both sides of the visible spectrum, so we may say that the mind includes not only the visible or conscious part, and what we have termed the sub-conscious, that lies below, but the supra-conscious mind that lies beyond at the other end—all those regions of higher soul and spirit life, of which we are only at times vaguely conscious, but which always exist, and link us on to eternal verities, on the one side, as surely as the sub-conscious mind links us to the body on the other.

"The mind, indeed, reaches all the way, and while on the one hand it is inspired by the Almighty, on the other it energizes the body, all whose purposive life it originates. We may call the supra-conscious mind the sphere of the spirit life, the sub-conscious the sphere of the body life, and the conscious mind the middle region where both meet. The Spirit of God is said to dwell in believers, and yet, as we have seen, his presence is not the subject of direct consciousness."

The Educational Revival

By C. M. Farmer

The Christian-Evangelist recently has found occasion, as have also other papers, to mention the religious revivals going on in the world. This is gratifying. It is to be hoped that the revivals in progress will be productive of much good.

While these religious revivals are going on, another, second in importance only to them, has begun. I do not know that an educational revival is universal, but in the southern states of the union a movement to increase the facilities for the diffusion of knowlede among the youth has been started. That better educational advantages are sadly needed in the south, is well known to those who are at all familiar with the situation. We have made great progress in education and have done so in the face of adversity. There are teachers who have grown gray in their service than which there is but one higher. These faithful teachers have received the most meager compensation, yet they have worked for the good of humanity and sacrificed successful and honorable business careers. They do not get the credit due them. Many of these good old teachers who have spent their lives molding character and who have "lured to higher worlds, and led the way," after all their toil and self-sacrifice, have gone to their graves "unwept, unhonored, and unsung"

It seems that a change is in progress in our southland. Many educators and others have been studying the situation for quite a while and urging something to be done. The state of Virginia has on foot an educational campaign to begin in May next. Competent speakers are to hold public meetings all over the state to arouse interest and secure a concerted effort to improve the schools. Consolidation of the small ungraded schools into larger graded ones, higher salaries for teachers, and longer terms are some of the proposed improvements.

Much is being accomplished in other southern states. North Carolina has made rapid progress in the last few years. Georgia has made great strides. In many places

The Black Maelstrom

By William Durban

We are, here in the old country, once more face to face with the appalling problem which confronts us every winter, and is now thrusting itself forward in intenser aspect than ever before. I refer to the poverty problem, which is here and now being described specially as the unemployed question. All our leading statesmen are being badgered and baited, and even bullied by the persistent agitators of socialism, who lie in ambush in times of prosperity and spring forward in adverse junctures, to stimulate popular discontent and to stir the bitterest class prejudices into active manifestation.

THE EARTHLY PURGATORY.

Undoubtedly in every old community the condition of myriads of the people is so pitiable as to be almost hopeless. It seems that civilization always tends to failure just when it has built up some great society to the climax. This is the fact which constitutes the despair of political economy. Is there not a dark mystery in this abject collapse of communities just when they attain the apogee of power, wealth, refinement, and national glory? The fate of nations shows that each community is destined to encounter a whole battalion of crucial difficulties which imperil its very existence, and most of these are new and peculiar problems. Britain's present formidable troubles are intemperance, poverty and feudalism. And every Englishman who has, like myself, spent long years in studying these conditions is aware that these three features of her present day civilization are closely related. For instance, the poverty of the "submerged tenth" is largely the result of the antiquated land tenure which was imposed on the nation by the aristocratic Norman feudal land system. And in like manner, this same poverty of sunken masses in our slums of the big cities is hopelessly aggravated by the colossal drink habit.

THE BAFFLED CHURCHES.

Once more the cry is heard in many quarters that Christianity is a failure, because the churches are proud, selfish, and callous to the sufferings of the poor. England was till a few years ago the richest country on earth. America has now taken the primacy for affluence. But the wealth of so little a country as this is amazing. Yet in this same land, overflowing with resources, there are at this beginning of winter several millions on the verge of want, and hundreds of thousands in danger of starving through want of work to do. The easy and the cheap sneers leveled at Christianity and the churches are only the parrot repetitions of old indictments. What can the churches do? They can not at the furious demand of the extreme Socialists and Communists suddenly root out every old institution that has become an anachronism. The great Church of England, it is true, is itself one of these obsolete anachronisms. It is mighty, rich, and arrogant, with its dogma of apostolic succession and its greed of state patronage and emoluments. Yet one of the bitterest troubles of this Erastian establishment is the oft described poverty of some thousands of its clergy. The Church with all its vast possessions has never discovered how to distribute them equitably, so that it pampers bishops and dignitaries and starves many of the rank and file. How then can it teach the nation any solution of the poverty problem? It is impossible for the 30,000 clergy to help the nation to any wise measures. Is not this a terrible sample of failure?

THE WOEFUL PROCESSIONS.

Great parades of famished unemployed have marched from the East End to Westminster and Hyde Park, so as to force their case on the notice of the prosperous and luxurious. The most pathetic was the procession of thousands of women, the wives of the workless men. Now, the hopeless speech of the Prime Minister to a deputation of these forlorn women sent a chill to the souls of all philanthropists. He had no really kind, hopeful, or sympathetic word to utter. Therefore it is proclaimed that the Parliament of the people can do nothing for the people in dire crisis. So the national mind is just now stupefied and half paralyzed with perplexity. Many rich men and women, led by the Queen, are giving large donations for relief. But the problem seems no nearer to solution. Nor will it be solved without some kind of revolution. And the next revoluttion will shatter some of the most cherished Conservative institutions. The Church will be disestablished. The bishops will be sent away from the House of Lords. Great changes will be wrought in the status of the great landlords. The awful drink monopoly will be smashed. The numerous lazy, thriftless vagabonds who are out of work because they will not work will be placed in labor prisons. The very rich will be subjected to a graduated income tax. The astounding pension list will be reformed. The law of primogeniture, one of the chief of feudal curses, will be abrogated. But many a struggle with the Tory magnates who cling to selfish privileges must be waged, ere such splendid reforms constitute the revolution which alone can bring hope to the oppressed masses.

THE FLOURISHING FREE CHURCHES.

There are some bright spots in the gloom. Many of the free churches are witnessing immense blessing. The Welsh revival is indirectly affecting the whole country. The popular preachers, R. J. Campbell, of the City Temple, Dr. Campbell Morgan, of Westminster Chapel, F. B. Meyer, of Christ Church, Westminster Road, etc., are increasing their hold on the people of the great middle class. Religious influences are fortunately exercising growing power in this vast section of the population. And this class will do what it has done in each period of history. It has saved the country, and it will save it again. Most of the great intellects and of the commanding leaders spring out of the middle class. And the instincts of this section are always right. The American nation was born of it. The fine colonies are mainly owing to it. It made the Reformation. It sustains the standard of righteousness. The working men are not in the mass faithful to the observance of religion. The churches depend on the citizens of the middle grade, who are neither rich nor poor. Those who grow rich ascend in the scale and save the upper class from moral putrefaction. Those who deteriorate sink into the lower ranks and swell the poverty and misery. But the heart of the average middle class citizen is sound and true to the noble traditions of the Anglo-Saxon race. And as long as in Britain and America this backbone of the community is thus sound and strong the race will live, will continue to dominate the world in influence, and will always manage to contend with even such crucial difficulties as those I have alluded to in this article. England is dazed, but only for a time.

A WELL SPREAD TABLE

And the Man "Fell Out" with It.

A manufacturer in Mo. says he started out as a young man with almost perfect health, but that, "by the time I was 24 my digestive apparatus was so completely wrecked as to make my life a positive burden.

"I was neither a hard drinker nor an inveterate user of tobacco—my condition could not be charged up to these things.

"I had simply ruined my digestion by a course of living common among those who indulge in unwisely selected food and deny their appetites nothing. And so years passed, during which every sort of food seemed to do just the opposite of what it should have done, with me. A well spread table was offensive to me. The sight or smell of food, made me deathly sick. In brief I had dyspepsia, in its worst form, and spent many a hard earned dollar for remedies which did me no good whatever.

"This was my condition when a friend insisted that I should try Grape-Nuts food, and to please him I consented, expecting to derive no more benefit or pleasure from it than I had from other prepared foods that I had tried But I was most happily disappointed.

"For more than a year I ate positively nothing but Grape-Nuts—it was my soup course, my meat and my dessert. I never tired of it, and grew steadily fatter and more hearty, till I put 40 pounds of good solid flesh that had never been there before, on my bones. My dyspepsia is gone —the memory of a terrible nightmare.

"I am well now—seems like I can not be ill—and Grape-Nuts is still found on my table, in one form or another, at every meal, and it is never out of supply in my home. A meal without Grape-Nuts is a mighty poor meal for me." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

The year just closed has been an eventful one. It will take its place in history. There have been mighty movements among the nations, wars, sorrows, tumult, and violence, and there have been also unmistakable signs of the advancement of our Lord's kingdom. Our own country has been wonderfully blessed and has taken a more exalted place among the world powers. Had nothing else marked its progress the settlement on our soil of the great conflict between Russia and Japan would have been sufficient glory for one year. The 2,700,000,000 bushels of corn, and 10,000,000 bales of cotton, and 684,000,000 bushels of wheat, and all the rest of the products of the fields and flocks are worthy of grateful remembrance, but there are better and nobler things that 1905 has brought us for which we humbly thank God.

The year opened with the news of the fall of Port Arthur, and we continued to read of the bloody doings in the Orient until May 27, 28, when Togo fought the great battle in the Korean Straits and ended the struggle. Then came the story of the peace conference at Portsmouth, where the President's humanity and strategy brought new fame to America. It was a great achievement which will be written large in the world's chronicles. All through the year poor Russia has been in turmoil. Not only have hundreds of thousands of her people gone down before Japanese bullets as at Port Arthur and on the Shakhe and in the Korean Straits, but on the streets of Odessa and Moscow, and the year closes with an awful story of wrong and bloodshed and woe and ruin. What a contrast between autocratic Russia and free America!

Perhaps the foremost figure in the world's vision during the year has been, not King Edward, nor the Emperor William, nor the Czar Nicholas, but the President of the United States. February 8 the votes were counted by Congress, 336 for Roosevelt and 140 for Parker, and on the fourth of March we had the great quadrennial show on the historic avenue. Then we see the Chief Magistrate on his trip through the west, making speeches and hunting bobcats and grizzlies; then playing the role of peacemaker until the treaty is signed, September 5; making addresses to the strikers, and going down in the "Plunger" for fifty minutes at the time under the sea; visiting the south and stirring the people wonderfully with his references to the blue and the gray, and then welcoming Prince Louis of Battenburg in most royal fashion; initiating the great work of the Panama Canal which is to divide the land and unite the world, and advising the athletic associations in respect to the barbaric diversion known as football; dealing with the scandals in the Agricultural and Post Office Departments, and flooding the Fifty-ninth Congress with a Niagara of 26,000 words so masterly managed as to touch every interest under heaven save the temperance and the Mormon questions. Altogether the most remarkable man that figures in 1905 is Theodore Roosevelt.

The year has seen many leaders drop out of the procession. Not only have scores of thousands gone down on the battle field, but death has been busy in the ways of peace. Such names occur to us of men beyond the sea as Jules Verne, the writer; and Sir George Williams, the founder of the Y. M. C. A.; and Sir Henry Irving, the actor; and Maximo Gomez, the Cuban patriot; and Thomas John Barnardo, the philanthropist; and Alphonse Rothschild, the king of finance. Hezekiah Butterworth and Mary Mapes Dodge, the writers; John Hay, statesman, diplomat, and man of letters; Mary A. Livermore and Albion W. Tourgee, Fitzhugh Lee, Joseph Jefferson and Theodore Thomas, Mrs. Jane Stanford and Jerry Simpson, Senators Hoar, Platt, Bate, and Quay are some who have joined the great majority.

Death is no respecter of persons. No sex is spared, no age exempt, no rank or wealth forgotten by this visitor. Majestic roads which monarchs pass over, ways which men of letters tread, routes of sages and of warriors, short and simple paths of the poor, all lead to the same house appointed for all living. One short sentence closes every biography—"And he died." And now the old year itself has come to his end.

"Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

"Ring out the old, ring in the new;
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true."

And this will be a death we shall delight in if the bells that ushered in the new year shall indeed—

"Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

"Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land;
Ring in the Christ that is to be."

There are other things that mark 1905. We brought home the body of John Paul Jones with much pomp and circumstance, and some doubting Thomases are still asking, "Is it the body of John Paul Jones?" We had our Mrs. Chadwick and gave her ten years in prison for meditation; and our Frank Biglow, who, for stealing a million and a half, got the same period of seclusion; and our man Machen, who, convicted of graft, is now cared for at government expense; all of which going to show that justice still holds a level and impartial balance and is blindfolded. We had our November elections and the Waterloo of the bosses. We had all the Senators and members of a sovereign state convicted of wrongdoing and sentenced to the punishment of ordinary criminals against the law. Oregon mourns, but Congress is cleaner, and will, no doubt, be more decent forever after for the lesson. We had the failure of our subway saloon—God be praised!—an everlasting testimony to all bishops and deacons and ordinary saints that whiskey and religion do not go together. We have had many evidences that the people are sovereign and that the reign of democracy is the divine order. We had our yellow fever scare, and the blowing up of the Bennington, and our troubles in the Naval Academy, and the mighty inflow of foreigners, as many as 97,000 in a single month, but providence has wonderfully guided and blessed this nation during the year that has closed. We have had our discussions of "tainted money," but two of our lucre kings gave ten millions each to education the past year. We had our Inter-Church Conference on Federation; and we have Miss Alice engaged to Mr. Longworth, and a wedding at the White House soon; what more do we want?

Now what has 1906 in store for us? The obligations to meet its issues squarely and bravely are greater than we have known at the beginning of any year in our history. To the nation, to the church, to the individual, let the word be: "Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward."

MALARIA ? ? ?

Generally That Is not the Trouble.

Persons with a susceptibility to malarial influences should beware of coffee, which has a tendency to load up the liver with bile.

A lady writes from Denver that she suffered for years from chills and fever which at last she learned were mainly produced by the coffee she drank.

"I was also grievously afflicted with headaches and indigestion," she says, "which I became satisfied were likewise largely due to the coffee I drank. Six months ago I quit its use altogether and began to drink Postum Food Coffee, with the gratifying result that my headaches have disappeared, my digestion has been restored and I have not had a recurrence of chills and fever for more than three months. I have no doubt that it was Postum that brought me this relief, for I have used no medicine while this improvement has been going on." (It was really relief from congestion of the liver caused by coffee.)

"My daughter has been as great a coffee drinker as I, and for years was afflicted with terrible sick headaches, which often lasted for a week at a time. She is a brain worker and excessive application together with the headaches began to affect her memory most seriously. She found no help in medicines and the doctor frankly advised her to quit coffee and use Postum.

"For more than four months she has not had a headache—her mental faculties have grown more active and vigorous and her memory has been restored.

"No more tea, coffee or drugs for us, so long as we can get Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A Visit to the Texas Christian Lectureship

I was delighted with my first visit to Texas, except with the weather. Texas hospitality has been all that I expected; the weather has been a surprise to me. Expecting to find magnolias blooming under skies of an Italian blue, I have been taken back to the old days in London where, huddled over a grate, we would roast our faces and hands while our backs nearly froze. Even in the city of the Alamo, whither I fled after the Lectureship to try and get rid of a heavy cold, overcoats were needed and the women were wearing furs. There was sunshine, but not much warmth. But they tell me it is not always like this week in Texas. And, of course, the whole trouble is, in the end, the fact that there is a north and "northers"; this disagreeable spell is just the tail end of a Montana blizzard, I suppose.

Denton, where the Lectureship met, is a progressive little city, with special educational advantages. It is the seat of the State Normal and of the State Industrial School for Girls. But, unfortunately, the town is representative of the division in our own ranks as Christians of the New Testament pattern. For it is one of the strongholds of what are known in the north as the "anti"-brethren, who here call themselves "sound brethren," or "firmies." Here they have one of their strongest schools and best churches. Indeed, the most notable feature of this Lectureship was the coming together of us "digressives" with these "loyal" brethren in one of the sessions. But of this later. The Central Christian Church is an admirable structure and the congregation has in Bro. S. K. Hallam a man of fine quality for their leader.

I was impressed at the outset by the character of the papers read. The very first presented was so keenly accurate in its analysis of the musical situation in our brotherhood and so suggestive in its treatment that I secured it at once for publication in full in The Christian-Evangelist. It was by Miss Harriet F. Smith, and its theme was "The Religious Value of Church Music."

There was less discussion than I expected. For the most part the program was carried out, but some of the papers exceeded the time-limit, and, as the auditors were indulgent, there was little time for a general expression of views. But there was perfect freedom of expression when there was opportunity. It is rather noteworthy that five University of Chicago men could be on the program and others in attendance of such different training without some heated argument arising. It speaks well for the common sense of the Texas preachers that they are not raising false issues or scared at what some might call heresies. The chief lecturer on this occasion, who some time ago was the target of much criticism, especially by one paper, not only evinced no "heresy marks," but his contribution to the constructive history of the Campbellian movement was recognized by all as a very valuable one and such men as Chalmers McPherson, M. M. Davis and W. K. Homan expressed their cordial apciation of Dean Van Kirk's lectures. Indeed, Brother Van Kirk was emphatic in his utterances on the question of his firm belief in the divinity of Christ, and showed himself so much in accord with the spirit and purpose of Mr. Campbell's movement that one of the preachers felt constrained to publicly express the sentiment of many others that it would be wise for editors and speakers to be sure of their facts before they put the brand of "heretic" or "untrue to the faith" upon any man. As these lectures are the substance of a book to be published ere long I give here just an outline of those delivered.

Dean Van Kirk's lectures consisted of a historical survey of the rise of the churches of Christ and he treated his subject as a reformation rather than a restoration, intending to show that the principles and doctrines now held by us arose in contrast to the religious conditions at the beginning of the nineteenth century.

His first lecture was on the Covenant Theology of Alexander Campbell. In this the lecturer showed that there arose in the Netherlands in the middle of the seventeenth century a movement to counteract the severities of Calvinism; that this movement had its counterpart in political philosophy under the term, "The Social Contract Theory"; that these conceptions determined the ideas of the founders of the American republic; that Mr. Campbell took up this conception in his preaching, explaining the whole Bible in the terms of a series of Covenants and thereby finding ready response in the popular American mind, but bitter hostility from sticklers for the old Calvinism. Dean Van Kirk showed how from this conflict several of the doctrines of the Christian churches arose.

In his study of the philosophy of John Locke and Alexander Campbell, Dean Van Kirk showed how Locke began modern psychology by his conception of the mind as a blank tablet and that all knowledge comes to it through the senses. This philosophy of human mind became dominant in all colleges of England and America. It was received by Mr. Campbell and used by him in opposition to all forms of false subjectivism, especially in his definition of faith, the doctrine of revelation and the work of the Holy Spirit. In this way Mr. Campbell was able to make his statement of the Gospel acceptable to the popular mind of his time and escape the vagueness of theological terms used by the popular preachers.

In his lecture presenting the principles of the current reformation, or the movement represented by the Christian churches, Dean Van Kirk held these to be threefold: First, the conversion of the world; second, the union of all churches; third, the restoration of primitive Christianity. These constitute the plea of the Disciples of Christ and stand in the threefold relation, so that the first is the final end and aim, the second the means to the first and the third principle, the method of union. On these principles the history of our people could be written and important conclusions were drawn with reference to their mission and work for the future.

In discussing the rise of the current reformation the lecturer showed the origin of the principles and the leading tenets of the Disciples of Christ as they came to be formed at the beginning of the nineteenth century. His thesis was that this people came from many independent churches, which originated independently of each other, but which took the Bible and the Bible only as their ground of faith and practice and upon these principles gradually approached to each other so that finally they became acquainted and united into one compact body. He found thus four main independent branches of the present Christian Church, the first one of which is the English brethren; these originated in the latter part of the eighteenth and the first two decades of the nineteenth centuries before the Campbells began their work in America and had set their principles and doctrines independent of any influence from the latter source. They were later found to be in practical accord with the American movement and united heartily with it.

The second branch originated around the church in New York City, in 1810. They were called "Disciples" and attained their faith and order prior to and independent of any influence from the Campbells. From this branch came Walter Scott, and Isaac Errett, who came to be pillars among the Disciples of Christ.

The central and most important branch of the movement originated with Thomas and Alexander Campbell, of Bethany, Va. These leaders came from Scotland, but attained their views, practically, in America. They originated a series of churches known as the Reformers; they worked with the Baptists, and finding themselves out of harmony with this body withdrew in 1830 and from that time became independent.

The fourth branch originated with Barton W. Stone, of Kentucky, in 1801. They were the outgrowing of a great revival movement in pioneer days. They took the Bible as their only guide and under the leadership of the same they were found to approach the ideas of the Reformers, with whom they formally united in 1832-35

Thus there originated in the several different sections of the country great independent movements which later recognized their common ground and united in fellowship and co-operation.

Such is the general skeleton of Dean Van Kirk's lectures, but in the progress of delivery he showed how each particular doctrine and principle came to be stated, what situation it was intended to meet and he summed up with a general statement of the contribution of the Disciples of Christ to American church life.

The subjects discussed by others on the program may be classed broadly as those dealing with practical church life and education and those raising the question as to where the Disciples of Christ stand in relation to modern life and thought. In a paper on "The Dignity of the Christian Ministry," J. T. Ogle, of Paris, contended that the modern minister must be strong in body as well as intellect, he must have moral and spiritual power, be a man of faith, of prayer, and of love. A dignified ministry without a dignified message would be impossible. A statement that Christ has "commissioned no one to travel over the country and apologize for the Gospel" led to a discussion as to whether a preacher should, under all circumstances, keep silent in the pulpit when his own mind was not satisfied, but the issue was hardly conclusive.

Another paper of a practical nature was that on "The Enrichment of Worship," by C. M. Schoonover, of Gainesville. There were excellent points presented. The preacher and the sermon often get more attention, said the author, than God Almighty, and the benediction is but an excuse to disperse. Along the line of enrichment Brother Schoonover urged that all externality should be as simple as possible. What can not be subordinated to the spiritual must be left out. A responsive service was heartily approved and a need of variety, both in form and matter, was advocated. There should be an adaptation to the needs of the people, and respect for a decent and orderly way of conducting worship. There should be preparation for prayer, and one of the things insisted on was a janitor who will clean.

"Education in Religion" was the subject of a thoughtful paper by Prof. Bruce McCully, of Texas Christian University. It may be summarized as follows: The true end and object of education is not knowledge; the very meaning of the term asserts that it is rather the development of the natural powers. It is not culture for culture's sake, as such an ideal would give no real, adequate motive for the educator's effort. Nor is it culture for the sake of power or effectiveness, since such a theory would place achievement higher than character and life. It is rather a matter of adjustment to environment in order that the individual may live to the full the life that God has given him. This will mean that all the powers of the human shall be brought to perfection through their exercise in the activities of the social whole. It will mean that his religious nature shall come into complete correspondence and fellowship with God. As a basis from which to proceed to realizing such an educational ideal we have as inheritance from the past spiritual conceptions, mental conditions and material agencies. With these as an equipment we must undertake to quicken in the race, as we can, a more complete social activity. It rests upon us to supplement the more or less ineffective efforts of existing institutions to the end that man may be saved unto a higher life.

Some account of the rest of the program I must defer, for lack of space this week. I will just say that since leaving the Lectureship I have learned that Dr. Fleming, a representative of the "firmies" in the discussion, has been given his "walking papers" for an expression of his Christian attitude to the men who may differ from him on the subject of giving to missionary societies. After his speech at the Lectureship the regents of the "loyal brethren's" college, of the faculty of which he is a member, asked him to hand in his resignation. P. M.

Why to the Life Journalistic?

BY GEORGE L. SNIVELY.

If there be among us a coign of vantage more tempting to the Christian worker than the secretaryship of the National Benevolent Association, it must be where he can feel himself a direct factor not only in achieving more than that, but also for all our missionary and educational interests as well; where he can not only lend a helping hand to these more public and spectacular processes of this Restoration, but also engage in the humbler, perhaps, but still more fascinating employ lying back of all these of helping our ministers build up those congregational units whose aggregated resources and statistics make so splendid the progress of these national interests on their way from conquering to conquest; where he can have part in the still more fundamental work of bringing into the family and individual lives of the brotherhood such instruction, edification, inspirational and other helps as will build them up in our most holy faith and make of them Christ men and women, and their dwellings beautiful types of the heavenly home beyond.

The opportunities Christian journalism offers for participation in this manifold ministry constitute an irresistible appeal to me, and tearfully severing ties binding me to tasks grown dear almost as life itself I have entered into it with all I have and am and hope to be as a servant of the King.

As minister for years in one of our largest churches and as visitor to most others in all parts of the land, I have become greatly impressed with the tremendous power for good inherent in our religious papers. As a pastor I never knew a home that was a fortress of strength to the church or an inspiration to the minister or a commendation of Christianity to the world where they were not found. I can not recall one whose members were prayer meeting attendants, or teachers in the Bible school, or within which children are being reared for the ministry or mission fields amidst the aroma of piety and the brightness of holiness where they are not read. Of all the many gifts I have borne to the treasurer of our Benevolent Association, I believe every one has come from a reader of the Bible and its best commentaries—our papers.

The restoration of primitive Christianity is being accomplished by men and women who receive information, instruction and enthusiasm from our journals, and yet not one-tenth of our membership is reading them. How would the consummation of the hopes of our fathers in the faith be hastened if the other nine-tenths were also students of our religious literature!

I have often thought of the tremendous impetus that would be given to every article of "our plea" if one hundred thousand Christian-Evangelists were every week received as welcome guests into as many of our homes. How prayer meeting rooms would expand; evening audiences be augmented; church debts fade away; better church homes be reared; elasticity be imparted to the minister's steps, heartening to his courage and eloquence to his tongue; our benevolent, missionary, and educational funds be multiplied; our people be unified in love and therefore in strength and action, and consequently multitudes daily be added unto the number of those being saved; all that we are now hoping to celebrate at the Pittsburg anniversary appear to us, in the light of what will be accomplished by 1909, to have been evidence of present day lack of faith because we expect so little; and millennial dawn be hastened!

For these reasons I am devoting myself to the mission of helping place The Christian-Evangelist in one hundred thousand homes, and seeking the co-operation of all my ministerial brethren and other Disciples who believe that this journal, with its high literary excellence, and more particularly with its irenic spirit, evangelistic zeal, harmony with the aspirations of the fathers of this nineteenth century reformation, and unswerving loyalty to the truth as it is in Jesus, will be a helpful visitor there.

Since some have expressed the fear, I will say, "I am not going into retirement so early." My life's work is before me, and I am entering it with keen anticipation of the joy of service and triumph. God bless my dear friends who have helped me in the past and brought to splendid success other enterprises with which I have been identified. Never have I relied on them more than now, and never could I hold out to them the incentive of sharing in more splendid victories of peace than we may now win together.

The times are propitious for attempting this task never yet achieved by a church paper. There is an almost universal feeling among our thoughtful brethren that The Christian-Evangelist is not only the best exponent of the genius of this Restoration, but is the natural leader in the forward movement now pending for the realization of the practical unity of all the American religious bodies and for the attainment of the higher spiritual life by all these flocks becoming one. We ask that our friends not only cherish the sentiments of The Christian-Evangelist's unique position at this juncture of our history, but that they tell it abroad and in all permissible ways help us secure for it a welcome to 100,000 homes. Our preachers will find it their best assistant; our district, state and national secretaries the best fertilizer of hearts and purses, and all who love and are longing for the coming of the Kingdom in its fullness will find it prophetic of their souls' fondest desires.

Scores of letters have already come bearing promises of active help and rich with other encouragement. The writers of these and all others co-operating with us in this emprise fraught with such sacred significance to the cause of Christ will live forever in my grateful memory, and I believe their names will shine brighter on the Lamb's book of life.

—Evangelist James Sharratt has applications from twenty good men needing fields of labor either as pastors or evangelists and desires to hear from churches needing such. Communications should be sent to him at 2305 W. Prospect Place, Kansas City, Mo., whence he has recently removed from Lee's Summit. Brother Sharratt has held some successful meetings.

—There is a "Colonel" W. T. Moore and he has just removed to Columbia, Mo., which has for some years past been the home of Dr. W. T. Moore. Both men have been editors, so we suppose to prevent their mail getting mixed we shall have to pursue the Kentucky practice and not leave off the title of at least one of them.

—"The Christian Union," Des Moines, Ia., reports that the University Place Church of Christ has the largest Sunday school in the state of Iowa, numbering 956 members. A Methodist Sunday school at Washington, in the same state, is a close second with 954. There should be a general effort throughout the brotherhood to greatly increase the attendance at the Bible school during the coming year.

—We regret that W. E. Bobbitt will close his service at Payette, Idaho, the first of the year and return to Kansas City, Kan. He has had large audiences during his two years' stay in this northwestern field and the membership has been increased by more than two hundred. Other departments of the work show equal advance. Men who can do this kind of work are needed in such fields as Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, etc. Any one wishing to correspond with Brother Bobbitt can do so by addressing him at Kansas City, Kansas.

—J. W. Lanham, Madison, Ind., writes: "In a few days I will be seventy-four years old and have been preaching fifty-two years. I claim a fair knowledge of the periodical literature of the current Reformation, and no paper published by our people has suited me so well as The Christian-Evangelist. I am glad that you propose to reply to the 'Christian Standard's' recent editorial on 'Church Federation.'"

—J. S. Hughes urges upon all the preachers and pastors that they appoint the second Sunday in January to preach the morning sermon on "Christ in his Revelation to John in Exile." He mentions as helpful books for such a study, "Revelation Rediscovered," by Professor John C. C. Clark, and "The Apocalyptic Writers," by Frank C. Porter, of Yale. We take the liberty of adding Brother Hughes' own work on the subject.

—In the year 1819, John Wright, a Baptist minister, led his brethren to call themselves "The Church of Christ at Blue River." This was the first move in Indiana toward the "Restoration." Lately the congregation has been under very conservative influences and has not prospered. T. J. Legg is there in the midst of a meeting, and is having remarkable success. The Blue River Church is near Salem in Washington county.

—R. A. Mallory, of Charleston, Okla., has, with the aid of four earnest and energetic sisters, organized a small congregation of twenty members which meets every Lord's day for worship. The country is very new, many of the settlers having been there only two years, and there are great difficulties to overcome but Brother Mallory is hopeful, with the co-operation of the earnest members that are there, of building up a strong church.

—The present membership of the Central Christian Church, Pueblo, Col., is 468. This was the report presented by the pastor, J. H. Mohorter, at the annual meeting recently held after a delightful banquet. One year ago the membership was 440. Forty-eight have been added and twenty lost during the year. The funds raised from all sources were $3,252.80. A special meeting under the direction of home forces will be begun January 7. Brother Daniel Ward writes that Brother Mohorter's influence is being felt throughout the state.

—J. B. Hunley, Canon City, Col., says the work there is in a thriving condition He went there in October and held a meeting in which there were 30 added to the membership, 12 of them by baptism. The work was established there in 1888 but has been hindered for lack of a modern house of worship. The town is becoming more and more a health resort and a better building is demanded. Plans are already in progress to erect a better house in the spring, funds for which are already partly raised. It is desired to erect a $10,000 building.

—We regret to learn from Bro. D. M. Breaker that Bro. E. H. Rayner, who has served the church at Kissimmee, Fla., has been compelled to resign on account of the condition of his wife's health and he has gone to her in Massachusetts. Brother Breaker says that Brother Rayner has proved himself to be an earnest and efficient worker and that much of the success at Kissimmee is due to his zeal and self-sacrificing devotion. Just before leaving Brother Rayner baptized two more converts, making twelve additions as a result of the recent meeting conducted by B. Q. Denham.

—We have already announced the opening of the new building of the School of the Evangelists at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

Indeed, as President Johnson explains, there are three buildings under one roof but divided by a dead wall. These buildings are being fitted up with steam heat and electric lights, and will be furnished with up-to-date material. He writes: "On a slab of beautiful Tennessee marble placed near the front door of the main building, we have chiseled these words: 'Open day and night to the poor young man who desires above every other desire to preach the Gospel of Christ.'" The school opens January 2. For further particulars address Ashley S. Johnson, Kimberlin Heights, Tennessee.

—South Hawkins, Pryor Creek, I. T., writes: "A good Methodist friend informs me that you print and sell a creed for the 'Campbellites.' I am sorry to hear that you have been doing this. If you will stop right away I will not tell any of the brethren." We are publishing so many books for the people erstwhile nicknamed "Campbellites" (but not now, except in out-of-the-way places), and all of them having the same authority—that is, the intellectual and moral authority of the Book itself—that we can not know which one is called the "creed." They are all of them good reading, however, for our brethren of the Methodist persuasion, as well as others, and we hope the brother quoted above will send for some of them.

—It is a laudable effort, no doubt, to increase the number of our colored ministers, but Bro. W. S. Lowe objects to the method which has been adopted by the printer in the latest number of the year book, which is just at hand; namely, by transferring seventeen of the white preachers of Kansas to the colored list! Brother Lowe writes as follows: "When we sent in the list of Kansas preachers, we stated, explicitly, that we wished to have the proof sent us for correction, but for some reason this was not done. I want to say to all these brethren who are denominated colored in the year book, that I will, to-day, send to Mr. MacLeod, chairman of the Western Passenger Association, a statement to the effect that this is a mistake, so you will have no trouble in getting your clergy certificates."

—The Martin family will conclude their work in Illinois and begin, January 7, a campaign with W. A. Ward at Henderson, Ky. As a result of their meetings during the past eighteen months there have been some 1,200 additions to the churches in eighteen cities where they have labored.

—The work in Kansas City, Mo., is going forward. The Jackson Avenue Church has raised $2,000, and when the pledges are paid will be free of debt. Brother Bowen says that they need more room and must have it. W. F. Richardson gave the address at the laying of the corner stone of the new Mt. Washington chapel. Brothers Marshall, of Independence, and Cupp and Morgan, of Kansas City, assisted. The dedication will take place some time in January. New fields will be entered this year and some of the missions will become self-supporting.

—A subscriber who feels constrained to discontinue The Christian-Evangelist feels that he ought to give a reason for doing so, and this is the chief reason that he gives: "The Christian-Evangelist has made friends among the enemy." Of course our friend means by "the enemy," our denominational religious neighbors who "follow not with us," but who seem to be succeeding, fairly well, in casting out demons. If it be a sin to have made friends among the godly men and women in the various denominations who love Christ and are seeking to do his will, we suppose The Christian-Evangelist must plead guilty. The truth is we would like to have all the friends of Jesus Christ to be our friends however much they may be mistaken about some of his requirements. If this be heresy, our friends must make the most of it.

—A. F. Reiter, writing from Baltimore, Md., gives the following cheering news concerning the unifying work going on there: "Our Baptist preaching brethren met with us in our ministers' meeting last Monday morning. Brother Weaver, pastor of the Brantly Baptist Church of this city, read the paper. It was both scholarly and orthodox as we all judged. In it was set forth the position of the Gospel in conversion, also that of baptism, and the work of the Spirit in conversion. Strange to say, we found ourselves perfectly agreed upon these points and our Baptist brethren even expressed a desire to discard their name for ours. In short we resolved ourselves into a mutual admiration society for a time, after which a committee of six, three from each body, was appointed to agree upon terms of permanent union of our churches in this city. Now watch us court!"

—The committee on Reform Legislation, of which F. D. Power, of Washington, is chairman, urges the people throughout the country to express their sentiments freely to their congressmen and senators, by petition, letter, or telegram, in behalf of three important measures now pending before Congress. One is the new statehood bill to include Oklahoma and Indian Territory, with the prohibition feature protecting inexperienced Indians forming part of that state; the second is the Hepburn-Dolliver bill to protect state liquor laws against nullification by outside liquor dealers under the protection of interstate commerce; third, the Sperry bill to forbid the sale of intoxicants in all buildings, ships, and parks owned and used by the United States government. Good citizens generally will need no arguments to persuade them that these measures ought to be passed by Congress, but they ought to bring their wishes to bear on their representatives.

—"The Messenger" is the title of a local paper published at Lenox, Iowa, by the churches of that city, the ministers of the various churches being the editors. The churches represented are the Presbyterian, the United Presbyterian, the Church of Christ, and the Methodist Episcopal. Each one of these churches has a page of the paper and there are some pages devoted to matter in common. These brethren seem to dwell together in unity, and to find this an economic as well as a fraternal way of publishing their local news. Sure enough. Why not? Why should not this be done in a thousand little towns, where there are four, five or a half dozen churches, which can unite and publish one paper that would be vastly more interesting and valuable than the four or five separate papers published by each particular church? This, too, is one of the signs of the times. The union spirit is growing, and scattering like a prairie fire, and those who get in the way of it and try to extinguish it, are likely to be scorched!

—The executive committee of the Inter-Church Conference on Federation at its last meeting passed a resolution highly complimentary to the character and work of Rev. Elias B. Sanford, D. D., who for more than thirty years has been connected with movements designed to bring about a closer relation between the different bodies of Christians. "In 1899 he took the initial steps in organizing the National Federation of Churches and Christian Workers, and found a small but devoted company ready to assist him." The resolutions state that "The Inter-Church Conference on Federation held in New York City, November, 1905 * * * * is largely due, in its inception, in its development and in its splendid success, to the unceasing labors of Dr. Sanford who has served from the first as secretary of the executive committee and is now also, on the motion of the permanent chairman, the corresponding secretary of that body." The resolutions further state that:

"Dr. Sanford modestly hides himself behind his 'royal comrades' as he is pleased to term his co-laborers. If that term be justified it is another tribute to his far-sightedness and unerring sagacity, for he suggested the names of nearly all the men who were selected to serve on the committees. This he was able to do through his knowledge of the men interested in federation and their qualification to fill the special places which they filled as presiding officers, speakers or members of committees."

The executive committee does well to place on record its testimony to "his unflagging zeal, his unwavering consecration, his unfailing sweetness of temper, sometimes under trying conditions, and his supreme sense of fairness which have endeared him to us all." This is a most deserved tribute to one who has been called of God to a leading place in this movement for the closer unification of the forces of Christendom, and all who know Dr. Sanford will heartily endorse the action of the committee.

To the Brethren in Arkansas.

I have been unanimously called to serve the church at Jonesboro, Ark., as its regular minister, beginning the first Lord's day in January, 1906. I want to say to the good brethren, I am now to be one of you, and with you, with hand and heart, in every good word and work. I stand thoroughly committed to all our organized mission work and every enterprise of the brotherhood. Therefore, command me and I will endeavor to obey to the fullest extent of my ability. Your fellow worker,

James C. Creel.

An Effective Institute.

Five days were spent with the Canton church and school, and with the college, beginning December 10. President Johann sidetracked everything for the first hour three successive mornings, and a course was given to students and faculty on "What a Sunday School Teacher Ought to Know." On Sunday the whole church, public and Sunday school were addressed to arouse greater interest in the work. Each afternoon the teachers were drilled in knowledge and methods. Each evening teachers, students and public attended a course on the early history of our religious movement. A teachers' training class was organized with Dr. Buxton as leader. Professor Sears and several of the students will start teacher training work in the churches to which they preach. The college has a student body of fine young men and women and is doing excellent work. It was an inspiration to work among them.

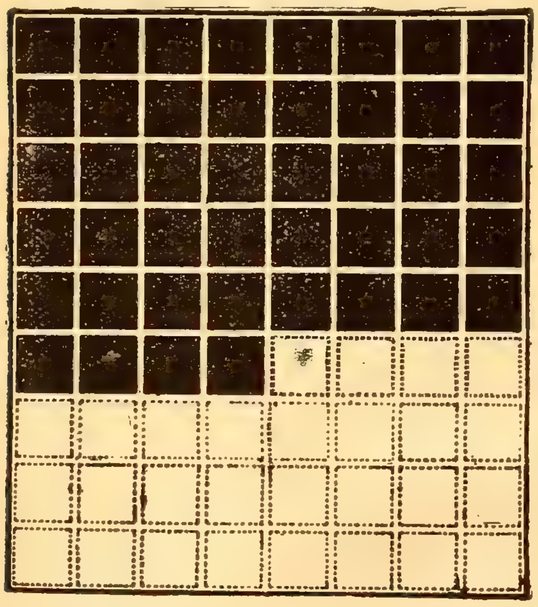
The Contributing and Non-Contributing Churches Diagramed.

Each square in the diagram below represents 100 churches. We have in round numbers 7,200 churches, therefore, seventy-two squares. There are twenty-eight white squares. That is, about 2,800 churches gave to foreign missions last year. There are forty-four black squares. That is 4,400 churches did not give.

Please study this diagram carefully. It is a lamentable fact strikingly illustrated. It ought to bring us to our knees.



We ought to wipe out every black square from the diagram before 1909, the centennial of "The Declaration and Address" by Thomas Campbell. That document delivered in 1809 was the inspiration of the beginning of our movement. It was a missionary movement! Thomas Campbell pleaded for the union of the children of God to the end that the world might be evangelized. The existence of a church echoing the sound principle, "Where the Scriptures speak we speak, where they are silent we are silent," without any fellowship in sounding the Gospel is certainly a travesty on the position taken by the Campbells in 1809. The Scriptures speak no more clearly nor more frequently upon any one subject than upon the duty and obligation of Christians to sound out the word of life. Indeed, the Bible is a missionary book from lid to lid. Alexander Campbell said: "The missionary enterprise is by universal conception as well as by the oracles of God the grand work of the age, the grand duty, privilege and honor of the church of the nineteenth century." And a greater than Mr. Campbell said, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

It is time for the churches to be looking toward the March offering for foreign missions, the first Sunday in March. We hope to make a great advance this year in the number of contributing churches. Every preacher and church officer and other friends are invited to join us in a mighty centennial crusade to enlist more churches in the offering this year than was ever known before. If we do not make a distinct advance the first Sunday in March, the hopes for the centennial will not be encouraging. What we do this year clearly forecasts what may be expected of the "Four Years' Campaign." A great forward step in the March offering is a sure prophecy of what may be expected of us by the Pittsburg centennial.

It is time to order March offering supplies. Drop us a card at once stating the number in your church, and full supplies will be furnished, free of charge.

The Hot Springs Church.

We drive the shadow from two squares this week—only 28 remaining. But we have been too long; we ought to knock the black out of a square each week. It will take a long time at this rate to whiten the block. We can do better than this. You send your offering this week. Let everybody rally at once and do the work quickly. There is but one way and that is for you to send yours today. Read what Brother Smith says, then send at once:

Cincinnati, O., Dec. 2, 1905.

Dear Brother: T. N. Kincaid, minister of the church at Hot Springs, Ark., has labored there under great difficulties and discouragement for several years, trying to plant firmly and well the cause in that great mission field.

Thousands of people go to Hot Springs sick in body and sick in soul; while the body is weak they are more than usually open to the appeal of the Great Physician. Hot Springs is one of the great mission fields of the world. Our brethren have a small house located about a mile away from the center of the town, totally inadequate

EASTER GLORY!

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, MEXICO, MO.

The building is of the classic architecture with dome. The foundation of Louisiana, Mo., stone is laid on concrete and the brick is of Roman style, granite color. The windows are opalescent glass, there being four special art windows, representing "Hoffman's Christ," "The Guardian Angel," "The Good Shepherd" and "Christ Blessing the Children." The building fronts south and west, with two porches of granite columns and marble floors. There are three vestibule entrances, also of marble floors. The main auditorium seats 525, the Sunday school room, just to right of pulpit, 300. The pipe organ, which cost $2,500, is in a recess to the left of the pulpit. The Sunday schoo section is in three stories. The upper has dining room, kitchen, pantry, china closet, dining room annex, parlor, cloak room, lavatory and committee room. The main floor has pastor's study, primary room, two extra class rooms, besides robing rooms, toilet rooms, communion closet, with main Sunday school room and church auditorium. The basement has boiler, coal and sexton's rooms, and a large space yet to be used for Y. M. C. A. purposes. The total cost of the building was about $32,000, with lot costing $3,000. The location is one block north and one-half block west of the old church.

COFFEE WAR

The Coffee Importers and Roasters Are Attacking

POSTUM FOOD COFFEE

All Along the Line.

"THERE'S A REASON."

Many people have found out the truth about old fashioned coffee.

They have overcome disease caused by it.

The plan was easy and sure.

Quit Coffee and use Postum.

Proof with one's self is stronger than any theory.

The Postum army grows by hundreds of thousands yearly.

The old fashioned Coffee Magnates are now deriding Postum through the papers.

Because their pocketbooks are hurt, they would drive the people back to the old coffee slavery.

One coffee prevaricator says: "It (Postum) has lately been exposed and found to contain an excess of very ordinary coffee."

Another that "it (Postum) is made from a small amount of parched peas, beans, wheat, dried sweet potatoes, and paste of wheat middlings."

Here's to you, oh faithful followers of the tribe of Ananias.

$100,000.00 CASH will be deposited with any reputable trust company (or a less amount if desired) against a like amount by any coffee roaster or dealer. If the charges prove true we lose, if not we take the money as partial liquidation for the infamous insult to our business.

The Postum Pure Food factories are the largest in the world, the business having been built upon absolutely pure food products, made on scientific lines, "for a reason" and the plain unvarnished truth told every day and all the time. These factories are visited by thousands of people every month. They are shown into every cranny and examine every ingredient and process. Each visitor sees Postum made of different parts of the wheat berry treated by different mechanical methods and one part blended with a small part of pure New Orleans molasses. So he knows Postum contains not one thing in the world but Wheat and New Orleans molasses. It took more than a year of experimenting to perfect the processes and learn how to develop the diastase and properly treat the other elements in the wheat to produce the coffee-like flavor that makes suspicious people "wonder." But there never has been one grain of old fashioned or drug coffee in Postum and never will be.

Another thing, we have on file in our general offices the original of every testimonial letter we have ever published. We submit that our attitude regarding coffee is now and always has been absolutely fair. If one wants a stimulant and can digest coffee and it does not set up any sort of physical ailment, drink it.

But, if coffee overtaxes and weakens the heart, (and it does with some).

Or if it sets up disease of the stomach and bowels, (and it does with some).

Or if it causes weak eyes, (and it does with some).

Or if it causes nervous prostration, (and it does with many).

Then good, plain, old fashioned common sense might (without asking permission of coffee merchants) suggest to quit putting caffeine (the drug of coffee) into a highly organized human body, for health is really wealth and the happiest sort of wealth.

Then if one's own best interest urges him to study into the reason and "There's a reason," he will unearth great big facts that all of the sophistries of the coffee importers and roasters cannot refute. Take time to read the following from the famous Dr. B. F. Underwood in The American Physician:

Coffee as a Factor in the Production of Gastric and Cardiac Disorders.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD, M. D.

The pathogenetic properties of coffee have received but scant attention from medical authors, although, it is not doubtful, I think, that, more than any other single substance, coffee is responsible for the great prevalence of nervous, gastric, and cardiac diseases at the present time, and that the great increase in sudden deaths from heart affection in recent years may be justly set down to the use or abuse of coffee as a beverage.

Shoemaker, in his "Materia Medica," treating upon coffee, says: "Used in excess it disorders digestion and causes functional disturbance of the nervous system, shown by headache, vertigo, mental confusion and palpitation of the heart. It increases secretion, blunts sensation, exalts reflex excitability, increases mental activity, and may produce insomnia and great nervous restlessness," and this is as much as any medical author has to say upon the subject.

In my case it may be merely the zeal of the recent convert which inspires me, but I feel strongly from both my personal and professional experience that there is so much more that could and should be said about the deleterious effects of coffee and its potency as a factor in the production of disease. This has been so strongly impressed upon me the past winter that I am impelled to make a contribution to the subject, by reporting a few cases in which coffee was so manifestly causing or continuing the disease that it could not be ignored.

Case I. In the latter part of December, 1903, I had under treatment, an old lady, 74 years, who was convalescing from an attack of pneumonia. She had responded favorably to the treatment and was doing nicely except for a peculiar rise and fall of the temperature and an irregular action of the heart. She had been troubled more or less with weakness of the heart and at this time its action was giving me a good deal of concern, its beat being irregular and feeble, and at times much more so than others. A study of conditions and causes threw no light on the case until I found that the irregularity was more marked on the mornings when she had coffee, which she did not have every morning. As I could not discover any other cause I advised that she should not take the coffee. After some demur on the part of the patient she acceded and Postum Cereal was substituted for the coffee. A favorable effect was almost immediately apparent; the irregular action gave place to a steady, regular beat, the pulse became fuller and stronger, the temperature became normal and the case went on to uninterrupted recovery.

Case II. The result in case one set me thinking. For some years I had been troubled with nervous dyspepsia, with cardiac irritability, and at times, great irregularity in the action of the heart, intermittent beat of the pulse and much nervous depression, all of which, in spite of treatment was steadily getting worse. I had had light enough thrown on the cause, if I had not been so blinded by prejudice that I could not see. As, for instance, on one occasion, when the cook, who did not believe that coffee was any good unless it rivaled in color her ebony face, gave me a cup of coffee one morning that was fully up to her ideal, and which, although I noticed that it possessed nearly the strength of Samson, I drank without consideration.

I had been feeling rather better than usual for a day or two, but soon after breakfast I was attacked with such peculiar sensations that I was unable to go out, and was obliged to call upon a colleague for treatment. Singularly enough, although I had the feeling that I was under the influence of some drug, it was not until some time afterward that I realized that I had been poisoned by the coffee. Under strong tonic treatment I grew better for a time, but in December, 1903, I began to grow worse again, and treatment failing to effect any improvement, it began to look as if I was in danger of a complete breakdown.

The colleague who was treating me was suspicious of kidney disease, but an urinary analysis cleared up that point, but I did not improve. It was at this time, as I have said, the result in case No. 1 set me thinking, and I found from a study of the modalities, that I was worse and more depressed after taking coffee, and it finally penetrated into my inner consciousness that possibly coffee was the cause of my condition. I took my own prescription and gave up coffee, with the result of an almost immediate change for the better. The depression disappeared, the cardiac disturbance ceased, and the dyspeptic symptoms lessened and a steady improvement set in.

Case III. About the same time I had under treatment a young lady suffering from chronic nephritis who presented an almost endless variety of symptoms, which would yield to treatment for a time, only to return in an aggravated form. Among the more persistent and annoying of these was a gastric irritability with an absolute refusal of the stomach to digest or absorb any food, progressive emaciation with great weakness, and a constant sensation of hunger with nausea and frequent spells of vomiting, when the food taken would be returned unchanged; palpitation of the heart, œdema, hectic fever, colliquative sweats, etc. Under treatment and a most rigid diet the mitigation of the symptoms was very slight.

I had advised her that coffee was injurious and should be given up, but it was not until her condition was almost hopeless that she could be induced to follow my advice and refrain from coffee. The beneficial effect of this was apparent at once; the stomach began to recover its tone, the irritability ceased, the vomiting stopped, and the food taken was digested and absorbed; the sensation of continual hunger disappeared, the emaciation lessened and her strength slowly returned. Of course, the disease has not been cured, but a cure which seemed hopeless before has been made possible.

As a result of these experiences, to which more could be added, in all cases of intractable nervous or gastric diseases I have come to regard coffee as an incitant, and an important, if not the chief, factor in the production of the disease, and to insist upon its discontinuance as a part of the treatment, and, I may add, with uniformly good effect. I have found also that, although the giving up of coffee has been in many cases done only under protest and with great reluctance, it has been attended with but little difficulty when a palatable and satisfactory substitute was provided. In my own case and in that of the others described I used the Postum Cereal and found it entirely satisfactory. Even the most inveterate coffee drinkers after a short use of the Postum seem to lose all desire for coffee and to be perfectly satisfied with the Cereal.

STUDY THE SUBJECT AND APPLY THE FACTS TO YOURSELF.

THERE'S A REASON FOR

and entirely out of the reach of the public.

The church is endeavoring to pay for a lot down in the center of the city, with the assurance that whenever the lot shall be paid for the Board of Church Extension will assist by loan in the erection of the building.

Hot Springs lost two millions of dollars worth of property right out of the business section of the city by the recent fire. Four churches were burned in that fire, so that the appeal to the business men in Hot Springs has been burdensome. The meeting house belonging to our people did not burn and they have no such appeal as have the others to make to the local public. Consequently, they are unable to secure help in Hot Springs for the purchase of the better location.

Our brethren in Hot Springs are few and poor in this world's goods, and while the assistance is given from the Clark fund for the support of Brother Kincaid, he could not have remained in Hot Springs under other conditions. The brethren in Hot Springs are asking for $2,000 to secure the desirable lot and then they will be able to go forward with their building enterprise and give the cause of New Testament Christianity a fair chance in Hot Springs.

I recommend this enterprise.

Your brother,
BEN. L. SMITH.

Mrs. Meier's Resignation.

We regret very much to announce that continued ill health has compelled Mrs. Emily Ivers Meier, the beloved president of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian church for the past ten years, to resign her office because the responsibilities are greater than she can endure at the present time. Our regret is tempered by the consideration that she will remain a member of the executive board and will give to the association all the personal attention that her health will permit. We ask all to unite with us in prayers for her speedy restoration to health and strength.

In behalf of the board,
MRS. T. R. AYARS, Vice-Pres.

A Sure Way to Make Money

I have been worried almost to death by debt, and am so thankful that I am free, that I am determined to tell others how I succeeded. I believe any woman or man, who will try, can do as well as I have. I read of a woman making $8 a day selling medicated gloves, and resolved to try the business. I have succeeded better than she did; I have cleared $121.70 in two weeks. You can sell gloves at nearly every house, often several pairs. Being medicated, they heal sore, cracked or chapped hands, are durable, and then so cheap, only 30 cents a pair. It is astonishing the number you can sell. Boys and girls sell as well as grown people. Is this not worth trying? Why work for low wages, or be in want of life's comforts, when you can make $5 or $10 a day if you will. You do not have to canvass—address The Common Sense Mfg. Co., St. Louis, Mo., Box 10, and they will start you in the glove business, either home work or canvassing, so in a short time you will have a nice bank account. I know there are lots of shiftless people, but I am writing this to those who have got a little "get up" about them and want to accomplish something in life. A LADY READER.

An Open Letter to B. L. Smith.

AN APPRECIATION.

MY DEAR BROTHER SMITH.—Word as to your resignation has reached me, and I feel that I must voice to you at this time my sincere, personal esteem and must also assure you of the debt of gratitude I feel that I am under with reference to your service before the brotherhood during the past ten years. I can not forget the fearful discouragement you faced when you bravely took on the work of the American Christian Missionary Society; nor do I forget the depressed heart of the brotherhood with regard to that work. It is all different now, and under the inspiration of your insistent cry, "Home missions to the front," you have made possible the larger things that are certain to come in the future. Permit me to say further that, whoever may assume the work now and lead out into the larger things for which the past has prepared us, there are a great number of us who will not foregt the man who bent beneath the load when it was enough to bear one to the very ground.

I am sure you realize, too, my dear brother, that the good Father, to whom, more than to men, your splendid service has been rendered, is mindful of all your labor of faith and love. You have laid by in store for yourself the loving remembrance of the great body of our people for all the years to come, and have won the "well done" of the One who overlooks the whole harvest field.

Beyond these general expressions of gratitude as one of the brotherhood whom you have served, I want to voice also my personal appreciation of unnumbered courtesies that you have extended to me. I trust sincerely that wherever you may be in the future, the lines of our relationship may be maintained; and I would like to feel that we are still in a very true sense workers together with and for our God.

Accept, please, for you and yours the most cordial greetings of the season.

Affectionately your brother,
CHARLES S. MEDBURY.

Evangelistic Notes.

Miss Pauline Wambaugh is very highly commended by Brother C. S. Medbury, 1079 Twenty-third Street, Des Moines, Iowa, whom she recently has assisted. Miss Wambaugh has no engagements for January. Write her in care of Brother Medbury.

J. J. Taylor, R. R. No. 5, Lexington, Ky., can be secured for evangelistic meetings throughout the winter. He has just closed a meeting at Montpelier, Ohio, where he organized a church with about fifty members. The prospects are that a strong congregation will be built up there in the near future.

Charles E. Schultz, New Castle, Ind., enters the evangelistic field January 1, with his wife as soloist. Brother T. J. Legg speaks well of his work and commends him to the brotherhood. We would be glad to know that he is kept busy.

B. W. Rice, corresponding secretary, Caldwell, Idaho, is desirous of securing a good man as state evangelist for Idaho. A western man is preferred if he can be found; a man with a good record and of good ability. The state board and the field together will pay him from $1,200 upward, according to his ability.

A couple of good preachers of the western type who are willing to do hard work and can accept a salary of about $1,000, are also wanted. Men without good records in other places need not apply. Write to Brother Rice.

Our brethren in Mississippi are planning a simultaneous evangelistic campaign throughout the state. The first steps in the matter of organization have already been taken, and ere long the committee will be securing the workers. Quite a number of the brethren who have volunteered to hold missionary protracted meetings will be called upon to hold meetings during this campaign, which promises to be great in the number of churches enlisted, in the ability of the evangelists, in thorough organization and in results achieved. W. W. Phares, corresponding secretary, and W. M. Baker, our preacher in Meridian, Miss., have the matter in charge.

J. M. Bovee, Pittsfield, Ill., has been 16 years a pastor and 4 years an evangelist. He spent 4 years in one of our best colleges and is reckoned to be well equipped for his work. He both sings and preaches. Churches desiring his services and willing to pay $25 per week are invited to correspond with him.

Bruce Brown, our pastor in Mansfield, Ohio, who has held various meetings with 100 or more additions, has arranged with his church to get away during the month of February. It is his desire to go to the south and hold a meeting in some strong church. This will be a rare opportunity for one of our congregations to have a meeting held by a rarely good man. We commend him without reserve to churches desiring a first-class man.

Ministerial Exchange.

E. W. Brickert and wife are open for meetings or pastoral work. Write them at Independence, Kan.

The church at Clinton, Mo., desires a minister. A young married man, a college graduate, preferred. Reasonable salary.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

The St. Louis Letter.

The churches in St. Louis never did better work than is being done at the present time. At a recent meeting of the ministers reports showed advancement all along the line.

The reports for November showed additions as follows: Union Avenue, 10—3 baptisms; the First, 28—9 baptisms; Carondelet, 4—2 baptisms; Hamilton Avenue, 8—2 baptisms; Compton Heights, 17—7 baptisms. Brother Hoffmann reported a meeting at Moscow with 9 baptisms. Brother Snively held a meeting at Plattsburg in October with 37 additions—35 baptisms. Brother Brandt reports 296 additions at the First during the year up to Dec. 1. The Hamilton Avenue brethren hope to hold their Sunday-school in the new church the first Lord's day in January. The Union Avenue brethren at a recent meeting voted to go ahead with their auditorium. They hope to have it ready for services by next fall. It will be a beauty and a joy when completed.

The St. Louis Christian churches have decided to hold simultaneous meetings, beginning about October 20, 1906. The writer of the St. Louis Letter is the chairman of the committee, and work of organization and preparation will begin in earnest at the opening of the new year.

The annual meeting of the Compton Heights Church was held Dec. 1, at which time we had reports from all departments of our work and gave a reception to all members brought into our church during the past year. The reports showed advance in every department. We have never had quite so encouraging reports anywhere before. The treasurer's report showed that we had raised and expended about $6,000 during the year; for missions something over $1,000 (full report was not in); for charity about $100. Additions during the year, 134—53 baptisms. The pastor's salary has been increased every year since he began with this church. The Compton Heights Church is one of the livest and most loving churches in all Christendom. Because it is one of the new churches on the Southside brethren visiting the city often fail to attend the services, but go rather to one of the older and better known churches, but when they do visit us once we are sure to see them afterwards when they are in the city. Our church is friendly and sociable, and extends a genuine southern hospitality. Our latchstring is long and easily manipulated, and we extend a cordial invitation to visiting brethren to attend any of our services.

I do not feel like closing this letter without calling attention to Brother Dowling's Lesson Commentary for the year 1906. Brother Dowling is so well known to our brotherhood that he scarcely needs an introduction to Sunday school workers. He is a practical Sunday school man and knows what is needed in the work. He is in perfect sympathy with the teachers, and his aim has been to put into as concise a form as possible such helps as they will find useful in the preparation of the lesson. It is a convenient book for general reference in connection with other helps. It is published by the Christian Publishing Company, and can be had for $1.

I wish all of the readers of The Christian-Evangelist a happy and prosperous new year. F. N. Calvin.

North Idaho District.

The churches at Lewiston and Clarkston are arranging for revival meetings in January.

N. E. Beach, of Clarkston, will supply the churches at Julietta and Troy.

Culdesac and Nez Perces are without ministers, but we trust they will soon be cared for.

We have several places where consecrated men could be employed. The salary would be small and the work quite hard, but it is the Master's work.

Our district board is doing all it can to place the Idaho missionary work on a good financial basis. It is planned to keep at least two men in the work to the close of this missionary year.

All contributions for the Idaho work should be sent to the corresponding secretary. E. F. Beaudreau, Cor. Sec.

Idaho Letter.

Boise, the capital, is the largest city in Idaho. It is building rapidly. The streets are crowded. One is reminded of Topeka, or possibly Wichita, in 1886 or 1887, though there is this difference: Those cities then were booming, but this seems to be a natural growth. However, Boise has its "knockers." The main objections are a lack of railroad facilities and a lack of factories. But it is the capital of the state, and just now there is in course of erection a state house which will cost more than $1,000,000 when completed.

Then the Catholics are excavating for a building to cost about $1,000,000. Besides, great blocks of stone and brick that would do credit to Kansas City or St. Louis (possibly) are being reared skyward. And in every direction palatial and other residences are going up.

It is frequently remarked, "Boise has no competitor from Denver and Salt Lake to Portland." However this may be, it is certainly the most beautiful little city I have ever seen, and it is certainly one of the cleanest—a real rival of Denver.

The church people have great faith in the future of their capital city; hence they think it legitimate to spend $40,000 or $50,000 of the "Lord's money" in stone and brick and mortar. The Disciples are away behind in this. They worship in a very modest (if not poverty-stricken) frame building. The membership, however, is over 200, so I have been informed.

The strongest congregation in the state is at Payette. W. E. Bobbitt has been pastor. Bro. C. M. Wickham also lives there, though his business is in Boise. There is a congregation at Caldwell also, about thirty miles north and west of Boise, and one at Star also, a small country village about midway between the two places.

There ought to be congregations established at Pocatello, Nampa and Emmett. There are congregations at Glenns Ferry and at Lewiston also. If there are any others I have not heard of them.

I understand that both the home board and the Y. P. S. C. E. are going to take up the work in Idaho. I believe Pocatello, county seat of Bannock county, is the most strategic point in the state. The Mormons are strongly entrenched there. They have one of the finest buildings I have seen in the state. H. W. Robertson.

Winston-Salem, North Carolina.

The Sunday school here gave a delightful Christmas entertainment. We endeavored to impress upon the church and Sunday school the blessedness of giving to the Lord at Christmas time, and took an offering for our church debt, the amount received being $142.74. Some of the brethren have been making monthly payments, and we hope to reduce our debt $218 by the first of the year, leaving $700 to pay to the Church Extension Board. We expect this will all be paid by 1909.

Another feature of our exercise was the presentation of four prize Bibles to those committing the most verses of Scripture in the past three months. The children were interested in the contest, and we believe it is a good thing to revive the old-fashioned plan of having them learn the Scripture "by heart." Our faithful organist was remembered with a nice present. We hope for a great meeting in May, with Herbert Yeuell as evangelist. J. A. Hopkins.

CONTROLLING NATURE.

We are dazzled by the spectacular achievements in steam and electricity but are likely to forget the less noisy but no less marvelous conquest of plant life. Our parents knew nothing of the Tomato except as a curious ornament in the garden. Sweet Corn was hardly better than the commonest field sorts. All oranges had seeds. Celery was little known and poor in quality. In the flower bed the magnificent Pansy has replaced the insignificant Heart's Ease from which it was developed, and the Sweet Pea in all its dainty splendor traces its origin to the common garden vegetable.

The practical results are accomplished by men operating largely for love of the work, like Luther Burbank in California and Eckford in England, as well as by the great seed merchants, D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, Mich., who are not only eternally vigilant to hold what ground has been gained, but have a corps of trained specialists backed by ample means to conduct new experiments. The results of their experience can be found in their 1906 Seed Annual which they will send free to all applicants.

Kansas State Evangelists.

A number of good and worthy men have been considered, some correspondence has been carried on which occasioned delay, and the committee appointed for this purpose by the state board has finally selected J. M. Lowe, of Galesburg, Ill., and E. N. Phillips, of Iola, Kansas. Both men are well qualified, by training and experience, for the kind and quality of work they are to perform. They begin active work January 1, 1906. We bespeak for them the cordial sympathy and support of the Kansas brotherhood. We solicit correspondence from churches desiring the assistance of these brethren, especially the weaker churches. While these evangelists are not professional singers, or evangelists, yet they both sing and can, when necessary, conduct their own music; yet they prefer not to do so. Their mission is not to see how many meetings they can hold in a given time, but to strengthen and build up the weak and struggling churches, and cultivate the waste places in our Zion. We are now making dates for them. We wish to arrange their work some months in advance. They may not be able to answer all calls that come, but will do their best. Address,

The Primitive Gospel in Northwestern Ohio.

On November 5, I, with my singer, Arthur L. Haley, of Butler, Ind., went to Montpelier, Ohio, in the northwestern corner of the state, a growing town of 3,000 population, for the purpose of establishing a church upon the foundation only—"Thou art the Christ." We met in a hall over a bakery. It was pouring rain when we began our first service, and we had an audience of eight to sing and preach to—seven Disciples and one Baptist. It looked a little discouraging, or, at least, would to those who do not believe that we "can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth us." But to the writer success was certain from the beginning. He had witnessed the power of the Gospel in many difficult fields before, and knew that the "truth as it is in Christ Jesus," earnestly, frankly and lovingly proclaimed, always wins. The increase in the audiences and opposition began at the same time, and both continued in the same ratio. Soon the hall, which seats 300, was packed, and numbers were turned away. Questions on various phases of our position were sent up each evening and were answered as cautiously as we knew how. Additions began to come after the first week and continued until we closed, after a six week's campaign, with the opera house packed to the doors, there being two confessions the last day. We "proclaimed unto them the Christ" and had the same results, if not in numbers, at least in effect, that Philip had in ancient Samaria, namely: First—The devil's brood of unclean spirits cast out; Second—False teaching stopped—at least some of it; Third—There was a reign of great joy begun in that city; Fourth—A church wearing no other name but that of its head, was constituted. There were 38 additions as a direct result of our efforts, which, added to the 22 Disciples we found there, gives us a congregation of 60 Christians only, in that city. The additions were as follows: Eighteen by confession and baptism, 6 reclaimed, 4 from the United Brethren, 2 from the Baptists, 8 by statement.

Among the confessions was a very fine young lady from the Catholics. Too much can not be said of the good Brother Haley did in the meeting, as a leader of song and soloist. A neat sum was subscribed to pay for the minister, and $100 was raised toward buying a lot. This meeting was supported by the American Missionary Society of the Christian Church, at the suggestion of W. J. Wright, superintendent of evangelism. J. J. Taylor, evangelist.

Around the Falls of Minnehaha.

There has recently been a great religious awakening in the twin cities of the north. Chapman and his board of workers have come and gone. We all have felt a spiritual uplift and the churches in the cities have taken on new life.

While we might question some of the methods used and regret that a whole Gospel was not preached, yet we were all benefited and encouraged in the Lord's work. We hope some day to have Brother Wright up here with a band of workers in a similar meeting.

Brother Whaley, of Eden Valley, has resigned and returned to school to complete his course. We hope he will return to Minnesota.

The work at Duluth is progressing. Baxter Waters is the pastor. We hope the union of pastor and church there will be pleasant and of long duration.

Brother Erwin, of Rochester, seems to be getting things well in hand there. They soon enter upon a union meeting with Mr. Sunday as evangelist.

C. B. Osgood, of Winona, has time to run out occasionally and hold a meeting at some weak point. Let this example be followed by other pastors.

Portland Avenue Church, Minneapolis, has been supplied of late by J. H. Bicknell, our former state evangelist. There is talk of his return to us in this state in the early spring.

We just closed a two weeks' meeting at Manannah, with eight confessions. This is a small country church. I am now at Litchfield trying to revive things a little; the outlook is not very hopeful.

There is great need of good, consecrated men in this state; if there is any live man who is thinking of changing his field or looking for work, write to me at once.

Send Along the Money.

The Bible schools of Missouri are hereby urged to send in the money now due for state work. We have three men at work, and will send out others as fast as the means sent in will support them. If the full amount can not be sent now, send in at least one-half the year's contribution at once. Send all money to J. H. Hardin, secretary and treasurer, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Some Good News.

A friend has sent a direct gift of $10,000, not an annuity, to the Foreign Society, to aid in the creation of the $50,000 building fund by personal gifts. The society hopes to build ten mission homes, four mission hospitals, eight school buildings and twelve chapels this year at a total of $50,000. About $20,000 has been secured in cash and pledges, leaving the large balance of $30,000 yet to be secured.

Besides the $10,000 the same mail brought $6,000 from the estate of Mrs. O. A. Burgess. These two checks amounting to $16,000 in one mail greatly cheered our hearts. During the past week we also received $200 from a friend on the annuity plan. We are hoping many others will remember our needs in the same way. The society has received also a check for $600 from Mrs. J. M. Gordon, Clarksville, Tenn., to be used for the support of a missionary for one year. This is the savings of years. She is not a wealthy woman. This makes four individual givers who are supporting a missionary each through the Foreign Society. The Foreign Society also received an annuity gift from one who had given on the same plan before.

The friends of the American Christian Missionary Society will be glad to know that the society has received three annuities, one for $1,000, one for $600, one for $100, during the month of December. They have also received $2,000 as the final payment of the permanent named memorial fund of Brother and Sister T. E. Taylor of South Port, Iowa. They have received word of a bequest of $1,000 which will be paid in a few days, as soon as legal formalities can be met. Another $5,000 fund is promised us and we hope that the payment will be received before the close of the month.

Write for a booklet, to Benjamin L. Smith, corresponding secretary, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Board of Church Extension is in receipt of $500 on the annuity plan from a friend to church extension. This $500 makes the church extension fund amount to over $540,000 on December 31, 1905. During the next four years we must raise $460,000 in order to reach our centennial fund of one million dollars by October, 1909, when we celebrate in Pittsburg. At this time of the year many people ought to be sending money to our Church Extension fund on the annuity plan. This is the one hundred and forty-ninth gift to the church extension fund on the annuity plan, and the annuity fund amounts to over $175,000. Address G. W. Muckley, corresponding secertary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Missouri.

The Board of Church Extension recently received two bequests: $1,000 from the estate of Mrs. R. E. Smith, Whitesboro, Tex., and $250 from the estate of Mrs. Nancy Burgess.

During November the receipts from the churches for church extension amounted to $2,307.31, which was a gain of $1,280.89 over November, 1904. The individual receipts amounted to $426.43, which was a loss of $1,184.96 over November, 1904. Total gain over November, 1904, $95.93. There were 162 contributing churches in 1905, which was a gain of 81 churches over November, 1904.

All money for saving the Randall Street Mission in Baltimore, Md., should be sent to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Missouri. Churches that have not sent their offerings should hasten them to Kansas City, so that the amounts may be used in saving Randall Street Mission, which will be sold on January 15 unless our Board of Church Extension can make a loan of $4,000. Many should send special individual offerings for the salvation of this valuable property in the east. The indebtedness on the church is $5,000, $1,000 of which will be raised in the east. It will be a calamity for our brethren in the east and a disgrace to our brotherhood, to lose that property. Please be prompt in the rescue of this church.

THE WISE MEN FIND JESUS.—Matt. 2:1-12.

Memory Verse, 11.

Golden Text.—My son, give me thine heart.—Prov. 23:26.

The first division of the life of Jesus as narrated in the four Gospels is the Thirty Years of Private Life, including all the events up to the first public appearance of Jesus at the time of John's ministry. The material in this division, omitting the introductions and genealogies, would naturally fall into four sections, as follows:

1. The Annunciations.
    - (a) To Zacharias.
    - (b) To Mary.
    - (c) To Joseph.
2. The Nativities.
    - (a) Of John.
    - (b) Of Jesus.
    - (c) Angels' Song and Shepherds' Visit.
3. The Infancy of Jesus.
    - (a) Circumcision and Presentation.
    - (b) Visit of the Wise Men.
    - (c) Flight to Egypt.
4. Private Life at Nazareth.
    - (a) Childhood and Growth.
    - (b) Visit to Jerusalem.
    - (c) Eighteen Years at Nazareth.

Last Sunday's lesson had to do with the nativity and the most striking incident mentioned in connection with it. The present lesson relates an episode of the infancy which is represented as occurring some weeks, probably some months, after the birth of Jesus. The ordinary representation of the wise men as finding the child still housed in the stable and cradled in the manger, would therefore almost certainly be incorrect. Indeed, that the family should still be in Bethlehem, whither they had gone only for registration and taxation, would be sufficiently improbable, though of course not at all impossible. It is to be remembered, however, that Matthew, who alone records this visit of the magi, has nothing to say of any former residence in Nazareth, tells of no journey to Bethlehem to be taxed, and conveys the impression that Bethlehem was the home of the family until the flight to Egypt (Matt. 2:19 23); there is, therefore, no shadow of inconsistency in Matthew's account. It should be mentioned, too, that some have held the opinion that the visit of the shepherds and the visit of the magi represent two versions of the same event.

The term "magi" is not easy of interpretation. The probability is that it represents not a racial name, though this view has supporters, but a caste of priests in Media or Persia. How they received their news of the Messiah's birth, can not be determined. Doubtless Jewish tradition and expectation regarding the Messiah had become current in certain circles of eastern religionists, but what was the nature of their warning that the Messiah had been born, is a question which can not be answered. Attempts have been made to explain the star as a conjunction of planets, but the details of the story refuse to respond to these efforts to reduce them to natural phenomena. A conjunction of planets would not "come and stand over the place where the young child was." One of two things must be true: Either the star was a miraculous manifestation accompanying a special revelation to these wise men regarding the birth of the Messiah, or else the record must be understood as embodying a growth of tradition with which the early disciples embellished and dignified the narrative of their Lord's nativity and infancy. It is impossible to accept the record as accurate in its details, and explain it on naturalistic grounds.

The story has furnished comfort and edification to the people of God in all subsequent ages. It is pleasant to think that amid the humble scenes of our Lord's infancy there was one note of splendor, one spot of rich color, one moment of appreciation, which foretokened the homage which should later be paid to him by earth's proudest and highest; and that ever in his infancy there were brought to him rich gifts from afar which may symbolize for us the more precious oblation of the spirit which men today are offering to him.

AM I ON PROBATION?—Luke 13:6-9.

Those who have never honored Christ by becoming citizens of his kingdom, are not on probation, but under condemnation already. Probation is a precious privilege bought for us with the blood of the Lamb of God.

The reputed Christian who callously divorces his manner of living from the high ideals Christ has breathed into the world can hardly be said to be on probation. Not the Father, but himself, has already determined that his portion is to be with the other incorrigibles in eternal destruction from the presence of God and the angels.

While the parable represents heaven's patience with us, it must be remembered it was spoken by one under whose malediction the cumbering fig tree suddenly withered and was removed. Let us no longer sin against the grace accorded us through the extension of our probationary period far beyond the three year period lest a worse fate befall us, but rather say, "Henceforth I will serve thee, O Lord, with my whole heart!"

We have no assurance of another hour's probation, but we do know the night approacheth. All our preparation for judgment must be quickly made. Let the indifferent become good, the good become better, and the noblest of us like gods among men. During this growth in grace is the thrill of a life celestial, the sweetness of divine communion, a joy from the consciousness that all is well, earth can neither give nor take away and a transformation into Christlikeness that constitutes earth's greatest success and the earnest of eternal blessedness.

Extending the probationary state of the fruitless tree another year was a grace by the husbandman that has found higher expression in the Lord's lengthening the threads of our own lives until this hour. Had the Nemesis of justice been permitted to bring us to final trial last year or yesterday, we might have been eternally lost. But we have till this hour in which to get right with God and perfect ourselves for the skies. To this high employ as to none other beneath the stars may we henceforth devote our uncertain time, with all we have and are.

If we have acquired vital faith in Christ and sincerely repented of our sins and honestly confessed Jesus to be the Son of God and our Savior, and have been scripturally baptized into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, we are not on probation so far as our lives on the other side of the baptismal fount are concerned. Christ forgave those sins once for all. That old life is a closed incident. Our trial now is whether we are living worthily the high vocation wherewith we have been called. Let us weigh ourselves in God's scales, let us test our actions and motives by his divine standards, let us have daily testimony from the Scriptures and our own consciousness not only that we have been children of the great King but are still joint heirs with Christ of all the promises.

It should be remembered that Christ is still on probation. Less than one-fourth of this generation whom he also died to save have accepted him. Men are still asking, "Art thou he that cometh, or look we for another?" In answer, now and then, Jesus points not to a doctrine or a system but to people with whom he has come in contact as a living answer to the question. Humanity is the touchstone by which his claims to divinity will be confirmed or rejected. Our living on the lower levels gives demons more heartening for the overthrow of the kingdom than does hostile literary criticism. God help us to realize that, though lowly and obscure we be, yet Christ's mission to earth is dependent upon us, and may we so meet these newly realized responsibilities as to glorify Christ and make our Savior the world's Savior.

If by this question we inquire whether our ultimate coronation in heaven is still undetermined, we may safely answer in the affirmative. Many of us so live as if we believe that years ago when in the old village church we professed faith in Christ and were baptized we had irrevocably guaranteed unto us an eternity of blessedness regardless of all our conduct between that watery grave and the one some solemn sexton will hollow for us in the bosom of the earth. Strange and (to so many) fatal delusion! Jesus did not understand we are saved once for all, when he told Peter, "I have made supplication for thee, that thy faith fail not." Neither did Paul or he would not have entertained those fears that after having preached to others, he himself might become a castaway. Yes, we, too, are on probation till past the judgment seat with divine approval we go to receive our investiture of the white robe, the golden harp, and starry crown and blend our voices with those of the holy angels singing of redeeming love about the great white throne.

This is a probationary era and God himself is not exempt from its spirit, nor his glory from its judgments. The same power that lifts waves moonward draws systems toward molecules. Even so, while God judgeth all men, all who have heard of him judge Jehovah. The Omnipotent knoweth he is on probation and doth not shrink from its tests—"O taste and see that the Lord is good," is his challenge. Well he knows that should men find him cruel or capricious, incapable of inspiring to the loftiest intellectual and spiritual ideals and helping to attain them, less divine in his love than omnipotent in his power, or any imperfectness in him whatsoever, they would declare his throne vacant and find or create a new deity. If this be true with the Master, how certainly is it true of his servants! Toil tests us physically; "what" and "why" intellectually, and sin spiritually. Not on earth need we expect release from the necessity of constantly vindicating our right to divine approval. But the compensation of it is that in heaven there remaineth a rest for the people of God.

Christian Endeavor.

By Geo. L. Snively.

January 14, 1906.

WHAT CHRIST TAUGHT ABOUT MONEY AND ITS USES.—Matt. 2:11; Mark 10:17-31.

In vain he prays, "Thy kingdom come," who will not work to have to give to help institute the universal reign of Immanuel.

It is not in the record that Dives was in torment for dwelling in a palace, but rather for permitting Lazarus to languish without his gates; for wearing purple so much as finding the beggar naked and leaving him so; for possessing and enjoying wealth, but rather for showing none of that mercy toward the Lord's poor that he must receive of the Father, if he would have any part in the inheritance of the righteous.

We live in a great financial age and hear much of speculative and safe investments, of profits and losses. But no other investments will bring us such safe and generous returns as those we make with the Lord. "There is no man hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or mother, or father, or children, or lands, for my sake and the Gospel's sake but he shall receive a hundredfold now in this time, houses and brethren and sisters and mothers and children and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life."

Many men are excusing their very questionable businesses and methods by the consideration that after having amassed a stipulated fortune, they will retire from business, become active in the church and freely give of their income to benevolent and other religious purposes. But they can never honor God nor purchase a heavenly inheritance with money so acquired. At the threshold of the church there must be a renunciation of every questionable dollar. Even one will fatally handicap us in the race for glory, honor and immortality.

There is no scriptural proscription against the acquisition of wealth. When the Lord directed Adam to tend the garden he had planted in Eden, he wanted it well done, and in good tillage there is a profit. Saul exhorts us to be not slothful in business. Moral issues become involved not in the mere getting, but in the method and purpose of getting, the disposition made of what is gotten, and whether to our eyes gold becomes more desirable than goodness, and the riches of this world more precious than spiritual treasures. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me" is still operative.

While we approve of Christians' willing their property to church and charity it is doubtful whether they get credit in heaven for so doing. In a will one merely gives direction to what is no longer his. He clung to it as long as he could and really disposed of his heirs' money rather than his own. He certainly sacrificed nothing through his will. But in life he could have given of his own, he could have had fellowship with Jesus in self-denial, and realized in his own life all the benefits contemplated in the discipline of self-sacrifice. This comment is not for the disparagement of wills, but for the exaltation of the grace of giving while we are living.

If there be no written command for Christians to gain fortunes, the necessities of the church constitute an unequivocal and divine one. Jesus in the person of his disciples must still go about everywhere doing good unto all men if he would win the world unto himself. How are orphanages and hospitals to be maintained, ships built or chartered and sailed to the uttermost parts of the earth bearing the everlasting Gospel, and great missionary campaigns carried to gloriously successful conclusions unless carte blanche to sanctified fortunes be given the leaders of Zion's hosts? Many in counting rooms are laying foundations for as great and acceptable usefulness as others are in pulpit and study. If you have the faculty of getting, get and give—and live.

How many of us could have withstood the young ruler's test? The countenances of most would fall, if required to give up all in order to follow Jesus into eternal life. And yet Jesus insists on being first in the affections of his followers. Different tests come to each. Let us pray that we may meet them successfully. There is a beautiful tradition that the rich young man met all the Savior's requirements; that he purchased Gethsemane and dedicated it as a public park to the poor of Jerusalem, and relinquished all that wealth that was weights rather than wings to his soul. So may angels tell we renounced every weight and the sin that so easily beset us and entered with our Savior into life.

It is our duty to extract all the wealth we can from the mines and fields of the earth and the depths of the sea, but we must remember we do not own it in fee simple as we would had we created it. It is still the Lord's and "wise men from the East" and everywhere will to this day lay it at the feet of his Son. The Master allows us a generous commission from our accumulations for house, food, raiment, travel and entertainment, but would have us know he scrutinizes our withholdings as narrowly as he does our givings. Neither is he pleased to see us devoting ourselves exclusively to gathering wealth from the ground and neglecting those treasures of mind and heart and character that give us membership in the most real and exalted nobility of earth.

Solution of the Temperance Problem.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST not long ago G. L. Brokaw made these statements:

"I knew a man in Christ about fourteen years ago (most of the time he did not seem to know whether he was 'in the body or out of the body'); such an one had a vision that revealed to him a solution of the temperance problem." "The system did not work." I do not know to whom he refers, but the incident affords me an opportunity to make a statement.

There were just such narrow souls with sneers in the days of Joseph, Moses and David, Jesus, Peter and Paul, Columbus, Washington and Lincoln; but God's "vision" was realized then, and will be realized again.

"The Conquest" was published by myself at Monticello, Ia., September, 1884, nearly twenty-one years ago. That work of fiction presented a plan and an ideal society to end the horrors of the liquor traffic. Brokaw's statement—"The system did not work"—is not true of this, for it has never yet been tried. Great movements can not be forced a single minute; God's time must come before they can even start. But when they start all the powers of earth and hell can not stop them.

Men are born with genius to lead these movements. They are partly the products of their age, and the age is partly the product of their labor. They are scorned and rejected in the beginning, and accepted and overestimated in the end. They always have a "vision," and that "vision" is always realized because it is of God.

I have waited over twenty years to even start that society named "The Congress." The time is now ready. It is to be a moral society, on a financial basis, to solve the temperance, trust and labor problems on the one popular issue of Public Ownership. We shall seek to unite the Folk movement of Missouri, the La Follette movement of Wisconsin, the Douglass movement of Massachusetts, the Dunne movement of Chicago, and similar work in other cities, and the reform work of Roosevelt and all other reformers—for a combined effort to carry the national election in 1908, and destroy the giant evils which threaten our national existence. Any one can see that public sentiment is ripe, the time is short, and further delay would be criminal.

We need consecrated men, women and money. All who are interested in this work please write me, inclosing stamp for reply.

"From the Denominations."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Will you allow me to freely express my mind in reference to our correspondence columns?

I do not desire to act the part of a critic, or be contentious, but believe I have at heart the great cause that my brethren love so dearly.

It seems to me that our correspondents would add more glory to the sparkling truths they give, if they would, in their reports from the field, give us the figures of interest without adding, "Two from the Methodists," "One from the Baptists," etc., or such like expressions.

I love our paper and take delight in handing it to my friends who see not as we do. Those uninitiated into our blessed mysteries are often staggered by what to them appear to be manifestations of a proselyting spirit. For my part I appreciate such reports, for reasons I could give, but for the benefit of those we are trying to reach, I feel that other presentations would lift the mind more perfectly to Christ, the sole life and center of our theology. Forgive me if I have said anything amiss.

The Educational Revival.

in this state small schools have been consolidated and pupils transported to large grade schools. Of course I refer to the rural schools of this section. In the cities and large towns there are efficient schools.

I have long been impressed with this truth, "Christian education—the hope of the world," the motto of Virginia Christian College. We long and pray for the time when our educational system will be placed on a higher basis where greater good can be accomplished. When we have better schools and greater facilities with enthusiastic Christian teachers who will instill into the minds and lives of their pupils Christian thought and ideals, what may we not accomplish?

A Prayer.

O thou who art the Lord of heaven and earth, we worship thee! So direct us by thy Holy Spirit, we beseech thee, that our worship may be acceptable. Clarify our spiritual vision that we may behold that city beyond, where all worship thee in sincerity. Help us, we pray thee, so to live that every day we shall be preparing for the higher and better life there. Enable us, we entreat thee, so to choose our companions here that we shall be traveling with those with whom we shall spend our eternity. Teach us how we may lay up treasure in the sight of God, and enable us so to do. May we be comforted and encouraged with the thought that the sin, sorrow, and suffering of this life will soon pass away, and, through Jesus Christ, our Savior, we shall enter into fullness of life with thee. Forgive all our sins and make us pure in heart, for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Hundredth Tree.

BY WILLIAM A. WURTS.

Deacon Jeremiah Hewlett laid down the paper he had been examining and meditatively scratched the scant fringe of hair that advancing years and a life of hard work had left to him. It was nearly time to close the little store and post office for the night, and as he and Hetty sat in the corner the deacon called his "office," behind the row of mail boxes, the hanging lamp cast a circle of light where the paper lay on the otherwise dingy table, while the gentle oscillation of the tin reflector, surrounding the flame like an inverted bottomless cake-pan, caused flickering shadows to wander over the deacon's shining cranium.

Hetty taught the district school in the winter, and in the summer months "clerked" for the deacon, who dispensed groceries, notions and mail matter—to say nothing of much well meant and often needed advice—to the rest of the village. It wasn't so much a matter of choice as of necessity with her, for during the two years since her father's death, living had been more of a problem than ever before with her and her mother; and she, having both energy and good sense, had started in to solve it in so far as any efforts of her own might do so.

The paper, focused in the lamp's rays, was luminous, but the deacon's brain seemed to absorb from it no added light. His face grew more perplexed as he gazed at it, and finally he picked it up and again began to study its contents.

Hetty looked on anxiously, with an expression of half-hearted hope in her eyes. Presently, as the deacon's deliberation seemed to augur no relief to her own impatience, she said:

"Well, deacon, what do you think—will it ever come to anything now?"

The deacon was considered a just man in matters of importance, even though such little peculiarities as using the heaviest paper when weighing out "half-quarters" of tea, or filling the smallest measure with the biggest potatoes, and keeping the sugar barrels close to the open door in damp weather, might be as much a part of his business routine as they are of most country storekeepers. These little things being, through long usage, taken as a matter of course by his neighbors, did not affect his reputation for integrity and fair-dealing, and he felt a certain degree of responsibility in the sustaining of that reputation even in such matters as giving an opinion, so, in the case in hand, his deliberation was not without reason, especially as he found it difficult to reach a conclusion at all satisfactory even to himself. He glanced over his spectacles from the paper to Hetty's anxious face.

"Well, now, Hetty," he said, "that's a hard question to answer right offhand. No doubt about which side's in the right on't, but I must say the chances looks sort o' dubious considerin' all the circumstances."

"But why should they be?" and the girl's cheeks rivaled the glow of the lamplight as they flamed hotly. "Why should mother and I suffer for others' dishonesty? Father kept his part of the bargain."

"Certain; certain he did. All them stumps out in the wood-lot prove that fast enough. But there," laying his hand soothingly on hers, "don't git all fretted up over it. Let's look into it calm-like, an' balance one side against t'other an' see jest how things stand. Let's see, now—'This agreement' —H'm! jes' so. . . . 'the said Dan'l Windham'—that's your pa, you know—'agrees to sell to said Henry Durand one hundred hickory trees standing,' et cet'ry, et cet'ry, 'for eight hundred dollars. An' said Durand agrees to buy,' et cet'ry, et cet'ry . . . 'payment to be made when said Durand has removed all the trees from said lot.' An' there's that one lone, pesky tree standin' there yet, blockin' the whole thing, an' Durand bankrupt an' gone off no one knows where. Does look unpromisin,' and that's a fact. Who'd ever thought when Durand was here with that big railroad contract, an' things looked as if he could buy out the whole village, that it could turn out so?"

"I'm sure we never did," said Hetty, sadly.

"What did he say about it, afore your pa died, anyway? Must have had some sort of excuse for not settlin'!"

"You know it was nearly five years ago; I didn't know much about it then. But I've heard mother say he was to have the privilege of taking the trees as he wanted them. Then, when nearly a year had gone by and father urged him to remove the last of them so they could have a settlement, he promised to very soon, but said that his work had turned out badly, and that the expenses of his nephew, Allen Talbot, at college, were so heavy that he was cramped for money just then. You remember his nephew—his sister's only son? He was here that summer, after his first year at college."

"Hum! Yes, I rec'lect him. Likely enough chap he seemed, but it's poor consolation to be told you folks 'd have to help him sow his wild oats—pretty poor argyment for not payin' debts, that was."

"He didn't seem wild," said Hetty, with a little shake in her voice; "every one here seemed to like him. But of course, we can't know."

She had been only seventeen that summer, and impressions that had come to her then concerning the frank, handsome face and debonair manner of the chance acquaintance, had often since fluttered up from the recesses of her mind, where she had hidden them from all but herself, bringing an added color to her cheeks as she trudged through the snow to the schoolhouse, or along the sunlit, flower-bordered road to the deacon's store. She had even found herself wishing, during the last two years, that Allen Talbot need not have been Henry Durand's nephew. There seemed an incongruity in her thoughts of one and the other that she could not reconcile. And yet, she had asked herself what difference could it make, after all? Chance acquaintances come and go like summer roses; only the roses are sure of reappearing to gladden other summers.

Deacon Jerry folded the paper and again glanced across the table, keenly scrutinizing her from under his shaggy eyebrows. A light seemed to come to him that somewhat changed the horizon.

"Hum! Jes' so. Jes' so," he said in answer to her last remark. "We can't know, that's a fact. It's only nat'ral that young fellows should put the best foot foremost if they want folks' good opinion. I s'pose we mustn't judge him for his uncle's shortcomings—'less we're sure he contributed to 'em. But I reckon we're liable to git better acquainted with him, anyway, for I read only yesterday that he's coming here again; been app'inted 'lectrical engineer for the railroad, to put in the whole plant from here to Riverside."

"Has he? Why; I—I hadn't heard of it."

There was a little catch in Hetty's voice, and her eyes fell, but she reached steadily across the table for the contract and put it into the little bag she carried.

"Yes; accordin' to the paper he's somewhere on the line now. Of course, though, this isn't his affair. Could hardly expect a young fellow jest startin' in life to shoulder his uncle's debts. An' looking the facts straight in the face, I'm afraid nothing short of direct intervention of Providence is goin' to settle this one. But don't worry, Hetty; you've got plenty o' friends, an' the widow an' fatherless ain't never forsaken. Anyhow, you can always count on Deacon Jerry." And he took her hand in his as they rose from the table.

"My gracious!" he exclaimed, as her eyes glistened with suspicious moisture, "it's jest such things that ought to be made a special subjec' of prayer, accordin' to my idees. I've always held to the notion that the right kind of prayin' isn't jest telling the Lord what awful sinful creatures we are—he knows that better'n we can tell him; but if we ask for the bringin' about of what we honestly think is right an' reasonable for us, an' have faith that if he thinks so too we're going to git help, it's pretty liable to come to us somehow—p'r'aps when we're least expectin' it Anyhow, that's about the state of this case, I reckon."

And so the matter rested, although during the next few days the deacon "carried it on his mind," for in his genuine fatherly interest in Hetty he hoped some suggestion might come to him that would be of use. He knew that the loss of eight hundred dollars was no light one for Hetty and her mother. He happened to know too that this was just the amount of the mortgage on their little home, which her father doubtless would have freed himself from had he received the money. He wondered if, indirectly, the matter might yet bring even greater disappointment to Hetty than that of the mere money loss, in the shattering of certain girlish ideals she may have had. For the deacon was wise in his generation, and her changed manner when they had spoken of Allen Talbot had not escaped him.

His thoughts were of it as he drove to the school house that week for the usual Thursday evening meeting, and the hickory tree standing near the roadside in the unfenced wood-lot, solitary among the stumps of its many brothers, brought the whole thing home to him with renewed force as he passed it

"Too bad," he said to himself as he let the reins go slack and gazed at the tree. "Too bad Durand couldn't have h'isted you out o' there an' settled up like a man, afore it got so he couldn't. Hetty's a likely looking girl, an' it does seem 's if Providence ought to take a hand in this some way or other." And he jogged along, still thinking of it as he hitched his horse and went into the school house.

The deacon "led the meeting" that evening, and it was nearly half over when from his chair on the platform he saw a young man quietly enter—unobserved by the rest of the company, whose backs were toward him—and take a seat near the door. His face seemed familiar, and yet, for a moment, Deacon Jerry didn't recall just where he had seen it; then suddenly he remembered—it was Allen Talbot, but little changed in appearance by the five year interval since his former visit.

"Well, that's curious! Jest as I've been thinkin' of him, too," he thought. And then recalling himself to a sense of propriety due his position as leader of the meeting, he tried to give his mind wholly to the remarks of Brother Bascom, who was in the midst of an earnest exhortation.

But when it came time for the deacon to offer the closing prayer, his mind ran back to what he had said to Hetty at the store, while his eyes again sought the face of the young man. Why not put the ideas he had expressed to Hetty to the test? Possibly he might this evening set some leaven at work toward clearing up the whole matter.

Let us be patient, you and I;
  Let us, like watchful guardsmen, make
  Our hearts a haven for the sake
Of those that drift, they know not why.

Let us be patient. Let us keep

Let us be patient. Let men trace

  In skies of ours, that all may see
God's presence in his child's calm face.

Life may be very short, or else take hold upon eternity, according as we choose. Lived for itself, it is brief and worthless and disappointing. Lived for the glory of God, it is transformed. The poet truly sings:

"The period of life is brief—
'Tis the red of the red rose leaf,
'Tis the gold of a sunset sky,
'Tis the flight of a bird on high;
But one may fill the space
With such an infinite grace
That the red shall view all time,
And the gold through the ages shine,
And the bird fly swift and straight
To the portals of God's own gate."

Are Elephants Becoming Extinct?

C. G. Schillings, the eminent German naturalist, whose specialty is photographing wild beasts in African jungles, makes the prediction in his lately published volume, "With Flashlight and Rifle" (Harpers), that the day is not far off when to the question "Quid novi ex Africa?" the answer must be given: "They have killed the last of the African elephants." It is the billiard ball, avers Herr Schillings, that is responsible for their extermination. "It seems strange, but it is true," he says, "that the innocent billiard players of civilized countries are largely responsible for the almost total extinction of the African elephant. There is no material from which the best quality of balls may be turned on the lathe so soft and so elastic as the ivory tusk of the female elephant."

Let the Kissers Keep On.

A learned body of venerable gentlemen in Paris has been discussing phthisis—which is really much easier to discuss than to spell—and has come to the conclusion that this world will never be an entirely peaceful and healthful world until we do away with "that unpleasant custom," kissing. So much for the opinion of a lot of tottering, medical sharps. In the last year we have interviewed on this subject a hundred or more eminent young practitioners of both medicine and osculation, and with a unanimity at once overwhelmingly convincing they have assured us that judicious kissing is not only salutary but positively necessary to bodily refreshment. If a sour-faced, dried-up doctor finds kissing "unpleasant" there is nothing in the constitution, the Bible, the book of common prayer or Mrs. Sherwood's book on etiquette that forces him to run the risk of phthisis or a slap in the face, but it is not his privilege to deny to others more rationally organized and more acceptable to loveliness the reward of their labor. Let us, then, go on with the good work, decently and in order, each as the Lord gives him grace and opportunity.—Chicago Evening Post.

What Gave Him His Bearings.

He was a big, black, good-hearted, old negro, stranded near Boston, and he had decided, after considerable "cogitation," to work his way back to the south, where he would feel more at home. In Boston, in Springfield, in Hartford, in New Haven, it was always the same. When he rang a bell and asked for work and a bite to eat the answer usually was, "I'm very sorry, but there's not a thing to be done here to-day." There were occasional exceptions, of course, or uncle could never have got on, but the thing most to be counted upon was pleasing politeness coupled with nothing else.

At last the old man left New York and then Philadelphia behind, and one day found himself in Baltimore. His knowledge of geography was nil, but he thought he ought soon to be getting into "de Souf," and with that hope at heart rang the bell to a fine house on Charles Street. The door was opened by the host himself, who, after an instant's survey of the figure before him, blurted out:

"Why, yo' —— black rascal! How dare yo' ring this bell? Get off mah steps this secon', befo' I brek yo' haid!"

"'Deed I will, boss; 'deed I will!" came the hurried answer. "I wuz on'y lookin' fer a bite to eat, boss."

"A bite to eat!" repeated the other. "An' don't yo' know yet whar to go for all yo' want? Get yo'self round back an' they'll feed yo' full—but cyart yo' good-for-nuthin' black carcass off these steps, I say!"

Toasts.

A long life and a happy one;
A good business and a successful one;
A firm friend and a faithful one;
A swift death and a peaceful one;
  And God's face beyond.

At a recent supper to a bride this was the first toast:

Here's to Love, a thing so divine,
  Description makes it but the less.
'Tis what we feel but can not define,
  'Tis what we know but can not express.

And after toasts to the youngest matron and the bride, one of the girls whose engagement had not been announced, gravely recited:

We've had a toast to the bride-to-be,
  Winsome, smiling, and fair,
Here's to the girls who would like to be,
  Wondering when and where.
Still there's fish in the sea,
  No doubt of it, as good as ever came out of it,
And some day we'll get our share—
  SO WE DON'T CARE.

Then her neighbor at the table said:

Pray do not fancy hope is dead,
  Be game and laugh at fate.
Bear this in mind: They also wed
  Who only wait and wait.

Among general toasts, the quotation from Cicero to friendship is apropos: "It improves happiness and abates misery by the doubling of our joy and the dividing of our grief."

At a family reunion Mark Twain's unique toast to "The Babies" is generally appropriate: "We haven't all had the good fortune to be ladies; we have not all been generals, or poets, or statesmen; but when the toast works down to the babies, we stand on common ground—for we've all been babies."

A familiar toast to a general company is:

Here's a toast to all who are here,
  No matter where you're from;
May the best day you have seen
  Be worse than your worst to come.

The Matter of Marrying.

BY WALTER WILLIAMS.

Marriage Not Chief End of Life.

Marriage is not the chief end of life. Some girls think it is. They misquote thereby the Westminster Catechism. Marriage is only an incident, or, with some people, an accident. But it is the chief accident or incident, and shapes human destiny more largely than any other single occurrence—if a marriage may be called single—between the cradle and the grave. It is but the difference of a letter from marrying to marring. The wedding means one or the other.

Getting Ready for Matrimony.

It is strange that girls who set much store by getting married should not make larger preparation therefor. How few young women plan, soberly, steadily, seriously, for the duties and responsibilities of wedded life! There is not here considered the preparation involved in a hurried trip for clothes or the baking of the bride's cake. But married life usually means housekeeping and its attendant responsibilities. It means, at least it may mean, motherhood, the highest, noblest mission of woman in the world. Are our girls trained for these duties which follow upon the wedding ring? Do our schools for girls, female colleges, as they are barbarously termed, put these into their curriculums? We hear of mothers' meetings but, by the way, there are no fathers' meetings, and why not?

Out of Debt and Out of Love.

The most dangerous thing a man can do is to fall in love. If he falls into a ditch he may break a leg or a neck, but when he falls in love he sometimes breaks his heart, and that is worse. How mysterious is this business of falling in love, anyway! The youth goes soberly along the path of everyday existence. He has no thought save his work, no eye for aught save the duty at his door. Suddenly a look, a voice, a face, and he is in love. No more a pathway undisturbed. The world has changed. A new ideal has arisen. The gray clouds fade into a blue sky and he blacks his boots twice a day. Whether love be caused by electricity or microbes it certainly comes unbidden. Reason has little to do with it. Imagination is its helper and sentiment its twin. A man who can keep out of debt and out of love will never be miserable, and never happy.

Galatea or Phryne.

Love is a creator of ideals. In courtship the sweetheart forms and fancies a creation and calls it Her. He places this creation upon a pedestal and worships as the Parsees did the sun. No girl is ever quite so good as her sweetheart thinks she is. How lonely in this world would be her life if this were not the truth! Sometimes the girl comes down from the pedestal. There is then a mistake of serious import. The ideal is dissipated, the idol found to be but common clay. Well is it for the girl if she comes not down. The sweetheart will hold her in higher esteem for her refusal to respond to his beckoning. Galatea is longer beloved than the frail and fickle Phryne.

The Open Door to Heaven.

Marriage is the open door to heaven. The big blue sky mirrors itself in the smallest pool upon the thirsty earth. Thus does heaven drift down into the tiniest household to be reflected back in the lives of wedded folk. When home is not synonymous with happiness there is something wrong with man or woman, or both. Marriage is never a failure. Sometimes the married are.

The Monotony of Married Life.

The chief disturber of married bliss is ennui. If there were another word that meant what this borrowed French one does that word would be the one employed. But ennui alone expresses in a half dozen letters the tired feeling which destroys many homes. It is cured by no sarsaparilla. Ennui makes men read newspapers and women join clubs. It drives husbands to the lodge and worse. It makes wives cross and querulous. The element of surprise has gone from married life when ennui comes in. The bride is no longer adorned for her husband. She keeps her adornment for afternoon receptions. The man of the house forgets the kisses of the honeymoon. Each loses interest in the other. Thus comes "the rift within the lute."

Dissipation of Love.

Few married folks hate each other. They only get tired. Hymen's bond does not gall. It only wearies. Incompatibility of temper means generally only indifference. Paul said of love that it did many things, but he never said that it did not get tired. He was an old bachelor, but he knew something of love. Nothing dissipates love quicker than to get tired and to see the object of the love tired also.

Too Much Dead Sameness.

The dead sameness in life spoils many homes. In such households even the arrival of a new baby does not stir matters greatly. The days are one long round of changeless circumstances. The husband plans no surprises for the wife, nor she for him. And each wonders as the years increase why there is so little of the flame of affection in their hearts and homes.

Home the Center of Happiness.

In the home-centered married life there is no need to run abroad for happiness. When man or woman goes across the threshold it is to bring back for the enrichment of the home-life of the things without. These draw upon the world in the home's behalf, not upon the home in behalf of the outer world. Just here a word for clubs and club-folks: In that regard which clubs for men or women set upon foot movements for the home's uplifting are they blessed withal.

Sweetheart Who is Also Wife.

Marriages are pulled off later in life than formerly. There is a happy couple in this town wedded at the age of seventeen years. Now a man waits until he is thirty, and a woman waits until she gets a chance. The old way was the best. It saves many wild oats, the devil's crop. It gives the girl an opportunity to share in the building up of the home. Homes can not be bought ready made. They grow. When a home stops growing it is dead. Marriages are sometimes deferred until the man can get his home all prepared, when the couple, grown old, move into a ready-made home. It is like transition from a morgue as compared to the happy furnishing of a cottage full of life and hope. It is a good thing to have a sweetheart early in life, and it is better to have a wife. But the superlative is to have early a sweetheart who is also a wife.

Queer Marriages.

Matches are made in heaven, 'tis said—not brimstone matches, but the other kind, in which no brimstone is. There are some ill-assorted ones down here on earth. Giants wed pygmies, the living skeleton wooes the fat woman, intellectual chaps marry brainless babies. The long procession of queer couples winds down to the horizon of eternity. Blonde loves brunette, the apple dumpling clings to the macaroni, the dude to the woman of sense, the doctor of divinity to the society gossip. The world does not account for these queer contrasts. The world only smiles at them and repeats the dose. Such marriages are not always ill assorted save outwardly. The misfit marriage is a sad affair. No greater punishment could be inflicted than this. Better the Isle du Diable than a brawling woman in a loveless home. Misfit clothing is sold by city tailors at a bargain. The misfit marriage is dear at any price.

A Word for Old Maids.

It is not the duty of every one to get married. Some should stay single as horrible examples. Women formerly got married because there was nothing else to do. Now they get married only when they do not care to do anything else. Marriage is now the last resort. It was once the only one. There is room abundant in the world for old maids. There is none for old bachelors. They should be taxed as much as the year's living of some good woman would require.

Do College Women Marry?

Do college women get married? is a query which college towns hear ever and anon. Do ducks swim—there being water close at hand? The higher education does not drive matrimonial dreams from the sweet creatures' heads. The "Mrs." appears with immediate frequency before the names of the alumnae of the schools. The college girls, with their trained minds, make the best of wives. They are accustomed to obedience. Some philosopher from the seclusion of his study has suggested that marriages among working women are infrequent. Not simply college education but toiling is said to lead away from the altar.

FREE.

I was helpless and bed-ridden for years from a double rupture. No truss could hold. Doctors said I would die if not operated on. I fooled them all and cured myself by a simple discovery. I will send the cure free by mail if you write for it. It cured me and has since cured thousands. It will cure you. Write to-day. Capt. W. A. Collings, Box 69 Watertown, N. Y.

Not so. Work that makes woman masculine does perhaps frighten lovers away, not that in which woman preserves the gentle womanliness which is her chiefest charm. Indeed, say what you will, men like most of all the woman who works. They flirt with the dainty butterfly of fashion, with her unsoiled hands, but the largesse of their heart's devotion is poured at the feet of her who labors, whether in office, store or home. As good wives as the world holds come from the places into which stern necessity has driven the girls to work.

Arranged Marriages.

The "arranged" marriages are nearly always failures. It matters not whether arranged by King or mother, they are usually contrary to the desires of the young people, and hence a dismal disappointment. The old folks have no business making marriages for their children. Yet, while this is true, the children do well to take the old folks into consideration and confidence. There would be fewer mistakes were this the general rule. The English manage the marriage preliminaries better in some respects than their American cousins. In the old country the young man gets acquainted with the whole family. The parents stay in the parlor. The young people make love in guarded way in full sight of the family. Here it is sadly different. The boy and the girl sit in the parlor alone. The old people apologize if they accidentally walk in. She goes with him to the promiscuous dance and returns in a closed carriage at 4 a.m. It is not a surprise that the peach loses its bloom sometimes. In England the parents know every step of the courtship. They are acquainted with the young fellow, his antecedents, disposition and attainments. In America the mother knows some of these things and the father knows—what she chooses to tell him. Hence, the demand for this modern make-believe, the chaperon.

Bridegroom of No Account.

A man does not amount to much at a wedding. He plays second fiddle until the first baby comes and then he plays third. But when he is consulted he never wants to get married in a church. Church weddings are always arranged by a girl or the mother-in-law. The man is usually so embarrassed or ashamed that he wants to have it all over as inconspicuously as possible. Nevertheless, there is nothing more awful than a home wedding. It is usually as stiff as a funeral. The parlor is crowded with kinfolks, present and prospective. The bridal party march in. A baby always cries somewhere in the background. Why do babies always cry at weddings? Then the ceremony is said, and then congratulations, kisses and weeping. All the bliss of the occasion is swallowed up by them and all the solemnity marred by the long line of congratulatory relatives. If the writer ever gets married again—which the Lord forbid—preference is here expressed for a marriage by telephone or in a desert.

Picking up Broken Sticks.

There are some girls in this town who are going to pick up the proverbial broken sticks. When they would have got married their ambitious mammas overpersuaded them, and the weddings were deferred. Now, as the years move swifter, chances are less frequent, and to escape the dreaded doom of old maidhood there will be a sacrifice and subsequent sorrow. Marrying is like joining the church. Better young than late, but better late than not at all.

Happiness of Real Matrimony.

There is no happiness greater than that which true marriage brings. It is not transient or illusive like the will-o'-the-wisp, but shines on with added radiance unto the perfect day. Clouds may fleck the sky and storms may come without the home, but within is peace and sweet content. The passing years but add to the joy. Youth fades, but not the spring of love. Heads grow gray and furrows chase the dimples from the cheeks. But the lovelight is in the eyes, tenderness in the voice and love in the very footstep down to the day when death does them part—yea, more, until the day when death does them unite again.—Columbia Herald.

BETTER THAN SPANKING.

Spanking does not cure children of bed-wetting. If it did there would be few children that would do it. There is a constitutional cause for this. Mrs. M. Summers, Box 183, Notre Dame, Ind., will send her home treatment to any mother. She asks no money. Write her today if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child. The chances are it can't help it.

A New Serial Story, by Mr. Ellis, will Begin Soon.

The Advance Society.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

I believe that at last I have caught up with all the letters I have ever received from friends of the Advance Society. It has taken me a long time, but everything comes out right at last; the trouble is that so few of us are at the end when it comes. If anybody ever wrote me a letter, or ever sent me a penny for our orphan or our missionary, that has not been printed, I wish such a neglected soul would immediately let me know—not by person, as we are not ready to receive company, but by means of the postal service. Of course I would be glad to see every one of you if you came when I were not busy, and didn't try to stay all night; when I say company, I mean people who have to have a room of their own and somebody to sit up to talk to. Here is the very last belated letter I can find in my box. It was written August 4, but I am glad to see it was in 1905. It is not quite as warm now as it was then, but you hardly notice any difference in Arkansas, the climate is so deceptive. Although it is after Christmas—just think of that!—no more presents to look forward to!—everything given—already sick of candy—I'd like to see a poet, I don't care if he had as much genius and was as tiresome as Milton can be at times, get anything poetical out of something like this: "The Day After Christmas!" But what was I saying? I have forgotten. Perhaps it didn't matter. Here is the letter—it is from Lena Beamer, Smithfield, Mo., not Smithville, Mo., please observe: "I send 25 cents for Drusie. I am going to write a letter to the Advance Society before I forget it. I was looking at old papers some time ago, and I came to a Christian-Evangelist. I hunted for 'With the Children.' It consisted of three or four letters and a short story of a cat written by a little girl—all of it taking up a little over one column. I am going to have a letter party August 15 and would be pleased if all the members wrote to me." (Did you all write to Lena?) "Our pastor and mamma organized a Junior Endeavor two weeks ago and we have 37 members." (Wonder how many now? Junior Endeavors have such a curious way of starting out big and falling off till so thin—too thin for anything. I hope yours has stayed fat.)

Ruth Sampsel, Warrensburg, Mo.: "I send in my report. After keeping the rules almost three years I am floundered in the Slough of Forgetfulness." (Let me throw you out a plank of sympathy.) "I am going to begin again and carry on society work with my school work. I send a money order, one dollar, for Drusie. What has become of Oral Fiddler, the gizzard-eater? I haven't seen any of her letters in the paper for a long time." (I do not know where Oral is. Perhaps she married. Perhaps she ate too many gizzards. There is no telling.) "My cat's name is Whitefoot and I don't think the orphan Charlie could get much fur off of him. I have made most of it fly already. I will close for this time." (I hope you will open again in the near future.) Relly Turner, De Barre, Wis.: "What has become of all the old letter-writers of our page? Wish they would come again. This is the first time I ever wrote you a letter, but I've read all the others. I wouldn't write now, only I want to ask my old friends to let me see more of them on this page. Ruth Sampsel and Bertha Beesley, Grace Everest, Manie Bayless, yes, a lot of them keep up the work and get in the Honor List; but why don't they write letters for us? Maybe I oughtn't to say anything, as I never wrote before, but I am going to do better. I have joined the Advance Society this very day, and I intend to write you something about my Wisconsin home pretty soon. I don't know exactly what you mean by learning a quotation every week. How long a quotation, and what kind of one?" (I agree with Relly about wishing the members would write us letters. When I moved to Arkansas, I expected to hear from Ozark. There is where Madge Masters lived—we used to have a big branch society there—does anybody know anything about it? Perhaps Ozark isn't on the map any longer. Any good quotation from a first-rate author, of any length, will do, if the quotation is long enough to contain a thought. In the last report of Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind., there were several stanzas in each quotation. Sadie Pugsley, Woodbine, Ia., among her 12 quotations gave this from Keble: "Hush, idle words and thoughts of ill, your Lord is listening; please be still.")

Drusie R. Malott, Tai Ming fu, North China: "I have been so busy these last weeks that I have completely lost track of letters, but I have a feeling that it is time I should be letting you hear from me again." (I have a feeling that matches yours, exactly.) The letters from the homeland are always gladly welcomed more for their cheery helpfulness than for the checks, though I thank God for the checks he causes my friends to send, too. But you do not know how we appreciate a good letter. I am glad you enjoyed a few days of cream and fried chicken, last summer. Fried chicken is one thing which we enjoy sometimes here, too, for it is one article of food comparatively cheap—cheaper than any other meat, at least. And I bought me a goat and now have the pleasure of a cup of rich goat's milk each morning and evening. How is that for China?" (It certainly beats what I have seen of Arkansas. If that sort of milk is rich I wish the people here would get rid of their cows and set up some goats.) "The Lord is good to us, even in seeing that we have sufficient to eat to keep us strong." (I am certainly rejoiced. If Fitzsimmons had lived on our milk, he'd have been knocked out long ago. But perhaps you are not up on Fitzsimmons.) "When our general director returns to America next summer to bring over a new mission band, I would like to send for some books, but I feel I must not spend for such things the money sent to help me in my work. I do not know what sacrifice has been behind these loving gifts of the homeland friends. When I look at these poor people, I hardly have the heart to spend anything for myself, except what is really needed. These are precious days. My heart is full of praise and joy. The Lord is working in our midst. No, I have never read 'The Cloister and the Hearth,' by Charles Reade.

"Dear Friends of the Advance Society, I send you happy greetings from darkest China. Truly, my heart is glad these days. Why should it not be? For my precious Jesus is with me. Oh, he is so real to me here in this heathen land! And he is so good to me. How he provides and keeps us well, and full of his peace and joy! Then there are the letters from the dear friends—such an inspiration! If you knew how we appreciate your letters, especially when they contain assurances of prayers for us, you would not delay writing whenever the Lord gives you a message, although he may not give you any money to send with it. Do not keep from writing because it is not convenient to send an offering.

"Souls are being saved here; pray for them—it is very hard for a heathen to take a stand for Christ. You have no idea what they have to endure, what they have to give up, and how they are tempted. But the Lord is raising up some blessed witnesses to go out among their own people. People from 13 denominations are in our mission, but we stand on the Bible alone and are preaching 'Jesus Christ, crucified, buried, risen, our living Savior and Coming King.' Isn't it blessed? We had a glorious summer conference and our missionaries are now back at the stations. We opened two new ones and are doing touring work where we have not yet property for a resident station. Altogether we work in 12; last year there were but six. Over this field the Lord in a surprising way helps us stretch our 40 missionaries. Laborers are few—the field is immense—but we are going to hold the fort, by his grace, till the 1906 band arrives. Pray that when our director returns to America he may find a new band of missionaries risen up and ready to come over to help us. Pray much for this band, which we are claiming by faith. And let me assure you that no one need expect to withstand evil in this land, unless he is filled with the Holy Spirit, and knows what it is to be crucified to self. It is a real experience, this being filled with the Spirit, and an experience that every missionary must have if he expects to win souls and be victor in this land of Satan. I remain yours for service, till he come." (And to think that some of our religious papers are arguing and disputing and showing ill temper over the question of the Holy Spirit! What is the Holy Spirit to a man or a woman who can show unkindness and rudeness in its discussion? What avails it if he or she knows exactly all about it and is absolutely sure that other people are mistaken? The point is to have it.)

Well, as I said, Christmas is over, and

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

the cedar tree lies out in the back yard, inglorious. But because nobody is keeping things hidden to bring out for our surprise on the 25th of December, doesn't mean that everything has come to an end. The new year is pegging along, and after awhile—before we know it—there will be another Christmas. What of us in the meantime? Let's keep up our work in the Advance Society. Let's try to be brighter and better by next Christmas than we were this year. It's true we are hard to beat, but we can do it. If you're not reading history and poetry and the Bible, join us; if you are a member, stick to it. The prizes for the best report will be decided February 11, my birthday. Next year there will be fresh prizes offered. In the meantime, what do you think of that idea of Charlie's Education Fund?

A New Year's Resolution.

Hilda Graham was a very sweet little girl, but she was also a very untidy one. Her mother tried in vain to break her of this habit, but Hilda seemed to get worse as she got older. When she came home from school she would throw her hat on one chair, her coat on another, while her school books were generally strewn from one end of the room to the other. She was also very careless about her own little room. Her mother would sometimes spend half the morning picking up after her. She would go to school in the morning half the time with her shoe strings untied and invariably she would leave her waist-belt at home, which often caused her no small mortification at school.

This untidiness of Hilda s vexed her mother a great deal and she wondered why she was blessed with such an untidy child. "Hilda is incorrigible," she was saying to her sister, who had dropped in for a visit, and who as usual found Hilda with her hair flying in every direction and with everything one could think of scattered around her. She was reading one of her story books and paid no attention to her mamma's words.

Just then the door bell rang and Hilda flew to open it and welcome one of her schoolmates who asked her to go down town with her.

When Hilda had gone her aunt said, "Louise, I have thought of a plan which I think will work splendidly. You know my boy, Leslie, is coming to stay with you until New Year's. Well, I will get him to bring his camera, for he is so fond of taking snap shots. Oh, we will fix Miss Hilda, all right!" and she laughed gleefully.

Hilda's mamma consented rather reluctantly to the plan. She did not like to hurt Hilda's feelings, but she said she would do anything for Hilda's good. Soon Leslie came and filled the house with sunshine by his jolly ways. Hilda almost worshiped her cousin and the first week of his visit she was more careful of her appearance and more tidy in her ways. But the second week she relapsed into all her old ways and then Leslie had his chance.

Hilda awoke early New Year's day and found a beautiful blanket of snow everywhere. Then she reached eagerly for the packages piled up at the foot of her bed. The first one was from papa, a beautiful opal ring. "Just what I wanted," she exclaimed, delightedly Mamma's present was also a very acceptable one. Then she came to a queer square package tied up with pale pink ribbons. She smiled to herself when she saw "A Happy New Year, from Leslie," but the smile quickly changed to a frown at what she saw.

Just then her mother came in and Hilda burst into tears. "Oh, mamma, am I as bad as that?" she sobbed, pointing to the pictures which showed her in all her untidiness. "I will never speak to Leslie again. I never thought he could be so mean."

"My child, you must not blame Leslie. It is mine and aunty's fault. I did so want to cure my little girl of untidiness."

"Dear mamma," she whispered, "I will make a New Year's resolution not to be untidy again."—Dorothy Summers.

Boys and Tobacco.

In Germany, the use of tobacco by boys under eighteen is prohibited by laws which are rigidly enforced.

In the Ecole Polytechnique of France it was found that non-smokers took the highest rank in every grade, and that smokers continually lost grade. Hence, the use of tobacco was prohibited in the public schools.

It is also prohibited in our government schools of Annapolis and West Point. Hundreds of boys apply for admission to the Naval Academy, and one-fifth of all who are examined are rejected on account of heart disease, which the surgeons say is caused by smoking cigarettes.

Dr. A. L. Gilson, of the United States Navy, gives the following testimony as to the effects of smoking tobacco upon the students:

1. It leads to impaired nutrition of the nerve centers.
2. It is a fertile cause of neuralgia, vertigo and indigestion.
3. It irritates the mouth and throat, and thus destroys the purity of the voice.

and you will learn what is the "power behind the dough." In the high-class powders it is cream of tartar, extracted from clean, delicious grapes, and that is healthful. In the low-grade powders it is "phosphate alum," or "sodium aluminum sulphate," which is also alum, a mineral acid, and that makes the food unhealthful.

Of what use are twenty-five ounces for twenty-five cents, if eight of these ounces are alum?

Food baked with alum baking powders is found to contain a portion of the alum unchanged!

The continued use of alum made food impairs digestion, causing dyspepsia. When buying baking powder, examine the label and take only a brand whose label shows it to be free from alum.

THE PLACE OF THE COLLEGE.

A distinguished educator at the head of one of our great universities in this country is reported as saying recently that the most pressing problem in American higher education is the future place and character of the college. This is indeed a pressing problem, and if we might presume to contribute a thought toward its solution we would say that the place of the religious college is at the head of those agencies employed by the Church to promote the religious and intellectual training of its members and to equip them for their Christian vocation. It has for its ultimate aim the same goal which the Church has, namely, character-building in the individual and the reconstruction of society in harmony with the kingdom of God. It stands between the church and the university, carrying forward the intellectual and moral training which the home and the church have given, and so establishing the religious character of its students as to enable them to utilize all their future learning and experiences in the service of humanity, which is the service of God.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Insurance.

The New York legislative investigation committee has finished its inquiry into the condition of the life insurance companies. It remains to prepare the report for publication—and, still more important, for the facts revealed to be made the basis for legislative action. The committee was appointed by the New York legislature, presumably to gather information to be used as a ground for action. But whatever regulative measures may be adopted by the legislature of New York, or of any other state, a great deal of good has already been done. Many abuses have already been remedied and a general impression has been created that it is dangerous to be dishonest. This always helps to stiffen flabby backbones and raise the tone of objective morality. The appeal to fear of consequences may not produce the highest character, but if it increases the trustworthiness of those who handle our money for us, it is much to be thankful for. The closing year has been a hard one on reputations. Some of the names which were most highly honored in the commercial world a year ago have become a hiss and a byword. The insurance investigation has contributed to this more than any other one agency.

John A. McCall, president of the New York Life Insurance Company, has resigned and he will be succeeded by Alexander E. Orr. Mr. McCall's parting statement accompanying his resignation, makes no reference to current difficulties, except the statement that he believes his resignation "will make all tasks easier, all burdens lighter, all problems simpler." As proof of the success of his administration, he shows the growth of the company during the fourteen years of his presidency. Assets, dividends and total insurance in force have been almost quadrupled. The number of policies in force is five and a half times as great as it was. Total annual payments to policy holders have been slightly more than trebled. The enlargement has doubtless been very gratifying, but it is noticeable that the increase in the amount paid to policy holders has not quite kept pace with the increase in the magnitude of the business.

A resolution asking Senator Depew to resign his seat in the Senate on account of his part in the transactions revealed by the insurance investigation, was presented last week in the New York legislature, but was withdrawn when it became evident that it would not carry. The resolution was backed by a petition with one hundred thousand signers. The venerable Senator's term will hardly be long enough to expunge the record of his insurance transactions.

Russia.

Admiral Rojestvensky has published a statement to the effect that at the time of the naval battle between the Russian and Japanese fleets in the Sea of Japan, the British fleet was ready and awaiting orders to attack and destroy the Russians if the Japanese were not successful. This statement, published with the sanction of the minister of marine, constitutes a grave charge against England's good faith, even though the actual course of events gave her no occasion for an overt breach of neutrality. The statement is denied in London and an explanation has been demanded.

As to the internal revolution in Russia, there is plenty of news, but nobody knows just what it is. The authorities have wavered between an attitude of conciliation and mildness toward the revolutionists and the policy of stern repression. Lately the outbreaks of the reds have been so serious and their attempts to ferment a general revolution so vigorous that the government has reverted to its traditional policy of meeting all malcontents with bullet and bayonet.

Who Has the Money?

The fact that the wealth of our country is unevenly distributed is quite as familiar to us, in a general way, as the fact that the country, as a whole, is the richest on the globe. Here are a few figures as authentic as any statistics of this sort are apt to be. There are in this country ten private fortunes aggregating two billion dollars, or averaging two hundred millions apiece. A man with a capital of this amount invested at six per cent would have a clear income of just a million dollars a month. Besides these great fortunes, there are seventy others which average thirty-five millions each and aggregate nearly two and a half billion. There are five thousand men who together are rated at fifteen billions, or one sixth of the total wealth of the country, including cash, real estate, stocks and everything else which has monetary value. All the gold in the world would not be sufficient to buy out the holdings of this handful of men unless they would consent to take only forty per cent in gold and the rest in paper. On the other hand, one-third of all the families in the country have annual incomes under $400. One-half have incomes less than $600. Two-thirds have less than $900 a year. In the great bulk of the nation, between the two extremes, there is a reasonably even distribution. The income of the five thousand divided among the four million families who have less than $400 a year would bring their average up to $600. The one thing which, more than any other, puts bounds to the centralization of wealth is the general ownership of land by small and independent farmers. If that should ever be replaced by a system of great estates with tenant farmers, the case would be hopeless—short of revolution.

Religion and Architecture.

It is reasonable to demand that any building which professes to have architectural merit should in some way represent or suggest the chief idea underlying its use. Art is a means of expression, not simply a knack of making pretty things, and if architecture is an art, it must be expressive. An office building should look like an office building; a home should present a homelike appearance; a church should have churchly qualities. A recent writer in the "Review of Reviews" criticises some of the most notable examples of modern Protestant architecture on the ground that the buildings fail to express the distinctive characteristics of the churches which occupy them. The new Broadway Tabernacle does not "express any cardinal thought connected with Congregationalism." The new Madison Square Presbyterian Church (New York) does not embody Presbyterianism, and so on. The writer complains that one of these churches leaves the beholder in doubt as to "what may be the special denomination or sect to which its flock belongs," and he thinks that by the adoption of a more appropriate architecture "a glance at the cathedral, temple, church, chapel or conventicle would be enough to apprise the least attentive wayfarer what denomination worships within." This is an interesting but vicious theory. It is bad art and worse religion. It is true that art is a means of expression; so also is a signboard. Some information is best conveyed through one medium, and some through the other. A church should suggest God and worship, reverence and peace, humility and uplift. This will give the building a different character from a theater or a coliseum or a lecture hall. There will be a difference, too, between the churches of those who practice a plain and prosaic form of worship with a free and easy, impromptu atmosphere and the buildings intended for worship of a more ceremonial and ornate sort. But to make the church house expressive of fine-spun denominational distinctions would be preposterous. How, for example, would the difference between Baptist and Methodist lend itself to architectural representation, unless the baptistery is made an external feature? And how distinguish the fourteen different branches of Presbyterians, or set forth the theological differences between Presbyterian and Congregationalist? The author does, indeed, praise the Collegiate Dutch Reformed Church (New York) for its appropriate architecture, copied from the old buildings of Haarlem and Leyden, but after all, that architecture is only Dutch and not Reformed; its distinctiveness is national, not denominational. No, it is usually bad art to make a picture tell a story, and it would certainly be bad art to make a building do the work of a tract. The real difficulty is that the denominational boundary lines are marked for the most part by mere technicalities and trivialities, the expression of which lies beyond the scope of any art except the art of controversy.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

II.—THE HISTORICAL METHOD.

The modern mind naturally approaches the study of every subject that roots itself back in history by the historical method. This is the well-nigh universal method now in vogue among scholars in their study of the sacred books of the Bible, whether they be classed as conservative or radical. It has seemed to us that the subject of Christian union, which is as old as the Christian Church, and whose underlying principles are much older, can be seen in its true light only as it is seen in the perspective of history, especially of inspired history. Much of the confusion relating to this question to-day comes, we are bound to think, from viewing it too exclusively as a present-day problem to be solved in the light of present conditions. The range of vision is not wide enough, and does not extend back into history far enough, to see the subject in all its bearings. Certainly we can not ignore the present condition of the Church, and the present phase of thought and feeling as relates to Christian union; but it can not fail to be vastly helpful to study how the Church was one in the beginning of its career, the conditions under which it remained one for a period, the causes which subverted that unity, and the influences which have been and are now at work for its restoration. This is what we mean by the historical method of studying this subject.

For the purpose of this study we may divide the whole period of Church History into five great epochs, as follows:

I. The Apostolic Age.

Strictly speaking this would be the period between the birth of the Christian Church, in about A. D. 30, to the death of the Apostle John, about the year A. D. 100. It will be sufficient for our purpose to let the Apostolic Age embrace the first century.

II. The Post-Apostolic Age.

Again having in mind the purpose of this investigation this second epoch of Church History, beginning with the second century, may extend to the Council of Nice, in the year 325. The adoption of the Nicene creed marks a distinct epoch in the history of the Church.

III. The Graeco-Roman Age.

This period extends from the Nicene Council to the Protestant Reformation in the sixteenth century, under Martin Luther. This age of the church, which includes the rise of the papacy, was marked by the first division of the church—that between the Eastern and Western Churches, better known to modern history as the Roman Catholic and Greek Churches. This division occurred in the year 1054.

IV. The Era of Protestantism.

This epoch of the Church, beginning, of course, with the Lutheran Reformation, continues to the present. But it has undergone a change in its spirit and method which justifies a new designation for the times in which we live.

V. The Era of Unification.

This era had its beginning in a reaction against divisive tendencies in the Church, and the introduction of influences and formal movements looking toward unity. Roughly speaking, this era began with the nineteenth century, and will end with the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers. This, we believe, will be followed by another great epoch—that of the triumph of a united Church over the forces of evil, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. But this epoch does not fall within the scope of the present study, save as the sublime end toward which all our efforts for union look, and "toward which the whole creation moves."

This is a rough outline of the plan we are to follow in this study. Each of these epochs of Church History will be studied in order to find out what lessons it has for us who, in these last days, are seeking to solve the problem of Christian union. Some of these epochs will require more careful study, and will yield better results, so far as our present topic is concerned, than others. But each will be found to contribute something in the way of example, warning or suggestion that will help us to understand more clearly the supreme problem which confronts the Church to-day.

"History," some one has said, "is philosophy teaching by example." Is it not even more than that? If there be a guiding Hand, an overruling Providence, shaping the course of human events, does it not follow that history in the long run is a commentary on the divine purpose? History is a great teacher, but in order to learn the lessons it can teach us we must divest ourselves, as far as possible, of all prejudices and preconceived theories that would prevent us from accepting its facts or the meaning of its facts. In this investigation we plead for an open mind and a love of truth that transcends all our reverence for inherited opinions and traditions.

Faith and Education: A Crucial Test.

Religious movements, like individuals, are subjected to tests that serve to show their real quality. Our own religious movement does not have a long history, but it has already been subjected to several severe tests which have demanded all the vitality and cohesive power which we could command to carry it through these several crises. It is yet to undergo one of the severest tests to which any religious movement can be subjected. We have reached a period in our historical development when this test is to be applied to an extent hitherto unknown.

Is the type of religious faith and character which we are producing in our churches and colleges capable of maintaining itself in the face of the highest learning of the university? Are the young men and women who are trained in our homes, in our Sunday schools, in our churches, and in our colleges, so grounded in the great fundamentals of Christian faith and piety that, coming into contact with university training and culture, their religious ardor is not cooled nor their faith undermined? If not, then we must look to the foundations on which we are building. Something must be radically wrong with the religious training that is unable to maintain its robustness of faith and Christian zeal under the influence of the world's highest culture and profoundest learning. This is the crucial test.

We do not believe for a moment that there is any irreconcilable conflict between learning and religion, between philosophy and faith. As a matter of fact, some of the profoundest scholars of modern times are men of sincere, humble, childlike faith and piety. Many of the addresses delivered at the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City were by men of ripe culture, enjoying the advantages of university training, and yet they breathed the spirit of profoundest faith in God, and in his inspired word, in the incarnation, and the great doctrines of redemption. This shows that there is a kind of religious training which produces a faith and a religious character which can subordinate the highest learning, and use it in the cause of Christianity. If it were demonstrated that our churches and colleges can not do that, and that it is safer for us to keep our men away from the universities, it would argue something radically wrong with our aim or methods.

Our readers know that we have been the steadfast advocate, not only of an educated ministry, but of an educated membership. We have been the steadfast friend of our colleges, and have urged constantly the importance of their larger endowment. Not only so, but we have encouraged our young men, when they have gotten all that our colleges can give them, to go on to the universities, and avail themselves of all the benefits of modern scholarship. We have done this in the profound conviction that the minister of the Gospel to-day needs the best possible equipment to fit him for the best work, and that there is no antagonism between faith and learning. By faith, we do not mean a mere intellectual assent to the great verities of religion, but a warm, vital and vitalizing power, generating love and zeal in Christian work, and furnishing a motive for personal sacrifice and self-denial in Christian service.

We are not doubting our capacity to stand this test. We are sounding a warning note. We would like for the young men who are entering, or who have entered into, university life, to know the responsibilities which are resting upon them. They are really demonstrating the quality of the educational and religious work of our colleges and churches. The chief advantage of the college over the university is that it has for its special object the development of the religious character of the pupils at the formative period of their lives. In no one way can our colleges demonstrate their usefulness and their indispensableness so well as in the religious spirit which they infuse into their pupils. Other things being equal that college that does most for the young man's religious life and character, is the one that is fulfilling its mission in the most satisfactory way.

It is well for our colleges to keep their curricula up to the modern standard, for they must do this to accomplish the best results, but it is of even greater importance that their ethical and religious standard be kept up to the New Testament ideal. The best safeguard our churches can throw around the young men and women who pass through our colleges into the universities, is to so endow and equip our own institutions of learning as that they shall furnish a training, both intellectual and religious, that will fit their graduates for the atmosphere of the university.

Why should we not have a number of evangelists from among the young men who have taken university courses, and have university degrees? Is there anything essentially incompatible between the highest intellectual training and the faith and fervor essential to successful evangelism? No doubt such training would give us a new type of evangelism, bearing the same message, but presented in its own way; but there is need of different types of evangelism to meet the wants of different classes of people who are to be evangelized. We believe in the future that we are to have more of such evangelists, but the responsibility for producing them rests largely with our colleges, which should send out their graduates with such intelligent faith in Christ as that they will be able to utilize all their after learning and training as the servants of such faith

To accomplish this end, however, our churches must come into closer and more vital touch with our colleges, and this is the great end and aim of Education Day. Let no minister among us fail to utilize the third Sunday in January to impress upon his congregation the value of Christian education and the importance of patronizing and endowing our institutions of learning.

A Christian Way of Solving a Local Problem.

A few weeks ago the "Globe-Democrat," of this city, contained a rather sensational report of how Bro. G. L. Snively, of this city, had received members of different churches into the congregation at Marine, Ill., where he preaches, without baptism. The "Christian Weekly" copied this report, and asked Brother Snively for an explanation. In the last issue of the "Weekly" Brother Snively explained the incident as follows:

"Here is the situation: We have a weak congregation in Marine. There are but two other congregations in the village, in both of which all the services are in German. There are but few Christian families in the community but are identified with one or the other of these German churches. Those not identified with us have no church privileges, and are in a state bordering on spiritual lethargy.

"I invited these families, who can speak and understand English only, to come and co-operate with us in an effort to have more than one sermon each month preached in English. They were told if they would help employ a minister they would feel greater interest in the services; would feel freer to ask the help of the minister in times of sickness, death and other sorrows; to have their children avail themselves of the privileges of the Bible school; that they would feel more at home around the communion table and would otherwise be greatly helped spiritually

"They were told that a record would be kept of all who would publicly accept their overtures for mutual assistance, and if they removed to other communities, or should a church of their own faith and order be established in or near Marine, they would be granted certificates setting forth their religious works and worth. Seven have come, and others will, and will help us to soon locate a minister there for at least half time. These helpers have no privileges now with us they did not have before, for they were always welcome to our services and the communion table and the Bible school, but they will avail themselves more of these privileges now because of the public invitation."

Brother Snively had consulted with the Editor of this paper and other brethren about the advisability of this step before taking it. This is exactly the method of solving the problem which THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST presented to its readers perhaps ten years ago. It helps to solve many local problems and to prevent an evil under the sun that is altogether too common, namely, the transfer of membership unaccompanied with any change in conscientious convictions of truth and duty. What preacher who understands his high calling would not far rather have people of recognized Christian character affiliate with the church in the manner above mentioned than to come into its membership with mental reservations or at the sacrifice of conscience?

Again: Many of our own members are lost to us every year because they move into communities where we have no church, and feel that they can not afford to be without church privileges and associations for their own sake or that of their children. It would be far better for them, and certainly it would be better for the cause they represent, to become affiliated with some local congregation, as above described, and be publicly recognized as Christian people who, while they hold convictions which prevent them from becoming members, desire to meet and worship with them and share in their church life as far as possible, until such time as they have opportunity of entering a church of their choice, than either to drift back into the world, or accept a creed or name in which they do not believe.

This would save many apostasies from the church into the world, and would serve to promote a better understanding and a better feeling among Christian people of different religious bodies. A number of churches have adopted this method, both among ourselves and other religious bodies, and there is no reason why it should not be adopted by a great many others where local conditions seem to make it desirable. It is the principle of Christian federation brought down to the local congregation, namely, Christian co operation and fellowship as far as is consistent with truth and conscientious convictions. As Brother Snively says, this arrangement conveys no privileges in the way of participation in our worship which such persons do not already have, but it is a formal recognition of their right to such privileges, and carries with it a certain obligation on the part of the minister to visit and otherwise exercise a sort of spiritual watch care over such persons, who, on their part, have something more of the home feeling in view of such recognition.

Notes and Comments.

Chicago is trying a new experiment. Four of its ministers, representing four of the different denominations, have "completed plans to preach and study on a co-operative basis during the next four weeks, for the purpose of solving, if possible, the live moral problems of this great city." The "Tribune," reporting the matter, says that "the ministers have agreed to meet together in one study room and work out the important thoughts to be used in each discourse. Competitive strife will be transformed into a new and helpful fellowship never before heard of in religious work in Chicago. The four themes agreed upon, beginning on January 14, are: "The Betrayal of Citizenship," "The Curse of Intoxicants," "The Gambling Spirit," and "Chicago's Sunday." One of the ministers, speaking of the matter, said to a reporter: "To my notion, it beats church federation all hollow." It is, however, only one phase of church federation, which is capable of taking a hundred forms, according to local conditions and needs. We think the idea of uniform topics of discussion among ministers of a city, and sometimes of the whole country, is a good idea; but the meeting and studying together, of course, must necessarily be limited to localities.

We are glad to notice that the question of the proper spirit and forms of worship is being more widely considered. In a very admirable editorial on "The Preliminary Services" "The Watchman" says:

"We do not appreciate what can be done with simple exercises of worship by proper attention to their possibilities. We turn to novelties for increase of interest and we elaborate exercises to develop more worshipfulness. But one result of this tendency is to make church services long and wearisome so that the sermon does not find its hearers fitted to receive it. If the preliminary exercises were duly respected and honored by the ministers they would prepare the way for the sermon briefly, yet completely, and the simple exercises would not be considered bare and unbeautiful. There is a kind of farming called intensive farming which is an intelligent and thorough cultivation of land which has been exhausted and wasted by ignorance and inattention. More intensive and less extensive worship would be effective in our churches."

The feeling which is agitating many thinkers and workers, that there is needed to-day a less emphasis on mere doctrines and a more ethical purpose in much of our Christian effort, is well expressed by Dr. William Newton Clarke in the following language:

"The living questions are such questions as whether Christianity is able to elevate the ideals of common life, to check the overweening power of money, to limit self-indulgence, to bring in a high standard of honesty, to protect the family from disintegrating influences, to diminish drunkenness and the social evil, to rescue the lost part of the community, to commend religion to all souls, to condemn and banish war, to create confidence in righteousness as a living power, to establish brotherly kindness as the law of life, and whether Christians have any power to come together in effective unity for these large Christian purposes."

Editor's Easy Chair.

In preparing this Educational Number of The Christian-Evangelist the Easy Chair recalls with pleasure the old college days. Who that has ever been favored with a few years of college life does not look back to the struggles, associations, aspirations, and hopes of those years with a glow of tender feeling in his heart? No one ever gets so old, nor so far away from those college days that he does not recall the names, faces and peculiarities of many of his student comrades and especially of his teachers who sought so diligently to guide his feet in upward paths of knowledge and virtue. We appreciate now, as we could not then, the character of these heroic men who, at great self-denial, toiled year after year with little compensation, in the cause of Christian education. We see now, as we could not then, the value of their labors and the meaning of those college years to us. Surely the alumni of our colleges ought to constitute a bulwark of strength for the support of these institutions, to say nothing of that large number of intelligent people who, although they themselves were denied the privilege of college life, are determined that their children shall enjoy the benefits of collegiate training and discipline. We have been, hitherto, all too neglectful of our colleges and therefore of our own highest interest as a religious movement. The Christian-Evangelist has been leading the agitation for a deeper and more practical interest in our colleges, for many years, and we believe that we are on the eve of realizing a genuine revival of educational interest.

The Christian college which grows and brings forth its precious fruit of trained minds and consecrated hearts, year by year, must send its roots deep down into the subsoil of church life, whence it must draw its nourishment, its patronage, and its power. It is equally true that the religious movement that is to be a continuous, flowing, life-giving stream, and not a stagnant pool, must nourish and maintain institutions of sound learning whence it renews its power and keeps in touch with the needs and problems of the time. They are each essential to the other. Religion needs the school house and the school house needs religion. The church must have the college in order to accomplish its work in the world, and the college must have the church if it is to fulfill its beneficent mission in respect to intellectual and spiritual development. Without the college the church would degenerate into bigotry and narrowness. Without the church the college would become a mere instrument for sharpening the intellect, which becomes the more efficient for evil unless it is made the servant of the moral and spiritual nature. The highest use, therefore, of Education Day in our churches, is to make more apparent to the minds of our membership the vital relation between the churches and our colleges, and to bring them into a closer and more sympathetic relation with each other. No doubt there will come out of the realization of this relationship a more liberal financial support and a larger number of students from the churches for our colleges, and especially for the ministerial classes; but the establishment of this relationship, clearly, in the minds of the people is fundamental to the future permanence and prosperity of our colleges.

We have never been very much concerned about a monument. We have said many a time that we would rather live in the grateful remembrance of some one whose childhood had been rescued from orphanage and neglect through our agency, or in the hearts of those who have been helped to a better life through anything we have said, or done, or been, or in the success of some worthy enterprise having for its object the glory of God and the good of men, to whose origin or permanence we have in some way contributed, than to have the costliest mausoleum or towering shaft ever erected above the ashes of mortals. But a very partial reader of The Christian-Evangelist expresses the desire that, when the Editor of this paper goes the way of all the earth, a piece of "pure granite from his beloved southwest Missouri" be placed above his mortal remains, suitably inscribed to indicate that he was "a friend of the cause of union among all God's children." About the granite monument and the inscription, we are quite indifferent; but assuredly we would love to be remembered as one whose love embraced all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and who did what he could, in his day and generation, to bring about the fulfillment of his Lord's prayer for the unity of his disciples. Than this no holier cause ever engaged the thought or energies of mortal man. On its consummation hangs the conversion of the world and the destiny of mankind. And yet against this glorious consummation are arrayed prejudice, evil surmisings, sectarian interests, assumptions of infallibility, worldly ambitions, party names and shibboleths, and a thousand other evil things. But against all these the prayer of our Savior must prevail.

It is strikingly suggestive that the two dominant notes in the Christian world today, at least in this country, are unity and evangelism. This is not accidental. Jesus united them, and what he has joined together let no man part asunder. Unity is not an end in itself, as there is danger of our coming to think. It is a means to an end, and that end is the evangelization of the world. If we would only bear that fact in mind it would "from many a blunder free us, and foolish notion." For instance, if our Lord's desire for the unity of his people is in order that the world may be converted, then it follows that every degree of unity to which we attain, that can be utilized in the way of co-operation for the world's conversion, should be put to that use. In other words, the same motive that prompted our Lord to pray for the perfect unity of his disciples, and us to pray and work for it, should lead us now to co-operate, as far as possible, for the world's conversion. Another thing follows: The local church that is divided can not enter into evangelistic work with any hope of success. Nor can the churches in any given city, though they be of the same religious faith and order, succeed in evangelistic work if they do not co-operate. Does it not follow, too, that all those churches which are standing aloof from any co-operation with their sister churches in the work of evangelizing the world, or our own country, are not united in the sense that Jesus prayed for the unity of his followers? This conclusion seems inevitable.

It follows, therefore, that we have a great deal of work to do among ourselves before we can offer to the world an illustration of the meaning of that unity for which our Lord prayed. Every church that stands aloof from other churches and refuses to co-operate because of some alleged irregularity in the method of organization, is a stumbling block in the way of Christian unity, and to the extent of its influence neutralizes our plea for a united church in order to the conversion of the world. Can we regard those churches which refuse to enter into co-operation with their brethren in missionary work, at home and abroad, because of differences of opinion as relates to organization, and a few petty questions of similar importance, as more Christian and apostolic than those churches which, in spite of names and organizations that are surely extra-Scriptural if not anti-Scriptural, are, nevertheless, uniting hands and hearts and purses, to hasten the world's conversion? This question is one which is well worth pondering on our knees before an open Bible, while we seek to be honest with God and with our own hearts. The study of this question might reveal to us how much unloveliness of spirit, and bigotry of opinion, and neglect of duty, we are willing to cover over with a name, while we are unwilling to extend the same charity to other followers of our Lord who are not numbered with us, and who do not swell our statistics. We are not pleading for less charity at home, because we must "forbear one another in love," but we do plead for the same charity in judging our religious neighbors. Here is where the divine rule applies: "First cast the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see more clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye."

Let the work of unification and evangelization go forward hand in hand. As the one grows the other will increase. It can not be otherwise. The same Spirit that inspires the church to unity equips it for evangelization. The unification of the church and the Christianization and sanctification of men are the products of the selfsame Spirit, working in and through men for the triumph of the kingdom of God. We are on the eve, as we believe, of the greatest period of evangelization in the history of the church since the days of the apostles, and this is because the church is more spiritual, and hence more united, than it has been since those days, and better fitted, therefore, to be used of God for the accomplishment of his purposes. All hail the coming era of church-wide unity and world-wide evangelization!

The Religious Value of Church Music[*] By Harriet F. Smith

But, important as is the special music, the hymn singing by choir and congregation is of yet more moment in the church services. The hymn singing should serve several purposes. It should exert a spiritual influence back and forth among those who sing, uniting them in a feeling of fellowship, helping them to define their thought, lifting them into a higher spiritual atmosphere, and drawing within the sacred circle some who might otherwise be indifferent to religious influence.

Hymns should attract, unite, and uplift. But how? Much of the problem might be solved by adopting the right hymn book. Of the making of hymn books there is no end, and surely there is every grade offered for selection. Some make the mistake of buying a cheap book, yet experience is teaching us, over and over, that in the end cheap things are the most expensive. Cheap books, cheap hymns. Surely God has a right to be worshiped with our best, even if it costs a little more. But how shall we know the good from the bad? What constitutes a good hymn? Here are the tests which you may apply to any hymn: Does it help us to be better Christians? Does it quicken the sensibility and give us a wider outlook? Is it healthy and true in tone? Was it written out of a deep experience? Is it simple, musical, and dignified? Is it sincere as all worship of God must be? Surely we will not be too exacting if we apply some such tests. Our good hymn books are full of hymns which meet all tests most royally.

There are the hymns which we learned as children, and whose words were dear to us before we grasped their meaning; the hymns which we sang at the village church, that brought to our childish faith (that is so pathetically near to sight) visions of a happy land not far from the pleasant meadows which we crossed on our way to church; hymns which whispered hope and encouragement to us when we were perplexed; which rang in our ears when we went astray; whose melody haunted us in our work, and amid the roar of the street. They have been the voices of the angels of God, and we have heard them when we could hear no other warning sound. We have come out of temptation with hymns clinging to us like burrs! The songs of our childhood have remained the key to our past, and the heritage of later years. There is no measuring the power for good of a song that is noble enough to go with us from childhood through every experience of life!

Shall we not give Sunday school children only the best, to take with them into maturer years and business contacts? They should be, they must be, songs of dignity and worth, hymns which bear the very hall-mark of heaven, which Confucius quaintly called "The House of Hymns."

There is a class of hymns in vogue today that can not meet any earnest test, that are not good enough to be sung once, to say nothing of a lifetime, and that savor more of the minstrel than of spiritual things. The original impulse toward the so-called Gospel song was good. It began with Notker the stammerer, of the school of Saint Gall, who lightened and popularized somewhat the oppressive church music of his day, and composed sequences in which the people could join, thus beginning to restore congregational singing. Later Luther introduced hymns of a more popular character than the heavy chorales then used, hymns that could be readily sung by the people. The movement has broken down certain stiffness, but in too many cases it has taken away dignity also. From good beginning we have swung too far, and the taste of the American people has become vitiated. Surely we will soon come to our senses, and purify the music of the church as Saint Gregory of old in the church of the early Christians.

Some would say music must adapt itself to conditions, and where the people are uncultivated and immature, appreciation for the best music and the best sentiment can not be forced. But do we not sometimes underestimate the ability of our young people and the small town churches to rise above a mediocrity that we force upon them? If one does not find good conditions, he can usually make them. It is a nobler thing to pioneer the taste of the people up to a higher plane than to train them once they are there! By their hymns ye shall know them. It is so easy for a song leader to drop into trashy selections, for usually he meets with a louder and livelier response; but the zest of animal enjoyment in a rub-a-dub rhythm and the shout of pleasure in a catchy refrain are not religious enthusiasm, and should not be mistaken for it. The same zest may be seen in a street song of doubtful quality. Such music is dangerously near the ragtime line, religious ragtime, if such an anomaly can exist.

An apparent digression will show why such music is hurtful.

The fundamental elements of music are rhythm, harmony, and melody, representing respectively the physical, the intellectual and the emotional sides of music. Rhythm, the lowest, is physical. Every savage responds to rhythm—his physical self is developed. Animals rock their bodies in time to music. It is a matter of pulse, not mind, not heart. Ragtime is characteristically rhythmical, and makes its appeal to our bodies. It emphasizes and magnifies the lowest attribute of music. It is not even regular, and right in rhythm, but is lawless to the last degree. It seizes upon a syncopated fragment of irregular rhythm, and the whole composition is constructed upon it. It is a sensual distortion; a physical deformitory. It distorts the listener's imagination, and appeals to his instinct for physical movement. It is to music what the dime novel and the street poster are to literature and art, and will, if persisted in, as utterly vitiate the taste.

If our young people are taught such music in church—and an alarming part of the Endeavor and Sunday school songs come under this head—it will drag their conception of Christianity down to the level of the music, and develop bodies, rather than minds and hearts. The same melody learned at Sunday school serves excellently well for a two-step during the week, as has happened in at least one instance of which I know. We are feeding our young people on garbage and trash, and the stalwart hymns are a dead language to them. Calvin said, "Those hymns that are composed for the mere pleasure of the ear, do not behoove the majesty of the church and can not fail greatly to displease God." What conception must a non-Christian listener sometimes gain of Christian experience from some of the hymns he hears sung in church! To our shame it must be confessed that we sing of the most deeply serious things of life as if they were the lightest foam on the crest of a wave. Such lowering of high standards is degrading to the nation. Great music plows deep into the soul and the result is fair and fine fruits. Shallow music merely scratches the surface and the result is weeds. If we as a nation want spirituality to characterize the church services a quarter of a century from now, it is none too early to institute a reformation. The best place to educate along the lines of religious music is in the Sunday school. Children and young people have quick sympathies and few prejudices. The child learns a hymn and goes home to evangelize. The full sense of the hymn may be understood by him only vaguely, but the thought will lodge and develop as character ripens. Perhaps many of us were grown and had tasted our first sorrow before we could sing with truth and understanding, "Nearer my God, to thee, e'en tho' it be a cross that raiseth me, so by my woes to be, nearer to thee."

The grade of the church music will be found to be fixed by the Sunday school, if not the present standard, certainly it determines that of the near future. Here, at least, we need the best books (how often they are the worst!) and the most musical and spiritual leader. If hymn-singing is to be worship to God, we must lay aside what we know to be an unworthy tribute. Too often books are used which in our hearts we despise and know to be poor. Poor selections are kept in use, against which our better natures revolt, but indifference or timidity prevents the demand for better ones. No wonder the music drags in a stupid, poverty-stricken fashion.

For any church to use what it knows to be unworthy, and what it could make better, is so shameful as to be almost blasphemous. Counterfeit coin laid on the plate, lip-service in the prayers, and doggerel and trash in the hymns are on the same low level as tributes of worship. They are all insults to the Father. Yet the door must be left wide open for others to use what may seem to us unworthy, if it is the best they have to offer.

Some hymns are like jeweled chalices, from which noble hearts have drunk the

Man in the Making

By S. S. Lappin

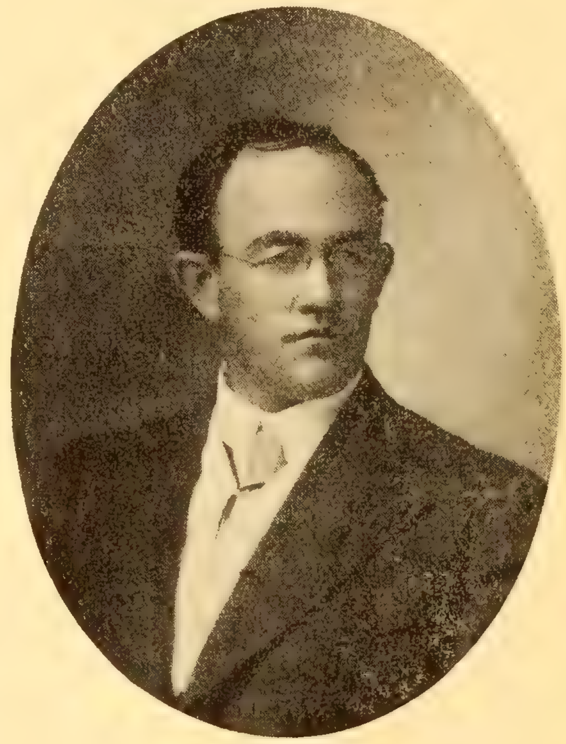
"Man is the noble endogenous plant which grows, like the palm, from within outward." The wise man who uttered these words had watched the process they describe. And in watching man's unfolding he grew wise. In all the earth there is nothing so much worth our while as the study of man's development toward the higher estate which the Creator meant should be his. We believe that Jesus was God in the flesh and that in him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." But we believe also that he is the only perfect revelation of man to himself. When the peoples of the earth had worked right earnestly at the problem of human development; when the attempt to reach the highest by way of the intellectual had failed; when the approach through his will had proved ineffectual, God comes to him with this appeal to the affectional, and he responds. And Jesus stands representative of what man may become by the subjection of his spiritual self to Christ.

The road upward has been long and devious and sometimes dark. The story of man's unsatisfied longings, his fruitless gropings and his earnest petitions in the unending quest would be a pathetic chapter in the history of the race. Many have been the seekers after God. But it remained for this thrifty and vital soul to declare "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father.

Beautiful and expressive is the stanza from Tennyson,

"So runs my dream, but what am I?
An infant crying in the night
An infant crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry."

The human cry for light has shaped itself in the form of a question. Indeed the question has ever been man's sword of progress. The unsatisfied nature of man has led him thus far from animalism. Whatever mystery presents itself he probes it to the core and sounds its depths by means of his enquiring mind. Man's first care is his body. It must be fed, sheltered and clothed. To this he attends first. Hence his first inquiry is one of utility. Of all that is about him he asks, "Of what use is this?" Then by tasting and trying he fits the materials at hand to his use till he is better cared for than any of the animals. But with this he is not satisfied. The intellect in him will not down. The real and the imaginary are ever before him. Falsehood which will mislead him is often clothed in the garb of truth. So, and not so much for safety as for satisfaction, he presses the query, "What is true?" And thus, as though curious to get things straightened out in his world, man moves on his way sorting out truth from error. He has risen above animalism. He is able to think. And now the forest or the hut will interest him, for truth is everywhere. He no longer lives to eat and die, he has a higher work. It is his to think and to meditate upon the truth. But his world broadens. He is a social creature. Much as we may long for the plain home, the open fireplace and the natural blissful life of the past it will not come. We are pushed out into a busy broiling world where men come and go. In our minglings together we jostle each other and sometimes crowd or trample upon the weak in our eagerness. There is danger that the best in man shall be lost in this great mass. But here we are; we can not go back; forward is the only open way. And plainly here is a greater problem than we have met before. As we catch the cry of the despairing and unfortunate; as we see one rise to prominence and power at the expense of many others as worthy in every other way but sheer strength; as hunger and want and famine and disease fall to the lot of the many while the few are content to roll in luxury and idle away their lives in employments that are worth less than nothing, we ask, "Is this right?" Herein is hope. The sword of the thinking animal is drawn. He has challenged the existing evil. A new life is awakening. As the Adam in all men shall die even so shall the Christ in all men be made alive. And this is what is being done when humanity takes up the query, "Is this right?"



S. S. LAPPIN.

The way of man's upward struggle is strewn with interesting relics. Many have not been concerned beyond the primal interest of the body. In such the intellect has atrophied and the real godlikeness has been lost. John L. Sullivan is representative of those who attend to no other development than that of the body. But he is but one of millions. How many a bright intellect is daily dulled and clouded by exaggeration of the physical! Others have beautified and developed the body without expense to the mind. Such have ranked as princes sometimes in the regard of their fellows. But dangerous creatures they are as a rule. Aaron Burr is the type of this class with which we are most familiar. His was a wonderfully developed personality up to a certain point. But he is what man would be had he stopped with physical and intellectual unfolding. Why should we be satisfied when we have given to the world an attractive body and a magnetic mind if in the treasure-house of our being the most lustrous gem of man's nature lies hidden by the uncomely wrappings our hands have failed to remove!

We get a kind of illustrative tableau of our progress in the life of our pioneer foreparents. Their first care was that a roof should be provided and the comforts or necessities of life secured. The rigors of winter, the attack of savage and wild beast, must be met first of all. But no sooner were the rude huts built and the crops planted than the schools were established. Thus in their search for a larger life they followed the line of progress laid out by the race. And the church came next—rude enough to be in keeping with all else but sufficient for the purpose. The home life, the school facilities and the church life were simple and therefore happy; food and clothes, books and teachers, sermons and songs were crude and primitive but they did the work; and I am not sure but they did it better, if we consider that their purpose was to answer the real needs of body, mind and soul, than do some of our more pretentious equipments of the later days.

But never again shall we see frontier life on this earth. The conditions that made it a necessity are gone forever and the voices of those who builded its homes, organized its schools and sang from memory the simple hymns of its worship have been added to the choir invisible. We have been pushed out by the seemingly rude hand of circumstance. But back of the circumstance which we see, is the hand of God which we often do not see, and it is his plan that we are working out in all this. How do the homes of to-day compare with the homes of the past? The open fire has given place to the stove, the stove to the hot-air furnace, the furnace to steam and hot water, while now the residence heating plant is yielding to the central heating plant, and in another generation we will heat our homes by touching a button. And this kind of thing has taken place all about us. The subscription school became a community institution, the public school grew into a great system of schools, the sciences were added to the common branches, high schools came, colleges were founded and universities endowed, better methods have come to us in a constant stream. To-day the high school ranks with the university of a few decades ago, in the extent of its curriculum, while in the kind of work it is far ahead of it. And so with the religious life. Our buildings are better, our grasp of God's revelation is larger, our insight into the spirit and teachings of Jesus is more vital, and religion has full access to fields that were utterly closed to its entrance a century ago. And the opportunity for man's full development was never so favorable as now.

But we still have our problems. One of the chiefest of them all is the provision for the complete unfolding of human nature. We have Sullivans enough. Aaron Burrs have palled on our taste. We want men and women who can be strong without being ignorant; who can be strong and intelligent without being corrupt. We have made some progress in the matter but the problem is far from its final solution. It is not the body nor yet the mind that is unprovided for, but the spiritual self. And to leave this unbroken fallow is to let our best capital lie uninvested. The difficulties of the problem are great. The public school system can not teach the truth concerning God and Christ. It ought to be so that truth could have place with other truth, for all truth is one, but at the present time this, the most important of all man's store of knowledge, must be taught elsewhere. Three courses are before the church if she would minister to the soul's hunger while physical and intellectual development is going on. She can supplant the public schools with a more complete system; she can duplicate the public school with one as good where spiritual truth shall be taught, or she can supplement the work of our present educational institutions. The first is neither patriotic nor sensible, the second is being tried with very questionable results, while the third appeals to us as the only feasible line of action.

Our work then is to supplement the present provision for human education or unfolding. In this we are already at work. Our Bible schools or Sunday schools are our best effort as yet. We endeavor to gather the young life of the communities together for a time each week. We surround the boys and girls with a favorable environment. We read and discuss a portion of God's word and sing hymns of praise and exhortation. In addition to this we teach the young to engage in practical work for the heathen and the helpless of other communities and lands. All this is good. It is far short of what is needed, as the results show, but it is good. This is our effort to supplement the instruction given in the public and high schools. Then for the universities we hear talk of endowed lectureships and professorships, possibly with suitable buildings and equipment, adjacent to the great centers of learning. This, too, is a wise plan if the thing taught is positive Christian truth and not negativism or speculation. But the university Bible chair is a good way off yet, at least for those of us who plead for the return to Christ. Sufficient funds are not available and if they were we could make better use of them at this time. Then it may be questioned whether there is not a better and safer place for the average of our young people than the great university. We are at the stage when the work done in the colleges should be supplemented. The Bible schools are progressing nicely and we are caring for the boys and girls. The university matter, while on the horizon, is not pressing us as yet. But what of our youth who want a year or two or a complete course in college? Where shall they be sent? And what will be the effect of their environment on the things we have taught them in their tenderer years? In many schools are professors and instructors who covertly smile, if not openly sneer, at Christian teaching. And this is not because of their superior wisdom, as our boys and girls may be led to believe, but because of their own unsymmetrical development and their woeful lack of Christian knowledge and conviction. Better our boys and girls go into life with a lesser equipment of knowledge than that they be turned from the light of God in its quest.

There appears to be no way at the present time but to make strong our own colleges. The service that these poorly equipped schools have rendered can never be estimated. Wherever a graduate or former student of one of our colleges is, there it is easier to build a church and to lead men to the truth. But for these schools what would have been the progress of our great plea? In what ranks would our great men be moving now? Where are the sons and duaghters of Mr. Garfield religiously? Where would they have been had they, like him, had their training at Hiram? This, then, is the way out. It is high time that the burden of bearing this work forward were laid upon the shoulders of our whole brotherhood. Too long a few have borne the sacrifice while others were disinterested because uninformed. Education day is the time for effective work. Foreign missions has won its place among us by having a time and a regiment of friends to press its claims. Our college work will have to do the same. On the third Lord's day in January, a brave and intelligent voice should tell from every pulpit in our great brotherhood how our educators have labored and prayed and waited till we should understand the need and come to the rescue. Such an offering as our people can make and not even miss it would be a mighty impetus to our institutions. The time has come when the words of the old oration, "We must educate, we must educate, or we must perish by our own prosperity," apply to us. We must educate by means of the pulpit until our people shall no longer look askance at these pressing calls from the men we have pushed to the front to serve for us. Our churches are ready for the training. God forbid that any should cry craven at such a time from any selfish motive, or from any purpose of mistaken business policy. God's people respect the man who is not afraid to show them the right way to serve. And God's blessings are rich for the minister and the church that will be true to the best that is in them.

Does China Move? By W. P. Bentley

China is a synonym for national somnolence. She came rightly by the reputation by ages of drowsiness. But there is some evidence that her waking hour draws nigh. Her movements are slow, as become her massive proportions, but they are unmistakable. The prophetic eye may detect evidences of stirring vitality.

The past year has shown a remarkable extension of Japanese influence in China. Their success in the present war has increased their prestige. The Board of Commerce is directed by a Japanese. They have installed telephone service in Peking and Canton. They are building gunboats and training the police of China. They are in every province, and are very active in the translation of books and the dissemination of literature. Moreover, there are more than 1,700 Chinese students in Japan, and more are constantly going. This is several times as many students as are in all other countries combined. Those who have returned from Japan have even now made themselves felt, and in one province have almost caused a rebellion. And the growing influence of Japan in China, while we may not wholly welcome it, is a pretty sure sign that things will not remain in the old comatose state.

The number of pieces handled by the Chinese post office last year was 72,150,000. There was an increase of nearly fifty per cent in one year. There are now 1,192 post offices. And all this, although China is not in the Postal Union. No doubt she soon will be. The above progress denotes her appreciation of one of the most potent agencies of modern civilization. The rails are now laid from Peking to Hankow (with the exception of the Yellow river bridge) on what is one of China's most important lines of railway, reaching nearly half way across the country from north to south. The Germans have completed another railway in Shantung province. An English company has begun the line from Shanghai to Nankin, the most important line in China.

One of the most encouraging signs is the wide diffusion of translations of western literature, the demand for which is insatiable. There are now 157 daily, weekly and monthly journals. Not only are they printed, but they discuss all public questions with increasing intelligence and independence. Such is its power already that it is being subsidized by such countries as Japan, Germany and France.

In the matter of education, the fact of the establishment of fifteen provincial colleges may be noted. And mechanical, agricultural, police and military schools are springing up everywhere. Thousands of Chinese are studying English. And an increasing number are studying Japanese and German. Military education is becoming popular. The soldier has always been despised in China. And this military spirit is one of the most surprising manifestations of the new life. We can stand some of this if it give to China manliness and patriotism.

There has been a steady progress in all departments of missionary activity. Dr. Morrison, the famous "Times" correspondent, says of mission work in China, at the present time: "The outlook has never been so promising. Among the missionaries there is a marked movement toward union. Bible colporteurs have penetrated every corner of the empire." Dr. Morrison is personally an agnostic, and is said to record cold facts, so his testimony has especial value.

Mission schools are crowded with pupils. Missionaries are finding especial favor among the officials. The services of medical missionaries have won imperial recognition, and the empress has contributed $65,000 to the Red Cross Society. Thousands have been added to the church. God is giving peaceable and quiet times in China now, and the kingdom visibly grows apace.

Now, all these demonstrate that China is at last arousing herself. Her population is increasing, and she has lately repeopled large areas devastated by the Taipings and the Mohammedans during the wars of the last half century.

Her wealth is increasing. She faithfully meets her financial obligations. Her last loan was very largely over subscribed in London.

What a magnificent mission field! I pray my brethren to withhold nothing from her, of men, or money, or prayer. She will repay a thousand times. Invest in her—invest largely. Young men, give her your lives. She needs you now. She is not a dying, but a coming nation. We would have her a Christian nation.

Our Colleges and Our Movement

A Symposium

The Christian Church and Ultimate Protestantism.

All great movements of the mind and of the soul in the last two thousand years have originated in the colleges and universities. Many practical undertakings, of course, have had their origin outside of the learned communities, but it is to college and university men that we owe all advancement of a purely intellectual and spiritual character. If this statement, then, will bear investigation, it follows, does it not, that the present problem of church union, in its final analysis and its outcome in the ultimate Protestant church, must be dealt with either directly in college communities or by university men? Intellectual and spiritual history repeats itself, like all other kinds.

What, therefore, is the duty incumbent upon the Disciples of Christ who are set for the solution of this problem, church union? It seems very evident that it is their most sacred duty to build up institutions of higher learning, where men can be trained to grapple with this most difficult of modern religious problems. In reality, we have but begun to build colleges, and as for real universities, we have them only in embryo. There is, however, a hopeful sign or two in the east. The deep interest taken in educational affairs in our conventions of the last five years is marked even to any casual observer. Loyalty to our colleges among our church families is increasing. Gifts from our people, who are not yet rich but are becoming rich, also give evidence that the educational problem is gaining increasing recognition. Although we have not yet come out into a large place, yet shadows over our educational institutions are lightening and the future is full of hope.

The Necessity of Moral and Spiritual Culture with Intellectual Training.

Intellectual attainments are the more dazzling, but character is fundamental. He builds on the sand who builds without it. Learning is expedient; character is essential. Without the former one may still be a man; without the latter one is somehow sub-human.

Character comes by the way of moral and spiritual culture. What one calls "learning," mere "savantism," does not give it. Character is God in the soul. "If I speak with the tongue of men and of angels and have not character I am become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal. And if I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith so that I can remove mountains, and have not character, I am nothing."

Education without ethics is a menace to the man and his community. The state that builds the school and bars the Bible is a foolish mother, nursing children to her own sorrow. Our country is already reaping the harvest of a one-sided, merely intellectual, sowing, in her great horde of quick-witted boodlers, grafters, perjured officials, and high traitors to financial and political trusts.

Such a man as Governor Joseph Folk is conspicuous among seventy millions, not because he is brilliant, but because he is brave. He regards his oath. He prays, and honors God. A recent able character sketch declares that he is fundamentally religious.

If we can not carry the Bible into the schools we must carry it to them. We can easily carry it into our church schools. But what about our state schools where the majority of the students are, and where growing majorities of them are bound to be in the years just at hand?

Columbia, Missouri. W. J. LHAMON.

Noblesse Oblige.

When our fathers lifted their voices for the union of all Christians to the end that the world might be evangelized, not only that position but the mere knowledge of the heart of Christianity which it showed them to possess, obligated them to enter upon a two fold educational propaganda. First, they must show the Christian world the sin of its divisions and the way of union. Second, they must show the world lying in sin the Lamb of God. To carry out this two fold program it was necessary that there be continuous and thorough education of all those who espoused this cause. The homes of that time and the churches, the business places and social gatherings of the Disciples were all educational, and the crowning of that educational system was found in the schools and colleges that were established especially to complete the training of those who should give their lives exclusively to the ministry of the word. No one will claim that we have always adhered as faithfully to that high purpose as we should. Education day affords us an opportunity for lifting the standard again. Let us make the four years that remain of the century a thorough college course for all our people that will bring them to a worthy commencement in 1909, with every school worthily endowed and patronized by not only all our own who should be in college but by as many more from other homes, who shall come to seek the exceptional advantages offered by well-equipped Christian schools. Let us remove the shame of sending our children to secular and denominational schools when our schools should be attended by thousands of children of worldly and denominational parents.

W. R. WARREN.
Centennial Secretary.

The Christian College and Missions.

I have just closed an interview with a young woman who wishes to fit herself for the mission field. She has not yet completed a high school course, and seemed very much surprised when I told her that no mission board would think for a minute of sending her without it, and that they would probably urge her also to complete a college course, as well as the Bible course which she wanted. Perhaps hundreds of young people are doubting the wisdom of mission boards in demanding large proficiency in educational lines.

I know that the boards are right, not wrong, in this. If I do not know this, I do not know that 2 plus 2 are 4. If any reader doubts this truth, I agree to furnish him a demonstration of it. My space for this article forbids it now. It seems that Satan is doubling the difficulty of our task upon the mission fields. The great pagan nations are philosophers, and their religion is a false philosophy. At present there is being disseminated in those lands all the false thinking of Christendom. To successfully carry the Gospel to these people we must have men and women able to break down false philosophy of all kinds, and able to present the Gospel in a masterly way. This spells in large letters, "Reliance of the missionary cause upon the Christian colleges."

ALFRED M. HAGGARD,
Drake University.

To Ignore is Inexcusable.

While I do not believe in adding more days to the calendar of days in our missionary program, it does seem to me that it would be admirable to use the third Sunday in January to emphasize our great need for advance in the realm of educational work. Our colleges are not receiving from

INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION
How Food Headed off the Insidious Disease.

The happy wife of a good old-fashioned Mich. farmer says:

"In the spring of 1902, I was taken sick—a general breaking down, as it were. I was excessively nervous, could not sleep well at night, my food seemed to do me no good, and I was so weak I could scarcely walk across the room.

"The doctor said my condition was due to overwork and close confinement and that he very much feared that consumption would set in. For several months I took one kind of medicine after another, but with no good effect—in fact, I seemed to grow worse.

"Then I determined to quit all medicines, give up coffee and see what Grape-Nuts food would do for me. I began to eat Grape-Nuts with sugar and cream and bread and butter three times a day.

"The effect was surprising! I began to gain flesh and strength forthwith, my nerves quieted down and grew normally steady and sound, sweet sleep came back to me. In six weeks' time I discharged the hired girl and commenced to do my own housework for a family of six. This was two years ago, and I am doing it still, and enjoy it." us the attention or sympathy which they deserve. Even if we can not liberally endow them, we can, at least, say that we believe in them and that they have our very best wishes. That is something. To have them ignored, as is done in a great many of our churches, is certainly inexcusable. My own wish is that there may be a revival of enthusiasm in behalf of all the colleges, for the small college is unquestionably making a splendid contribution to the working force of our ministry and to the various pursuits in life which are denominated secular. You are doing well, it seems to me, in making one issue of your paper an educational number, and I sincerely trust that a wide interest shall be awakened. E. L. Powell.

The Sunday School and the Christian College.

Why not get the Sunday school and the Christian college nearer together? They certainly need one another. The college needs the boys and girls of the Sunday school as the material for its products. It needs the religion on which the Sunday school is based. It needs the evangelistic inspiration of the Sunday school to turn its students to the Lord year by year. The Sunday school needs the strong intellectual demands of the college. The methods of the college in their form can not be introduced into the Sunday school, but the atmosphere of intellectual effort and attainment breathed in the college can be made more sensibly that of the Sunday school. Thus the work done by these two departments of Christian service will be found more and more to be one work. So it ought to be. So it will be when both Sunday school and college undergo some modifications needed in each. J. H. Hardin.

College Endowment.

That our colleges ought to be endowed does not admit of argument. This is a question to which there is only one side. If we are to have schools that are, in fact, colleges, they must be endowed. It is not possible to defray the expenses of a school of college grade and equipment from fees paid by students. The educational work of the Disciples has not kept up with their evangelistic and missionary efforts. Their educational work must be brought up to a higher plane, to a greater efficiency, or they will fail to accomplish their high and holy mission. We have come to a crisis in our educational work. To be stationary is impossible. The Disciples must go forward, or backward, in this phase of their life. I believe that the movement will be forward and upward. This can only be by endowment of their institutions of learning. B. B. Tyler.

Benefits of Christian Environment for Intellectual Culture.

This is the age of machinery. Not infrequently educational methods develop men who are highly specialized machines.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND READERS BY THE CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The Christian-Evangelist wishes to co-operate to the full extent of its ability with Brother Warren and other members of the Centennial Celebration Committee in all those undertakings whose consummation will make splendid the Pittsburg convention in 1909. Since its zeal for Christian evangelism, its devotion to all the principles advocated by the fathers of this great Restoration movement, and its loyalty to the truth as it is in Jesus, as its editors have been given light to see the truth, can hardly be intensified, we believe our larger usefulness to the brotherhood must come rather through a wider and larger circulation of the paper than through radical changes in editorial policy. Accordingly we ask all who feel that The Christian Evangelist can help to achievements worthy the anniversary services to be celebrated three years hence, to help us make the paper a welcome visitor, a preacher's true assistant in 100,000 homes before October of 1909.

Heretofore, perhaps, we have relied too much on our friends for the extension of The Christian Evangelist's influence. Hereafter the attempt after this larger influence will have active leadership from within the office. All that can be done by us will be cheerfully done to realize the aspirations of thousands who love the Kingdom and who believe that its boundaries would soon be wide-flung, and the Lord's will be more completely done, if 100,000 of these Gospel heralds were read every week.

Below we print a few of the many tributes every day brings to the office. Read Brother Fisher's apostrophy. We ask our friends now to make proof of their love by helping us realize this 100,000 goal.

How the thought of these great achievements thrills one! The significance of such conditions so devoutly to be wished! It would mean not simply a center of influence touched here and there by the life blood of our Master Enterprise, but then would be possible the vitalizing of the whole body—the whole round and circumference of "The Brotherhood" made to feel the throbbing currents of this rising tide.

It would mean information, regularly, adequately, and this would mean inspiration, and commendable expression could not but follow in all our enterprises—evangelistic, missionary, educational. It would mean practically every family and each individual reached by the Christian press, a condition longed for by every pastor; it would mean multiplied efforts in every line of our activities as a people, for to know what the great brotherhood is doing is to be fired to do also and none but God can say what results would follow in bringing "His will to be done upon earth" as each family would come to catch the wonderful evangelistic fervor with which these days are fairly thrilling. Such achievement would mean for our brotherhood the realization of their vision for the centennial year, but more, it would mean a worthy contribution upon our part toward working out the "Far flung purposes of God," when at last the "Kingdoms of this world are to be the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ." It ought to be done and therefore can be done. God speed the day!

Education Day among the Disciples of Christ comes once more on the calendar. It should be one of our high days. We need its inspiration and its practical lessons. The most pressing problem in American higher education, says President Butler, of Columbia, is the future place and character of the college. A study of our educational institutions and their needs would convince us that the first place in our thoughts, as we reach toward the goal of 1909, should be our colleges. The interests that are most important and yet most neglected are the ones that should forge to the front, and these belong to our schools. We have ignored them too long. We owe to them the very life of the cause we plead. We should be poor, indeed, did we efface their work from our history. We should awake and move as one man to their long deferred support. We honor them; we should endow them.

Personally I can speak of the value of one of our own institutions and what it did for me. As a youth of seventeen I entered Bethany. For three years I sat at the feet of such men as Pendleton and Loos. With limited means, I could never have known such benefits had not others, through their liberality in the founding and maintenance of that blessed seat of learning, made it possible. I am everlastingly grateful not only to my instructors, but to all the faithful men and women of the Church of Christ who made Bethany. It was a fountain of blessing to one young man eager to fit himself for the work of the ministry; it has been such a Castalian spring to the whole body of our people. It has given us teachers and preachers and missionaries and workers of every class, and the whole world has felt the beneficent influence of every man who has ever given a dollar to help on its work among men. What Bethany has done all our schools are doing. Hiram, Kentucky University, Drake, Butler, Eureka, Cotner, Texas Christian University—all our institutions have the same great purposes and are steadily proving their useful mission in the church and the world.

We read of the decline in the number of students for the ministry. In 1890 there were 6,029 young men in Protestant schools fitting themselves for this work; in 1903 the number is reported as 5,628. The number of churches has been growing and church members have increased steadily, yet the students in our institutions in 1903 were 401 less than in 1890. Among the Disciples, however, there was a steady increase from 468 in 1890 to 807 in 1900, and 907 in 1904. We are grateful for this showing. Still, the ranks of our ministry are far from being full. Hundreds of our churches are pastorless. It is a serious problem how to get the best men for the pulpits and the mission fields. The harvest is plenteous, but laborers are few. What is the remedy?

One thing, our colleges must be made attractive to our young men. In faculty and equipment the school must be up to date, equal if possible to the best. The young people of our homes will not patronize our own institutions unless they can furnish such education as the times demand. Other schools will attract them, and they will in all probability be lost to us; certainly they will come under influences less favorable to the work of preparation for our own ministry. First the ministry should be made more attractive to our young men. The real evils: Small compensation, uncertain tenure, excessive criticism, restraint of freedom, that men complain of, must be removed; and our young men be made to realize the great work to be accomplished in this age by the well-equipped, consecrated Christian minister, and the imperative call of the Master for such workers. The student volunteer movement shows what may be done to recruit the ranks of the ministry. Let our young men know the need and the opportunity and hundreds will spring to the front, as in the call for volunteers in the Cuban war, to do battle for humanity; and it would not be a bad idea if our general conventions would recommend a day when all our preachers should be requested to preach a sermon setting forth the claims of the ministry upon the young men of the church. Then these students should be influenced to attend our own schools of the prophets, where the very atmosphere and traditions and all the instruction and fellowship shall tend to develop and train and strengthen their holy purposes, and inspire them to fullest consecration as well as noblest preparation for this high calling in Christ Jesus. Consecration is as important as erudition in the preparation of the preacher to deliver his message.

Our position and influence as a people is in direct ratio with the work done in our schools. The young men and women occupied in the 500 colleges of America are to go out as the leaders of the land. It is one of the direct boasts of Yale College that the men who founded it, founded it, as they declared, to bring up leaders for their state; and who can measure the work of William and Mary in the early history of the republic, supplying as it did presidents, judges of the Supreme Court, Cabinet officers, Senators and members of Congress in great numbers? At the beginning of the nation we had four colleges for 3,000,000 of people. There are now more than 500 colleges for 80,000,000. Then we graduated 100 young men out of the 3,000,000. In one year now we graduate 18,000; that is to say, we now have 125 colleges where we then had one, and we graduate 180 annually where we then graduated one. And in all the advances of the century it is the well trained men, the college bred men, the thinkers, that have brought the triumphs. People don't pick up gold, repeating watches in heaps of pebbles in Sahara. Wireless telegraphy did not spring out of an uncultured brain. Scientific men in their laboratories, scholars in their closets, have worked out the problems. Bachelors of Arts, Masters of Arts, have after all led in the world's advances. The world wants leaders, that is, it wants men, trained men. It wants them in all departments of service. Where does it find them except in the ranks of those who have received what men term a liberal education? The capabilities of a race are measured not by its mass, but by the achievements of its individuals. Who thinks of the English-speaking race without thinking of Shakespeare, Bacon, Newton, Milton, Burke, Chatham, Gladstone, Tennyson, Browning? Educated mind controls the world. Cicero, Pitt, Sumner, Garfield; Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Walter Scott, Robert Richardson, William K. Pendleton were men of power because trained men, cultured men, men equipped by liberal culture for large things.

This larger and higher learning the church has provided. The college in this land is the child of the church. The seal of Harvard University, the oldest on the continent, bears the legend so familiar to us to-day in the motto of the Christian Endeavor Society, Christo et Ecclesiae. One of the hymns sung at the inauguration at Harvard was Luther's, "A mighty fortress is our God." "The education of the English and Indian youth of this country in knowledge and godliness was John Harvard's expressed purpose, and among its rules was: "Every one shall consider the main end of his life and studies to know God and Jesus

"After three days use of Postum I could find no difference so far as taste and flavor went, between it and the old kind of coffee. After 2 weeks' use I preferred it to coffee.

"After 3 weeks I lost my nervousness, the insomnia which had troubled me was entirely relieved, and I began to enjoy the best and finest of sleep every night—and that condition still continues.

"After two months use I got rid of my dyspepsia and piles, and they have not returned to plague me.

"Neither I nor any of my family would to-day think for a moment of going back to the old kind of coffee. When we entertain we give coffee to our guests, but we drink Postum ourselves, not only for its nutritive properties, but because it has become a truly delicious beverage to us.

A Visit to the Texas Christian Lectureship

CENTRAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH, DENTON, WHERE THE LECTURESHIP WAS HELD.

In the report published last week of my visit to the Texas Christian Lectureship I briefly referred to a meeting of what are known as the "loyal brethren" or "Firmies" with the members of the Lectureship, who are designated as "Digressives" by those who are best known to us by the term "antis," because of their opposition to the use of the organ, missionary societies, and other things which they claim to be unscriptural. The occasion of this meeting was a paper on the program of the Lectureship on the subject of "Christian Liberty in Methods of Christian Service." This had been prepared by Chalmers McPherson, of Waxahachie. Brother McPherson has a thorough knowledge of the views held by both those who oppose and those who are in favor of the use of these things. He was asked prior to the meeting of the Lectureship whether any discussion of the paper would be permitted on the part of the brethren whose views are different from ours and he readily consented, so far as he himself was concerned, to their taking part in the discussion. When the matter was brought before the Lectureship the members gladly agreed to permit such a discussion and Bro. R. R. Hamlin, who had been appointed to lead, yielded his place, with the consent of the Lectureship, to any brother whom the "loyal brethren" should designate. There was an effort to have a debate, Dr. A. J. Freed having submitted in writing a proposition to this effect, to Brother McPherson, but the latter declined as the theme suggested was entirely too general. Then F. L. Young, who is the minister of the Pearl Street Christian Church, was selected by the "anti" element to lead the discussion on Brother McPherson's paper, and instead of the fifteen minutes which were allowed other leaders of discussions, Brother Young was given double that time to reply to Brother McPherson.

Brother McPherson's paper was a straight-out-from-the-shoulder statement, though it was offered in the kindliest way. There was no effort on his part, however, to compromise, for he evidently felt that the only compromise could be the right of individual interpretation and the exercise of Christian liberty. Replying to those who contend that the use of the organ, of organized missionary work, and other things to which they object, are not mentioned in the New Testament, he said that these same brethren use many things that are not known to the New Testament. For instance, these brethren have their religious papers and religious editors, but there is no mention of such things in the Bible, and he believed there was just as much Biblical authority for the Texas Christian Missionary Society as there was for the Gospel Advocate Publishing Company. Taking up some of the objections, Brother McPherson said that the "Conscience argument" was a weak one. He did not see why he should abandon his plan of work that he and his brother should be at unity. Again, by their published decrees and actions, these brethren had made the use of missionary societies a test of fellowship. Again, the matter was just as much a question of conscience with him as it was with them. The "Meat argument" he recognized as a more practical one yet he asked whether he should show the greater loyalty to his weak brother or to the great Cause of Christ and the greater church. Often the grieved brother was only a weak or ignorant one who ought to know better. As to the "Completely furnished" argument (2 Tim. 3:16) he said that "every good work" is not limited. Assuredly the Scriptures do not propose to give every plan for every good work for every man. The world certainly could not contain the books that would have to be written in order to do this. He believed it was a safe principle that when the Lord commands us to do a work and reveals no plan, the command carries with it the obligation for us to do it in the best possible way that does not conflict with what has been definitely revealed. He granted that liberty is not license and it is limited by the law of expediency, and there are some things lawful that are not expedient. He believed strongly in "holding to the unities," "one Lord, one faith," etc., but he wanted them to be the only unities to bind.

Brother Young hardly touched the argument of the paper at all. He insisted that works of philanthropy and missions should not be turned over to societies but should be attended to by the different local churches. He argued also that statistics prove that the methods of organized missionary societies have been a flat failure in many fields. He explained some reasons for the success of the work of his church in Denton, and said he believed in teaching the people that so many oysters for so much money was not intended as a means for the conversion of the heathen.

A remarkable speech followed from Dr. Fleming, who is one of the faculty of the "Loyal" brethren's college at Denton. Dr. Fleming had not been in Texas very long, but said that the conditions there were enough to cause the angels to weep. Love, he declared, was the only remedy, but how was it to be applied? His remark that the devil was at the bottom of this whole thing somewhere was heartily re-echoed by the members of the Lectureship. The problem, he said, was that there are two consciences at war and over a question that is supposed to be sufficient ground for division. For himself, he did not believe this. Then he told us about a church for which he had preached recently in Texas. So divided was it in spirit that it seemed the members were only waiting to find the place where to saw the house in two. He began preaching brotherly love and mutual tolerance, and urged that those who wanted to give to the missionary society might do so but should not fall out with other brethren who did not, and vice versa. He insisted that extreme men should be kept out and it was agreed that these things should not be made a bone of contention. This course led to harmony. At the close of Brother Fleming's speech the members of the Lectureship were called upon to say whether they would be willing to fellowship the "anti" brethren on such a basis and they arose, to a man, in the expression of their desire to do this. Immediately the congregation burst into a verse of "Blest be the tie that binds."

In a brief closing comment Brother McPherson said that the remedy for this state of affairs was that neither party should read the other out of the church, but that there should be a recognition of individual Christian liberty. When people want to settle questions, he said, there is a way to settle them.

There was a large attendance of members of the non-progressive church and students and teachers of their college. That Dr. Fleming was far in advance of some of his brethren in the matter of Christian courtesy and toleration was suspected at the time and this has since been made manifest by the action of the Board of Regents of the Denton College, for Dr. Fleming was presumably tried and condemned for daring to give recognition to the individual's Christian liberty. His resignation of his position was called for. Such a course or procedure ought to open the eyes of some of the young men and women who heard the discussion as to the intense bigotry that blinds many of these brethren who, in other respects, have very much to commend them. Probably little space will be given to this discussion in any of the organs that are identified with the "anti" element. It is the more needful, therefore, that Brother McPherson's paper should be brought to the attention of as many people as possible, and we trust that it will be put into tract form and very widely scattered in those parts of the country where it can do very needed service.

It was to be expected that the program should provide for some discussion of evangelism, and A. E. Ewell, of Bonham, considered the attitude of the Disciples of Christ to union evangelism. Our mission is to a divided church, he said. We can not win the religious world by conquest, though we have had a reputation for some sheep stealing. The condition of the world demands union effort, and it is our duty to use opportunity, he argued.

There were several essays discussing the relation of the Disciples to modern conditions. In answering the question, "Do the times demand a restatement of our position?" Prof. J. B. Eskridge, of Texas Christian University, said it was easy to say yes, or no, but not to give reasons. Change, he maintained, is heaven's divinely appointed order. We see this in business and commercial life; science, too, demands readjustment, as do philosophy, psychology, metaphysics, and even language. And we in religious matters should not be less wide awake. Our fundamentals, so far as they are founded in truth, will stand; the problem for us is to alter the terminology, not the credo. Some of us, he said, are becoming so far entrenched in the matters of shibboleth that if you meet these people on a train you can tell by the language each uses whether he is a reader of the "Standard," the "Century," the "Gospel Advocate" or the "Firm Foundation." The discussion that followed showed that the "innovators" and those who would "faint at the prospect of laying out a new program," to use the phraseology humorously suggested by Brother Homan, do not understand each another. For instance, Brother McPherson wanted to know some of the things wherein we need a restatement, and J. L. Haddock asked what terms he should use. Brother Boynton warned against pressing to an extreme a terminology beyond its New Testament idea. J. W. Holsapple objected to an overemphasis of "we," "us" and "our"; the restatement should be that we are simply Christians. Brother Boynton thought we ought to state what we have to state in terms of life. Brother Schoonover believed that a restatement meant preaching so that men will repent and be baptized rather than preaching faith, repentance and baptism as the way. A. J. Bush thought the discussion had been about the liberty that is in Christ. Christ himself is our position, and there is no necessity for restating the old foundation. Brother McPherson said nobody is going to get off that. But shall we, asked Prof. Jewett, in a subsequent discussion, use the questions of our day—the doctrine of immanence evolution, etc.—to interpret religion as Alexander Campbell used the questions of his day?

The papers by F. F. Grim and W. H. Bagby must be presented in fuller form than I can give to them in this report of the Lectureship. It was a matter of regret that W. S. Bullard was not able to be present and read a paper on "The Spiritual Life," and that Brother Faris and his son Ellsworth were kept away by the burning of the latter's home. I must not omit mention of the address of welcome by Prof. Taylor, to which S. D. Perkinson, president of the Lectureship, replied; the helpful devotional exercises conducted by different brethren and the very admirable Bible studies by F. L. Jewett, who occupies our Bible chair at the state university.

The business of the Lectureship did not take up much time. Five towns wanted to entertain it next year. It was decided to go to Palestine, November 19. The committee in charge first recommended a change in the date. The officers elected were: C. M. Schoonover, president; J. B. Eskridge, vice-president; J. M. Wooten, secretary; H. R. Ford, press reporter. Committee on Program: W. K. Homan, A. E. Ewell, L. D. Anderson. Committee on Ministerial Standing: W. K. Homan, A. F. Sanderson, G. Lyle Smith, Judge Wilkinson, J. J. Hart. The entertainment of the visitors to the Lectureship was most cordial. P. M.

Our Colleges and Our Movement.

The world is suffering greatly from men who are experts, but who are not strong Christian characters. The expert financier and the expert politician, without the breadth and depth of Christian manhood, are the great scandal of our day.

The Christian college, with its faith in the basic truths of religion and its emphasis upon the ethics of Jesus, is largely the hope of the world. There can be no broad culture without strong faith. Culture becomes effete when sought for its own sake. Christian environment emphasizes the truth, so important for the individual as well as for society, that one has a right to benefits only that he may be more rich in his gifts to the world. C. C. ROWLISON,

President of Hiram College.

The Christian College and the C. W. B. M.

The ideals and atmosphere of Christian colleges, the cultured, noble, self-sacrificing character of the men and women who conduct them, are such as tend to develop in their students the highest and best part of their natures; to help them to form noble ideas, clearness of vision and earnestness of purpose. It is not surprising, therefore, to find that many of the leaders and helpers in the Christian Woman's Board of Missions from the beginning were trained in Christian colleges. To my knowledge, six of the women who were the leaders in organizing and promoting this great work, and all of its national presidents, have been Christian college women. The idea of the true purpose of life impressed on them in the Christian college helped to inspire them with such a desire to help extend Christ's kingdom over all the earth that they planned and organized the C. W. B. M., which in turn has helped to educate, to inspire with high ideals, the many thousands both of children and adults who have had part in it. As a rule, the preachers who were the first to recognize the value of the C. W. B. M., and who have been most helpful to the work, have been Christian college men.

A large proportion of the missionaries chosen by this board have come from Christian colleges.

While it is true that many of our good and faithful workers have not had the advantages of such training, the C. W. B. M. (and the same is true of all our Christian enterprises) is indebted to Christian colleges for many of its leaders and promoters.

There is sad need of more of such trained workers in the mission field, in the ministry and among all our home forces. All who have the love of the cause at heart should be loyal to our Christian colleges.

Eureka, Ill. ANNIE E. DAVIDSON.

The Christian College and the Ministry.

The Christian college and the ministry, like the Siamese twins, are one and inseparable. What hurts one hurts the other, and what helps one helps the other. They stand or fall together.

At the first it was mainly the preacher, who, conscious of his own need of culture, built the college that those who followed him might be better prepared for life's struggles. And now, as we mingle among men, we discover choice spirits—diamonds in the rough, mines undeveloped—and we send them to the college where their powers are increased ten fold, when they, in turn, go back into the world and repeat the work of their predecessors. The pew is being educated as never before, and the pulpit must keep pace with it, or die.

All honor to the grand men of the past, who, without the aid of college culture, wrought wonders. We will see that they are not forgotten. But ours is a different day and a different environment, and if we would show ourselves worthy sons of such sires, we must meet the issues which face us as they met those which faced them. M. M. DAVIS.

Our Budget.

—Education Day, Lord's day, January 21.

—This is our Education number. Read it thoroughly.

—God bless our colleges and the brave, unselfish men who constitute their faculties! They are rendering a royal service to the brotherhood.

—It is not too much to ask that our ministers should set forth their claims and their value once a year, and that the churches remember them in a free will offering.

—"Let not your heart be troubled." The Christian-Evangelist is not about to enter into any controversial wrangle. A little courteous discussion will do good, if it can be carried on in the spirit of truth-seeking. No other kind will be permitted in these columns. We never felt in better humor and loved the brethren more—even those of the contrary sort.

—"Mortgage burning" is becoming contagious among the churches. Now it is Greenfield, Ind., that has burned a mortgage, leaving a $25,000 property free of debt, with the building recently re-carpeted and re-frescoed at a cost of $1,000. F. B. Sapp sends clipping from local paper reporting a "Red Letter Day." B. F. Daily, former pastor, was present and spoke in the morning. Brother Sapp raised the money, and Dr. W. E. Garrison, president of Butler, spoke in the evening. Brother Sapp begins his third year with splendid outlook.

—Remember that January 21 is Education Day. Get ready for a day of rejoicing and a day of sacrifice. It is the day when the future of the Church, the destiny of our children, and the salvation of thousands will be considered and passed upon by the churches of Christ.

—Churches should report promptly to the colleges the result of Education Day.

—Offerings, large from the rich and small from the poor, ought to mark Education Day's beautiful and worthy fellowship.

—The new parsonage at Buffalo, Mo., is completed.

—J. P. Haner has just begun a meeting at Seligman, Mo.

—W. A. Chapman will serve Rosendale, Mo., for half time.

—R. H. Fife is in a meeting with the church at Hartford, Kan.

—Claude E. Hill has been chosen to serve indefinitely as minister at Mobile, Ala.

—E. E. Davidson, of Washington, Ind., takes up the work at Payette, Idaho.

—We regret to learn of the death of the father of Lewis Goos, Mt. Morris, Ill.

—F. M. McHale, of Hoisington, Kan., has accepted a call from Boonville, Mo.

—Harry F. Burns has been holding a meeting in his new church at Peoria, Ill.

—Gilbert J. Ellis has closed his work at Athens, Ill., and taken the pastorate at Payson.

—H. S. Saxby, after eight years at Kearney, Mo., has resigned and is seeking work elsewhere.

—George L. Snively will now have his Sundays free and will be able to preach or dedicate churches.

—Should the minister be timid about observing Education Day, will not the business men encourage him to do it? Some in every congregation want to know about our educational work and wish to aid it.

—The Sunday school of our Juliette Fowler Orphans' Home will henceforth be held in the Home.

—We hear excellent reports of the work of M. E. Chatley, who has been at Ravenna, Ohio, for two years.

—We hear good reports of the work of J. A. Deatherage, who has charge of the work at Harrison, Ark.

—W. A. Moore writes us that the church at Tacoma, Wash., will put up a new building in the spring.

—J. T. Ogle's first year's work at Paris, Texas, was productive of about 70 additions at the regular services.

—We have more reports of annual meetings and of church work for the year than we can publish this week.

—The annual City Mission Rally of St. Louis takes place to-day at the Union Avenue Christian Church.

—As a result of the work of J. D. Lawrence there is prospect of a church building ere long at Solon, O. T.

—The First Church, Washington, Pa., where O. P. Spiegel closed such a successful meeting, passed very commendatory resolutions about him and his work.

—J. M. Van Horn will close his pastorate at Worcester, Mass., February 1, and after that will take up the work at the Cecil Street Church, Toronto, Canada.

—W. F. Turner has just begun his eighth year as minister of the First Church, Joplin, Mo. To celebrate the event he and his wife gave a reception to the members.

—S. G. Clay has just paid a pleasant visit to The Christian-Evangelist office. He will probably take up some work in the near future in Oklahoma and we bespeak for him a cordial reception.

Liver and Kidneys

It is highly important that these organs should properly perform their functions.

When they don't, what lameness of the side and back, what yellowness of the skin, what constipation, bad taste in the mouth, sick headache, pimples and blotches, and loss of courage, tell the story.

The great alterative and tonic

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Gives these organs vigor and tone for the proper performance of their functions, and cures all their ordinary ailments. Take it.

—Professor G. P. Coler, of Ann Arbor, Mich., who has been out west in the interest of his health for some time, has returned to his work at Ann Arbor, and believes he is in condition now to take up full work again.

—W. H. Harding, of Blue Mound, Ill., has been giving a series of lectures at the midweek meetings on the general subject of world history and Bible truth. The presence of business and professional men has been a marked feature of the series.

—W. M. White, with his family, of San Francisco, passed through St. Louis on their way to Lexington, Ky., where Brother White will take up the work of financial agent and business manager of Kentucky University.

—W. E. Harlow, of Springfield, Mo., called on us last week on his way to Portsmouth, O., where he is to engage in a meeting for six weeks, which, it is predicted, will be the greatest evangelistic campaign ever held in that city.

—We learn that the final dollar has been paid and the mortgage on our church at Vacaville, California, burned. J. E. Denton has been pastor here for four years. At the beginning of his ministry the indebtedness was $2,400.

—J. W. Kilborn leaves Keokuk, Ia., February 1, to take up work with the church at Mt. Carmel, Ill. His successor has not been called though the church has one in view. Brother Kilborn has had a very successful work at Keokuk.

—We regret to learn that F. H. Groom, of Weleetka, I. T., has had to undergo an operation in one of the Kansas City hospitals, but we are glad to learn that the patient stood it well and there is hope that he may soon be able to undertake the work to which he has been called in Montana.

—The Christian-Evangelist office was favored by a visit last week from "Reuben," the Missouri humorist, who is known in private life as Morton H. Pemberton. Reuben will probably make a race for the state senate to represent his district and he has a very good chance of being elected.

—Allen T. Shaw and wife were surprised on New Year's night by members of the church at Fairfield, Ill., who filled the table with good things besides bringing purses of money. Our church at Fairfield is the best in the town and since October there have been 41 additions there.

—G. F. Assiter has given such satisfaction at Parkersburg, W. Va., that at the annual meeting just held he was asked to remain indefinitely as pastor. During the fourteen months of his work there 126 have been taken into the church—almost twice the number recorded in any previous year.

Two Old Remedies.

Two of the oldest and best remedies sold are Allcock's Porous Plasters and Brandreth's Pills. They are celebrated household necessities. For sprains, rheumatism, pains in the side, back or chest, or any suffering that is accessible from the exterior, Allcock's Plasters are perfection, while for regulating the whole system, invigorating the liver, and cleansing and purifying the blood, Brandredth's Pills are unequaled.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has received $16,000 from the estate of Mrs. O. A. Burgess, who for twelve years before her death in 1902, was president of that organization. $10,000 of this amount is directed to the English Bible Chair Endowment Fund, and $6,000 to the general fund of the society.

—J. I. Orrison has just closed ten years of work in Saline county, Mo. As a result there have been 447 additions, 67 of these coming from seven different religious bodies. He has labored at Bethlehem, Grand Pass, Malta Bend, Blue Lick, and Christian Union. His work for 1906 will keep him half time at Deepwater and half time at Appleton City.

—The church at La Junta, Col., A. L. Ferguson, pastor, has begun a revival meeting with J. T. Stivers as evangelist, and has had four confessions to date, with growing audiences and a deepening interest. Brother Ferguson reports having found about thirty persons in the city who hold membership with us in other states and asks all going thither to report to the present pastor.

—The dedication of the Old People's Home, under the auspices of our National Benevolent Association, will take place at Jacksonville, Ill., January 18, and all friends are invited, while those in the neighborhood are expected to be present. Entertainment will be provided. The Editor of The Christian-Evangelist is to give the dedicatory address.

—It is a great help to a Foreign Missionary rally when preachers and people are in their seats at ten o'clock a.m. and remain till four o'clock p.m. A preacher's presence throughout the service is worth more to it than any address. His presence is a proof of his interest in the work. Besides, he gets more out of the rally when he is present from first to last.

—As a result of a visit by I. Clark to Seward, Neb., the dormant work there has been rekindled. The Sunday school and the Y. P. S. C. E., as well as the prayer meeting services, have begun and a reunion of the membership will be held on January 17, when Brother Baldwin, the state secretary, and Brother Clark, will be present to see if a reorganization can not be effected.

—Dr. Kerr Boyce Tupper, of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York, writes: "Accept thanks for your kind criticism of my sermon. Your people and I have always gotten along well together. I long for a union of the Disciples and the Baptists. We are in sympathy on all fundamental questions." So feels a large majority of the leading men in both religious bodies.

—John Fisher, elder of the church at Mt. Hope, Wash., writes to the Editor that he has read his book on the Holy Spirit, and says: "It has enlightened me on some things that I could not understand before. One of these is why the Holy Spirit does not come in miraculous power now as it did on the day of Pentecost." He reports a church there of about forty members with preaching one-half time by Bro. F. Adams, who is now in his second year with the church.

CUTICURA TREATMENT

For Torturing, Disfiguring Humors of the Skin, Scalp, and Blood

Consists of warm baths with Cuticura Soap to cleanse the skin, gentle applications of Cuticura Ointment to heal the skin, and mild doses of Cuticura Resolvent Pills to cool and cleanse the blood and put every function in a state of healthy activity. A single treatment is often sufficient to afford instant relief, permit rest and sleep, and point to a speedy cure of eczemas, rashes, irritations and inflammations of the skin and scalp, from infancy to age, when the usual remedies, and often physicians, fail.

—The "Beaumont (Texas) Enterprise" contains a report of a New Year's union service in that city held in the Methodist church in which nearly all the various congregations of the city took part, and at which Brother Holmes, of the Christian church, preached the sermon, which is also printed in the report of the meeting. It is a good illustration of "speaking the truth in love"—an art that is well worth learning.

—A minister writing from the far east says: "I am surprised at the favorable attitude the Baptists and Congregationalists take toward us. They seem to have just become aware of our great movement and its real plea." This is one of the good results of co-operation with others in great union conferences. It was the stand-off policy that kept us strangers to the rest of the religious world.

—The "Mound City (Mo.) News" contains a full report of Bro. Geo. L. Peters' farewell sermon to that church, on the last Sunday of the Old Year, closing a five years' ministry, which has been very successful. The sermon shows the spirit of a true shepherd or pastor. He has entered upon his work in his new field in South Joplin, where no doubt the same success will attend his labors.

—A. S. Morrison, late of Indiana, was recently called by the elders of the Central Christian Church, San Antonio, Tex., to succeed Homer T. Wilson in the pastorate. Brother Morrison occupied the pulpit for several weeks and had six additions, but a unanimous call extended by the Central Christian Church of Springfield, Mo., was tendered Brother Morrison and this he accepted and is now at work there.

—Should the church in states where we have no college shirk its duty and seek to avoid bearing a proper share of responsibility in the great work of the church's education and life? If any church has never shared in the strength of educated men, either directly or indirectly, it ought to help the colleges for His sake whom we serve and who requires that we teach all nations. The teacher must first be taught.

—If our six or seven thousand preachers will stand together and pull together, there is nothing too great or too hard for them. Six or seven thousand men of one accord and of one mind can double the number of missionary offerings in a year; they can quadruple the incomes of the missionary societies. Now is the time for every man to do his utmost, as Admiral Togo said to his men for the battle in the Japan sea.

—Foreign Missionary rallies are being held in different parts of the country. These rallies have been found most helpful in generating interest and enthusiasm. It is no uncommon thing for men and women to say at the close of a rally, "This is the best day of my life." Able preachers say, "I can not afford to miss a rally when it is held anywhere within reach." Business men say, "We have not had so good a day in ten years."

—The standing committee on evangelism, of which H. O. Breeden is chairman and Wm. J. Wright, superintendent, has planned an evangelistic institute for Christian University, Canton, Mo., January 16-20, and another at Drake University, at Des Moines, Ia., from January 21-27. A number of able speakers will discuss the various phases of the subject. This is a capital idea and is bound to be fruitful of good results. This committee has amply demonstrated its usefulness in an important field.

—The new church at Brazil, Ind., will be dedicated the first Lord's day in February, F. M. Rains preaching the sermon. Bro. E. L. Day, the pastor, and his faithful congregation are rejoicing in the prospect, for they have suffered great trial through the burning of their former building. They hope that the entire indebtedness may be provided for. A series of meetings is planned to begin immediately after the dedication to be conducted by J. A. Marshall and Le Roy St. John.

—Some letters received show that a few brethren are very nervous over what they call "a controversy." Some people do not discriminate between a fraternal comparison of positions, in a thoroughly parliamentary discussion, and an ill-natured, personal controversy. The former is often useful in eliciting truth. The latter has no proper place in a religious journal. We refuse to enter into any wrangle or ill-spirited controversy. Our readers may rest easy on that matter.

—In a personal letter to the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist our beloved Brother J. C. Reynolds, of Macomb, Ill., who passed his eightieth milestone December 15, writes: "I spent my Christmas with your little book, 'Alone with God,' my Greek Testament, and my Heavenly Father. I pray more now than I ever did before. I greatly desire and dearly love to get close to God. Your book does me great good. To me it is the most precious book published in our Israel." We are sure that thousands of our readers will be glad to learn that Brother Reynolds still survives, enjoying a fair degree of health for one of his age, and what is more important, enjoying the presence and the peace of God. May his last days be his brightest and best!

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions gained two new missionaries during Christmas week: Mr. Elmer Ireland, Bayamon, Porto Rico, who on Christmas eve became the husband of Miss Nora Collins, one of the best known and loved of our missionaries in Porto Rico, and Miss Katherine Elliott, of New Castle, Ind., who on December 26, became the wife of Jasper T. Moses, accompanying him to his field, Mexico. Mr. Ireland has been given present charge of the evangelistic work in Porto Rico under the care of the board.

—The "Christian Worker," of Des Moines, Ia., in its December issue contains a very full account of the recent celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. Breeden with the Central Christian Church in that city. It contains pictures of the pastor and his wife, with some of the veteran members, the old church on Locust street, and the present splendid new edifice, and letters, congratulatory and complimentary, from many leading men all over the country. It was a great occasion and was splendidly utilized for the good of the Cause.

—A meeting has just been begun at the Main Street Christian Church, Danville, Ind., L. E. Brown, of Lebanon, doing the preaching. Brother Moorman has published a New Year's Greeting from which it would seem that in many respects the pastor is satisfied with the past year's work. He regrets, however, that he has "not done his work better and that there have been so few additions to the church, and that its missionary offerings have been so far below its means." This, doubtless, is a regret that every preacher feels when he comes to the end of the year.

—The "Christian Standard" complains, and we think with some justice, that in a recent paragraph referring to its position on the Inter-Church Conference, we did not quote the passage we criticised. This we aim always to do, but having in view at the time the taking up of the article of the "Standard" entire for future consideration we omitted the quotation. It would not be difficult, we think, for us to show that our statement was justified by the "Christian Standard's" own words, but we admit the justice of its criticism, that it should have been allowed to state its position in its own way. We can assure our neighbor, also, that any criticism we may make on anything which it may say will be based on its own statement. We can not promise the publication of an entire editorial, where it is our purpose to reply to a single paragraph only. All that justice requires of an editor is that he print so much of the article he criticises as will fairly state the point criticised. This is all we ask of our contemporaries, and we think it is all they have a right to ask of us. It is not likely, however, that we will have any extended discussion with the "Christian Standard." We have already printed the heart of its objection to the proposed basis of federation, if we mistake not, stated in its own words. To this we have made brief reply, and we shall be glad to have our readers see how it meets this answer to its objection.

Notes from the Societies.

The Foreign Society has received two gifts on the annuity plan; one for $2,000 from a friend in Kentucky and one of $100 from a friend in New York. Both of the friends have given on this plan before so well are they pleased with it. Full information and a handsome new illustrated booklet will be sent by F. M. Rains, secretary, Cincinnati, Ohio, upon request.

At the last meeting of the executive committee of the Foreign Society, Miss Mary Lediard, of Owen Sound, Ontario, was appointed a missionary to Japan. She will sail in September, 1906. She is a daughter of James Lediard, one of our faithful preachers.

We have reports from the office of the Foreign Society to the effect that an unprecedented number of churches are ordering March offering supplies. The interest in the campaign is lively. Every church should order supplies at once and begin an early campaign of preparation.

Church Extension.

The Board of Church Extension has just received $2,000 on the annuity plan from a long time friend of Church Extension. This is the one hundred and fifty-second gift to Church Extension on the annuity plan.

The receipts for Church Extension during December, 1905, amounted to $3,634.13, a gain of $2,276.39 over December, 1904. The interest collected by the treasurer during December amounted to over $2,500. The Church Extension Fund amounted, on January 1, to over $544,000. This means we have $456,000 to raise during the next four years of the centennial campaign.

The Board of Church Extension desires to announce to all the churches and friends who helped with their contributions to save Randall Street Mission church building, Baltimore, Maryland, that the property will be saved by a loan of $4,000 which was promised at our board meeting, January 2. All who made pledges should promptly remit to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Gain for Home Missions.

The first quarter of the New Year has marked a splendid gain in the offering for Home Missions. The offerings from the churches show a gain of $410.44, the offerings for the Sunday schools, $1,254.03. We received a bequest of $500, and five annuities aggregating $1,950. We received a gain of $2,000 on the Permanent Named Memorial Fund. New Year's day brought us another annuity for $1,000 and a letter telling us that we would receive a bequest of $1,000 within ten days.

Hot Springs Church.

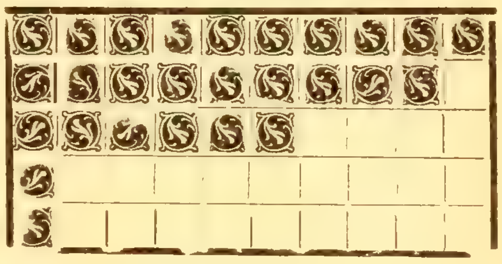
Among the multiplied thousands of readers of The Christian-Evangelist there ought to be six hundred brethren and sisters who are willing to put as much as five dollars each in a mission field like the one at Hot Springs. We must have no delay, if we are to succeed with the effort now being made to save the lot. Delay kills interest, and this work must not be dragged out too long. Let every one who has contemplated assisting us do so at once. There are thousands who could send us at least one dollar, and never miss it, if they would take the time and pains to do so. Think how much it will mean to have you do this! Will you not do so at once? We have received the following sums since our last report: Mrs. Anna Campbell (for Ladies' Aid), Hickman Mills, Missouri, $3.40; G. W. Ogden, Prosperity, West Va., $1; Almira Coleman (for Ladies' Aid), Platte City, Missouri, $5; Mrs. R. N. Duncan (for Ladies' Aid), Hume, Mo., $1; Mrs. B. Guyer (for Ladies' Aid), Marceline, Missouri, $5; Mrs. Mary Hall Wadsworth, Rock Island, Illinois, $1; Mrs M. Whitefield, Gillespie, Ill., $1; Miss Odessa Koffman, Andrews, Ind., $5; Miss Rebecca Emerson (for Ladies' Aid), Corder, Missouri, $2; Cinthia Allen, Akron, Ohio, $2; Mrs. I. W. Smith, Garland county, Arkansas, $10; C. P. Austin, Beaverdam, Ky., $3; Mrs. S. E. Williams, Glenrose, Texas, $5; Mrs. E. E. Thomson, West Plains, Missouri, $10; total amount since last report, $54.40.



Assist at once and we will soon be ready to close this rally. Address T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark., 132 East Grand avenue.

Two Evangelistic Institutes.

The standing committee on evangelism (H. O. Breeden, chairman, W. J. Wright, superintendent,) has planned an evangelistic institute for Christian University, Canton, Mo., January 16-20, and another at Drake University, Des Moines, Ia., from January 21-27. Preachers, evangelists and students and all interested persons are heartily invited to attend the sessions of these institutes.

Both the theory and practice of evangelism will be presented. Men who have made an unqualified success of evangelistic work for many years, and who are known as professional evangelists, others who have succeeded as pastor-evangelists in building up great congregations, and others who have written much and out of large experience, will be among the speakers and instructors. We mention, H. O. Breeden, C. S. Medbury, J. V. Updike, J. H. O. Smith, J. H. Garrison, W. F. Richardson, A. B. Philputt, G. L. Brokaw, B. S. Denny.

The themes to be discussed are extremely practical and helpful. We mention a few: Place of Evangelism in Christianity, Office and Work of the Evangelist, Value of Special Evangelistic Meetings, Evangelistic

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

A Word from Drake University.

The College of the Bible, Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, closes the first term of the present school year with an increase of twenty-seven per cent over the same term last year. The probabilities are that the enrollment for the year will be the largest in its history. Dr. D. R. Dungan has given splendid satisfaction in his work. His friends are more than pleased over the showing. Professor A. D. Veatch, after a year's post-graduate work in Chicago University, has been most heartily welcomed by his former classes and all the friends of the University. Professor Walter Stairs is growing in popularity, and holds a strong place in the school. Professor Sherman Kirk has one of the largest and most enthusiastic mission classes. Our new building is enclosed and will be ready for occupancy about February 1. It is probably the finest building upon the campus.

One of the features for the winter term is the great evangelistic rally to be held with us from January 21 to 27, under the auspices of Secretary Wright and the Drake University Ministerial Association. We expect to have with us J. H. O. Smith, Evangelist Updike, Dr. H. O. Breeden, Chaplain C. S. Medbury, and others. We hope that all our Iowa churches will participate in the education day offering and remit to President Bell, Des Moines, Iowa, on or near the third Sunday in January. It will also be in order for our friends outside of the state to remember us on that day where they have no obligations to other institutions.

ALFRED M. HAGGARD,
Dean College of the Bible.

A Day with the C. W. B. M.

It is refreshing to note that the Twelfth Congressional District held a meeting in the interest of "goodness, righteousness and truth," at Compton Heights Christian Church. From the morning devotional period to the last half hour by Juniors the interest, earnestness and zeal were apparent. The conference on "Auxiliary Meeting" was led by Mrs. Merryman, but eight others treated of its value socially, educationally and spiritually—plans for good meetings and why every member should attend every meeting. The pearls of wisdom were gathered by two sisters and given in brief. Next followed a loving service in memory of Mrs. John Burns. Mrs. Meyer told of the loss sustained by Fourth Church in the removal of Bro. George Chamberlain to the home above. In the afternoon session came reports of auxiliaries in which observance of C. W. B. M. day was emphasized, lists for "Missionary Tidings" gained and contributions for special work given. These summed up showed that nine of the eleven auxiliaries observed C. W. B. M. day the first Sunday in December; that 314 subscriptions to "The Tidings" have been sent and $273.55 of the $950 pledged for year. The contingent fund showed a healthy condition by reporting all debts paid and a balance of $16 76 at close of year. Reports of Junior superintendent and her assistant were followed by the ways and means committee who emphasized the three F's of our aim: "Fearless, Forceful, Fruitful," all included in the watchword, "Keep close to God."

Letters from our missionaries, Miss C. A. Pope, Miss Mattie Burgess and W. J. Burner, were read by Mrs. Bantz. She drew a picture of Mr. Burner's house and lack of windows and doors was plainly seen, also many inconveniences. Little Ethel Knobeloch sang sweetly of Jesus' love and care. This was a fitting introduction of Mrs. A. M. Fullen, who was our first missionary to Porto Rico. The young people are interested in this field because of the orphanage work there. The condition of the people seemed more real as she portrayed it, and we rejoiced with them that Uncle Sam had used his big stick in breaking down some customs of long standing. All preachers and notaries now perform the marriage ceremony free for their people. Our orphanage is called Protestant College for Orphans. It was the nucleus for a church. Now three hundred are members. Bible women go into homes and help tell of Jesus. The closing hour was given to the Juniors. They told of buildings in India, Mexico, Jamaica and the United States. The ribbon for best per cent attendance was awarded to Second Church; for largest number to Compton Heights. MRS. W. D. HARRISON, Sec.

Indian Territory.

I have been examining the new "Year Book," and am gratified to find that the missionary co-operation of the Indian Territory reaped a larger harvest than was gathered by any other state or Canada. In fact, we led the world in the number of baptisms, in other additions and in the organizing of churches. The only apparent exception is the state of Indiana, which, with $3,445.74, organized thirty two churches, baptized twelve hundred and two, and received one hundred and twenty-four others into fellowship. But this is unquestionably an error as regards the amount of money used. Indiana is one of our strongest states, both in numbers and wealth, and its state work is in a flourishing condition. Ohio raised for state work more than fourteen thousand dollars, Illinois more than eleven thousand, Kentucky and Texas three thousand each, and Missouri more than thirty-two thousand. Hence, Indiana must have spent not less than twenty thousand to obtain her magnificent showing.

The executive committee of the territory has just held one of the most important meetings in the history of this work. Our prospects were never so bright. The church in Weleetka, where F. H. Groom ministers, is in a fine and growing condition. Randolph Cook has been asked to remain at Tulsa for 1906, at an increase of salary. S. D. Seymour, of Alexandria, Mo., has just taken the work at Marietta and is highly pleased with both the town and the people. Brother Jones, of Ft. Smith, Ark., has been called to the work at Poteau, and A. H. Mitchell, of Texas, to the Durant field. A new church is being built at Loco, and another at Okmulgee. The latter will rank among the best of our Indian Territory churches. Work has been delayed upon the building at Paul's Valley, but they are now expecting to resume and have it ready for dedication by the last of January. The writer has been asked to dedicate it when completed. The building at Thurston burned down a few weeks since, but lumber is now on the ground for a new building. Muscogee needs a new building and a larger one; so does Vinita and Ardmore and Durant. Tulsa also is talking of enlarging, although their building is "brand-new." Stillwell, Tishomingo and Sapulpa are planning to build in the spring. The North District Convention will be held some time in February, at Tulsa. We expect to be able to mention the exact date in our next letter. Every church and mission north of the "Choctaw R. R." should be represented. Of course we expect to see all the preachers, but we want to see many present besides preachers.

S. W. HAWKINS, Cor. Sec.

Cincinnati Letter.

The "Cincinnati Letter," which will appear occasionally in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, will, we hope, not only contain news of interest to some at least, but a message that will help as well. We shall ask God's blessing upon it that it may go forth to benefit rather than simply to fill up valuable space.

As a people no year in our history has ever dawned upon us with brighter hopes, and yet greater responsibilities, than that upon which we have entered. The experiences of the past teach us that God is with us in the sublime effort to restore the simple religious principles of the New Testament. Behind us are the self-sacrificing labors of the fathers in the establishment of missionary zeal that has aided in developing us into a great and influential people; while before us is a sinful world in need of the bread of life. We believe in the plea which we preach and by which we stand, and fear not but it shall accomplish that which the Father wills. Behind us is the day of experiment and obscurity and the disadvantages of deep poverty; before us is the day of advancement; triumph and power are no more matters of mere possibility with us. The experiences and achievements of the past one hundred years have given us implicit confidence in the power of the simple Gospel we preach—"it is the power of God." May he help us to honor him by being loyal and tireless in its proclamation throughout the whole world. W. G. LOUCKS.

Southeast Missouri Convention.

The convention of the Christian churches of southeast Missouri, held at Fredericktown, was one of the best and most helpful gatherings. Three key words will open the door to the spirit of the convention: They are, Instruction, Stimulation, Activity.

The first note was sounded in a sermon on "Union with Christ" by Edward Owers. The addresses by J. W. Boulton on "Evangelization," A. W. Rithmeyer on "Christian Endeavor," R. H. Lampkin on "Church Finance," Judge G. O. Nations on "The Business Man in the Church," and H. A. Carpenter on "Our College Work," were of a high order, practical and helpful.

J. H. Hardin, state superintendent of Bible schools, rendered valuable service and imparted much information on advanced Bible school methods. T. A. Abbott gave a very enthusiastic and masterly address on state work, at the close of which $76 were subscribed for the state permanent fund. Resolutions were adopted: 1. Pledging to the management and faculty of Dexter Christian College sympathy and co-operation in their efforts to advance its interests and enlarge its power for good. 2. Renewing the pledge of fidelity to the work being done by the state board of missions. (It was the judgment of those assembled that the usefulness of the district organization will be best subserved by the holding of both annual and semiannual conventions.) 3. Expressing delight with the four years' agitation in preparation for our centennial, to be held in the city of Pittsburg in 1909.

Northwest Iowa.

Enlargement is the word in the northwest district. The splendid weather has favored the meetings in progress. William Baier, of Marcus, has held a good meeting at Kingsley. Le Grand Pace, of Onawa, has been conducting a meeting at Lead, S. D., the mining town in the Black Hills. Joel Brown has been preaching the Gospel of righteousness at Moorehead, with good results. I will begin a revival meeting at Storm Lake the first week of the new year. J. C. Harris, late of Madelia, Minn., has again entered Iowa and is located at Sheldon.

The church in Sioux City is making substantial progress; their new building is nearing completion. We expect to conduct, as soon as the building is done, a revival at home with the help of a singing evangelist. This hustling city of over 40,000 people is growing rapidly in population and wealth; situated at the corners of Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota, and possessing superior transportation facilities, and a large and growing live stock market and wholesaling business, it is destined to be a great commercial center for this northwest territory.

I received a beautiful and valuable gold watch from the congregation at Christmas as a token of their appreciation of services rendered and fellowship enjoyed.

I wish to call attention to the appeal to the ministers of the state by the association officials to sustain the officers and the association in the attempt to make the association a success. Brethren, will you respond at once and thereby insure success to this needed organization? J. K. Ballou.

Southwest Missouri Notes.

J. W. Baker, minister at South Joplin, has just closed a great meeting at Diamond, Newton county, twenty miles east of Joplin, with sixty-six additions in less than three weeks. A. L. McQuary, of Monett, is their regular minister. Forty-six were by confession and baptism, and five from the denominations. The church was doubled in membership, a Y. P. S. C. E. was organized and a C. W. B. M. will be organized this week. Brother McQuary will be called for half time next year. Twenty-one men came in, among whom were the leading citizens of the place.

The Jasper county convention was held recently at Webb City. It lasted only one day, but "there was something doing." A resolution was unanimously carried, first to put a county evangelist in this county in 1906 for full time; secondly, to ask the churches outside of the First, at Joplin, to undertake the support of another foreign missionary. Great enthusiasm was generated. Newell L. Sims, with his church at Carthage, will lead the work for missions. We rejoice to have such a leader as Brother Sims in old Jasper county.

To the regret of all who know J. W. Baker, he has resigned as minister at South Joplin. In two years and three months he has brought that church to a membership of over 500, the second largest Sunday scho in the city and with every department in a flourishing condition. But as he left business to be their pastor, it has been his idea all along to turn the work over to a more experienced preacher and pastor when he got the work thoroughly established. All will rejoice to know that he has accepted the call to serve as county evangelist in this county, and that he will continue to make his home in Joplin. He will help the weaker churches in the county and open missions where needed. Watch Jasper county this coming year.

Geo. L. Peters, of Mound City, Mo., has accepted a call to become minister at South Joplin as Brother Baker's successor. He will take up his work immediately. His call is indefinite and was made without any sample sermon. We all believe we have the man God would have in this field that has such wonderful promise before it.

Marcellus R. Ely, minister of the Soniat Avenue Church, New Orleans, and Miss Bessie Dorsett, of this city, were united in marriage in the South Joplin Church December 27, the writer officiating. The groom is the son of our well known brother, Simpson Ely, and the bride the daughter of J. W. Baker. The groom is the "living link" home missionary of our church whom the writer ordained in our South Joplin church about one year ago. He is succeeding admirably in his work at New Orleans, and is well equipped for the ministry. The bride has lived here several years. She is a graduate of the Joplin High School and of the

Butler College.

Butler College is enjoying a prosperous year. The attendance of the college proper has increased more than sixty per cent in the past two years. Including all departments, such as the summer school and the teachers' department, the increase has been nearly one hundred per cent. A considerable part of the student body is drawn from the city. The attendance from outside of the city is increasing, but is far short of what it ought to be, considering the facilities that are offered, the number of our people in the territory from which we naturally draw students, and the high percentage of Indiana high school graduates who attend college. This has been partly (of course only partly) accounted for by the somewhat rigid requirements which have been enforced for entrance and graduation.

While the internal condition of the college was never better, its faculty never abler and its student body never larger, the financial condition is such that a considerable addition to the productive endowment is absolutely necessary. Friends of the college have already pledged largely to the $250,000 fund which is being raised to add to the endowment. It is believed that, by the co-operation of all who are interested in the college or the work which it is doing, this fund can be completed before the close of the present academic year. It will be an appropriate time for such enlargement, since the college is this year celebrating its semi-centennial.

An important step which has recently been taken with reference to the college life is the abolition of intercollegiate athletics. The action was taken by the faculty at the close of a successful football season. The action is more important than those outside of college are likely to realize. It is not primarily a question of softening the rough features of a rough game, but of eliminating from the college life an influence which, in the last decade, has done more than we like to admit toward teaching cheating, selfishness, inordinate ambition and moral cowardice. We are going to try the experiment of reducing the emphasis upon games as a spectacle for the public and an advertisement for the college, and have all the athletic games we can among classes, clubs and societies for exercise, fun and honest sportsmanship.

The attendance of ministerial students has not greatly increased over last year. There is room for a very great increase at this point. The facilities afforded are excellent, including one year of good post-graduate work for students who have completed the full college course.

W. E. GARRISON, Pres.

As Seen From the Dome.

Christ, which is eternal life." William and Mary, the next in age, began as religiously. Yale started in the gifts of a few Connecticut clergymen, each of whom, bringing a few books from his library, said, "I give these for the founding of a college." Of the 500 chartered colleges in the United States to-day less than one-tenth are secular in their origin and management. There is still work for the Christian college. Christian education is the need of the time. The church must foster this work of training men and women who shall be equal to the call of leadership in these days. The little school of the prophets among the West Virginia hills and all her sister and daughter schools have yet their best service to perform and there is room for others in the work of the million or more of the people known as Disciples of Christ. In the year just closed two men gave each ten millions to the cause of education. We do not look for such mammoth offerings, but we shall gain in a marvelous way in both good will and gifts if the claims of our colleges are pressed home upon all our people at the coming Education Day.

EXPANSION OF SOUTHERN TRADE.

The wonderful industrial progress made by the South in the year just closed is emphasized by the fact that the Southland leads all the rest of the country in the proportion of banks established, as shown by recent reports of the United States Treasury Department.

Promoters of such enterprises never locate in an unprosperous, unprogressive community. That fact, in itself, is a recognition of the progress being made in all industrial lines, and the development of these industries vast though they have been, are in a measure small as compared with what could have been accomplished if the means were at hand of giving the proper sort of publicity to the various enterprises. The latter need has demonstrated to one of the largest general advertising agencies the importance of maintaining a thoroughly equipped office on the ground.

Nelson Chesman & Co., of St. Louis, General Newspaper and Magazine Advertising Agents, have established a branch office at Chattanooga, Tenn., and will do a general newspaper and magazine advertising business throughout the South. In these days of rapid-fire service distance counts immensely, and the location selected for this latest branch of the Chesman Agency not only facilitates the work of securing desirable contracts, but also insures quick and unusually efficient distribution of copy for customers in distant parts of the country.

This progressive policy on the part of one of the oldest, most highly respected and most substantial agencies in the country illustrates the broad lines of development in the advertising business, and is likewise indicative of the far-sightedness of a concern which has long been firmly rooted in the greatest centers of advertising activity—New York, Chicago and St. Louis.

PILES CURED
QUICKLY AT HOME

Why Suffer Agony Any Longer When You Can Get a Quick, Sure Cure For Your Piles by Simply Sending Your Name and Address?

Trial Package is sent Absolutely Free, in Plain Wrapper to Everyone Who Writes.

Surgeons themselves consider a permanent cure of piles by a surgical operation as very doubtful, and resort to it only when the patient has become desperate from long continued pain and agony. But the operation itself is every bit as excruciating and nerve-racking as the disease. Besides, it is humiliating and expensive, and rarely a success.

The wonderful Pyramid Pile Cure makes an operation unnecessary. You cure yourself with perfect ease, in your own home, and for little expense.

Pyramid Pile Cure gives you instant relief. It immediately heals all sores and ulcers, reduces congestion and inflammation, and takes away all pain, itching and irritation. Just a little of the treatment is usually sufficient to give a permanent cure.

Pyramid Pile Cure is prepared in the form of suppositories so they can be applied directly to the parts without inconvenience, or interrupting your work in any way.

We are sending a trial treatment free of charge, to every one who sends name and address. We do this to prove what we say about this wonderful remedy is true.

After you have tried the sample treatment, and you are satisfied, you can get a full regular-sized treatment of Pyramid Pile Cure at your druggist's for 50 cents. If he hasn't it, send us the money and we will send you the treatment at once, by mail, in plain sealed package.

Send your name and address at once for a trial of this marvelous quick, sure cure. Address Pyramid Drug Co., 11568 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Mich.

NEBRASKA.

Humboldt, Jan. 2.—Our 24 days' revival meeting with H. A. Northcutt closed with 41 additions. Some of these were from the Sunday school, but the majority were men and women of influence. Two of the leading men of the town were converted. Several very promising young men came into the church, one a Catholic, who, I am praying, will enter Cotner University and study for the ministry. It was a great help to this church in a little town of 1,500 to have such a man as Brother Northcutt with us It is not often that our best evangelists go to such small towns. Brother Northcutt has great power in spiritualizing the church. He has been as a father to me in these days of the meeting. We are already planning for another meeting with him for next year. The church is in better condition than at any time in its entire history.—Bert Wilson, pastor.

NEW YORK.

Brooklyn, Jan. 2.—The Humboldt Street Church of Christ paid the last dollar on her mortgage December 31. This makes it possible for us to assume self-support. We entered the new year full of hope. E. Loucks, of Brooklyn, will begin a meeting with us the last of January. Four of our young men leave for the School of Evangelists January 9.—Jos. Keevil.

OHIO.

Beallsville, Dec. 18.—Three additions yesterday—two by confession, one by statement.—Ferd F. Schultz, evangelist.

Croton, Dec. 31.—In a recent meeting here, held by E. B. Barnes, Noblesville, Ind., 22 persons were added.—Stanton E. Hoover.

McConnelsville, Dec. 19.—There have been 40 additions at Lowell and 62 here during the past 14 months.—John Mullen.

Norwood, Jan. 4.—Annual report of the church shows 54 additions during the past year; $543 raised for current work in excess of any previous year. Joseph Armistead was called for the second year with increased salary.

CHRIST'S LIFE. LESSONS FROM HIS BOYHOOD.—Luke 2:40-52.

(Union Meeting with the Junior Society.)

Jesus grew in favor with men. It is a commendable example for us by social winsomeness and innate kindness to win favor with men that we may lead them to honor the great Source of all the good they see and admire in us.

Inherited tendencies mightily affect life and character. Jesus owed much to Mary, his virgin mother. Let us be grateful for sanctified parenthood, but if our parents were not Christians let us realize the need of harder striving after righteousness and walk all the closer to Jesus' side.

We cannot think of Jesus endangering his childhood innocency with evil associations. "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" indicates it was necessary for him to choose his companions. It is fitting for us in maturer years to go even among the iniquitous as spiritual physicians, but rattlesnakes are safer playmates and companions than the evil-minded.

While Jesus was the Son of God in a sense none other is, it should be remembered that there was no divine protection about him that is withdrawn from us. He was subject to temptations even as we are. Yielding to them would have reduced him to at least as low a level of life as transgression has brought any mortal. He maintained his Sonship, as we must ours, by willing to do and be only good. The Captain of our salvation was subject to every peril besetting all soldiers of the cross. Let our Leader's bravery and victory be our inspiration to endure hardness.

One of the joys of the biography of Jesus is that in his manhood were fulfilled all the rich prophecies of his beautiful childhood. Let us through these formative years recall that fond mother eyes looking down into our cradles saw us in the full progress of Christian integrity and usefulness, and remember they would be filled with tears of anguish did they see us turning aside from the straight and narrow way for gold or any other earthly prize. May we resolve to-night to the full extent of our powers to attempt to answer our mothers' hopes and prayers for our manhood and womanhood.

The childhood of Jesus teems with evidences of his divinity. No other peasant's birth was heralded by choiring angels, nor did wise men from the East come bringing tribute to a child of destiny born in a manger, nor kings tremble on their thrones and hold up mailed hands in fear for their dynasties over the birth of an artisan's child, nor did long lines of prophetic utterances and priestly ceremonies forepicture them. No man ever sent before him a photograph more certainly identifying him on his arrival than did the prophecies and symbols of Jesus that were sent before to make him known as God's only Son.

Jesus increased in wisdom. In conforming our lives to the divine model we, too, must grow in wisdom. Many still in their twenties are dependent for their knowledge of the Bible on their memory of what they learned in childhood. While it is a duty to acquire ever-increasing stores of wisdom, it is one of the supreme privileges of life. Would the old astronomer refuse to train his telescope on a newly-discovered constellation because "he knows enough," or lack of interest in the stellar chart he had studied in his youth? Neither should we cease to learn that wisdom that will place other stars beneath our feet because of any temporal consideration.

Midweek Prayer Meeting.

January 17, 1906.

THE CHOIR INVISIBLE.—Eph. 4:1-6.

There are splendid orchestras of exalted aspirations, sanctified ambitions, kindling hopes, peace and benignancy whose music would thrill us with rapture, and with whom we might join if we would permit Jesus to unstop our ears to the strains of the higher life possible to each of us.

The masterpieces of world renowned composers would be lost to earth unless what they put into the printed page found perfect interpretation by virtuosos. So what God has compacted into our souls will be lost to earth and heaven unless we to whom it has been committed give it fair expression through our daily lives. What inglorious Miltons, what possible seraphs, pass us daily undetected because sin keeps them mute!

A choir may be invisible, but it is not truly a choir unless declared so by its songs. In our bosom may slumber meekness, patience, forgiveness, adoration, faith, hope and love, all the qualities of which the noblest choirs are composed, but till they become choral, making themselves known by the beauty, holiness, helpfulness and inspiration of their presences, they are not so much a choir as evidences of unfulfilled obligations that will testify against us at heaven's gate.

There are heavenly choirs, invisible to us now, composed of our loved and lost for awhile whom we shall see some sweet day if we closely follow Jesus' pathway thither. Even now visions of them, leaning on golden harps or singing of love and the Lamb, are caught by those whose eyes by faith are purified of all dross. Through prayer and adoration, by speaking forgiveness and comfort, and in the school of Christ perfecting the dialect of the skies let us prepare to blend our voices with theirs when we, too, reach the other shore.

Momus complained of Vulcan because he placed no grate in men's bosoms that their hearts might be read of all. God needs no such windows. There are to him no invisible choirs who sees our every motive and purpose. Even science now claims that emotions cherished there give color to the soul. Sure it is that in the light of judgment day all will be seen and heard as they are. O God help us to so think and live and be that in that day thou, who art now to us invisible, wilt be seen by us for the first time with approval on thy face!

Our lives are more noticeable than our voices, and in the great choir composed of the children of the Lord there must be the unity of the Spirit or there will be distraction rather than useful soulfulness appealing irresistibly to the world. One meaning of this unity of the Spirit is harmony of view with reference to the great doctrines of righteousness. There should be substantial agreement among us as to the meaning of self-denial, cross bearing, brotherly love, dying to this present world, the great commission, causing our brother to offend, walking worthily, significance of prayer, and in right relations between Bible precepts and our practice. In order to do this there should be faithful study of the book in the school of Christ and frequent rehearsals at prayer meeting and the Lord's day assemblies and constant watch care. O God, keep me from striking one discordant note of impiety, or to "flat" another's lofty idealism!

With the seven tones and semitones of the diatonic scale is wrought all the magic of music whether by Handel in Messiah, the storm king on his harps whose chords are waves and forests and hills, or the angels in their praises of redeeming love. In our lesson Paul enumerates the seven notes on which is rendered the divine symphony of salvation: (1) One Body, the church, and there can be harmony when but one church is the recognized sanctuary of God; (2) One Spirit, the Holy Spirit, without whom we can do nothing acceptably; (3) One Hope, we shall not be surprised, there is no heaven but is hoped for; (4) One Lord, Jesus our Sacrifice for sin; (5) One Faith, in Christ and his doctrines of purification and holiness; (6) One Baptism, and our realization of its death to this world and resurrection to walk in newness of life; (7) One God and Father of all. All of these notes are required, another is superfluous. The addition of man's philosophy, "falsely so called" will destroy its concord, make it like a harp with broken strings lying on the ground, its music fled.

The Way to Make Money.

I bought a lot and erected a $5,000 house and made all the money selling dishwashers. I have been in the business over four years—in the past three months I have made over $800. Dishwashers are used three times a day, that is why they sell better than washing or sewing machines, which are used only occasionally. When people pay $25 for a sewing machine, which often stands idle for weeks, imagine how quickly they will pay $5 for a dishwasher, which is used three times a day. A dishwasher will save its cost in dishes every year. You cannot break dishes in a dishwasher. You can wash and dry the dishes beautifully in two minutes, without putting the hands in water, or touching the dishes. I do not canvass, but sell by mail. Write to the Mound City Dishwasher Co., St. Louis, Mo., Box 10, and they will give you particulars and start you in the business, so you can make a fortune right at home, as the dishwasher sells itself and sells to everybody.

THE BOY JESUS. Luke 2:40-52.

Memory Verse, 51.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man.—Luke 2:52.

For almost thirty years Jesus lived a quiet and private life in Nazareth, growing from infancy to mature manhood. There are a few incidental references which help us to form some idea of the course of his life during those years, but so far as actual incident is concerned, the period is a perfect blank to us, except for this single episode, where the curtain is drawn aside to show us this incident—the journey to Jerusalem. The value of it is chiefly in the light which it throws upon two topics of which we would gladly know more: First, the education of Jesus; second, the beginning and development of his consciousness of his own mission and of his unique relation to God.

The method and amount of formal education which Jesus received cannot be determined. The establishment of village schools throughout Palestine came either shortly before or shortly after the period of the boyhood of Jesus. The authorities differ as to the date. If the schools had been established, probably Jesus attended one of them and received such simple instruction in reading and writing and in the Law as was there given. If there were no schools as yet, he had still the school of the family and the opportunity of hearing the Law read in Hebrew and paraphrased in his native Aramaic at the synagogue. This would form the basis both of a knowledge of the contents of the Law and of some acquaintance with the Hebrew language in which it was written—a language no longer in common use among the people.

The resources of a devout and intelligent family for education must also be taken into account. Joseph and Mary were humble people, but not necessarily ignorant. There is every reason to assume, on general principles, that those chosen to be the closest companions of the Christ in his earliest days would be persons of intelligent piety, and that would involve no small acquaintance with the history and law of their people. Such knowledge would not be of a technical sort, and a learner who received it would not have the finish and flavor of the schools, but it would be none the less true education.

The query of those who heard Jesus discoursing in the temple in later years and asked, "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" (John 7:15), certainly does not indicate a total lack of training, nor a miraculous knowledge of matters which others had learned by study. The Judeans who made the remark, perhaps themselves scribes and doctors, recognized a note of authority in his words and saw in him the power of a great teacher, but they missed the signs of academic training in the schools of the rabbis at Jerusalem. They could not deny that he had the power which education should give, but toward his irregular and uncertified education in the home, the synagogue and perhaps the village school, they looked with that supercilious air with which sometimes (unfortunately) persons who dwell in centers of culture and learning regard those who have enjoyed only provincial advantages. In his answer, Jesus said that his teaching was from him that had sent him, but did not claim any mysterious source for any information or erudition which he might possess.

Soothe the throat and stop a hacking cough. A safe and simple remedy. Sold only in boxes.

It was evident that, by whatever means, Jesus acquired a knowledge of the Hebrew Scriptures and history, a wide acquaintance with the common scenes and processes of nature, as they would appeal to a keen observer without regard to scientific training, and a profound knowledge of the workings of the minds and hearts of men. There is nothing in the record to indicate that he possessed any exceptionally vast store of information in any of the fields of human learning. If we say that, either as the result of his education or independent of it, he was omniscient in the realm of science, history or any other department of learning, we speak without the support of the record and must have recourse to speculative theology to prove the assertion.

The scene in which we find the boy Jesus among the learned men in the temple, shows us a stage in his intellectual development. He was not teaching the teachers nor exhibiting any precocious pedantry. He was engaging, with childish modesty, let us believe, but with eager interest, in the informal conversation which makes up the bulk of instruction between an Oriental teacher and his pupils. In such a conversation on religious themes, interest and spiritual insight would count for more than formal information, and it can scarcely be doubted that, however much or little he may have been taught, there had already appeared in him a degree of intelligent interest in the spiritual life which, while not out of harmony with his childish estate, was entirely exceptional for a child of his age.

How and when did Jesus come to the consciousness of his unique relation to God and his Messianic mission? Did that consciousness come suddenly and immediately, either at the dawn of conscious mental life, as the old apocryphal stories assume, or at the time of his baptism, or at some point between? Or was there a gradual unfolding of the divine purpose concerning himself, beginning with more spiritual views of God and of human life and leading finally to the full consciousness of his personal mission? We have not sufficient data for answering the question fully, but in the absence of decisive proof to the contrary, we would naturally assume that as Jesus grew in wisdom and stature there was a growing knowledge of himself and his Father through all those silent years.

"Knew ye not that I must be in my Father's house?" What light do these words throw upon Jesus' knowledge of his unique Sonship at this time? It may be worth considering whether the evangelist, in making the record a generation after the death of Jesus, did not introduce here, by a very natural anachronism, the phrase "my Father," which Jesus so often, during his ministry, used in referring to God, but which he would have been less likely to use at the age of twelve years.

But, taking the words as we find them, they can scarcely be interpreted at all without finding in them at least some shadowy anticipation of a peculiarly intimate relation to God. The conception of God as father was not wholly foreign to the Jews, but even to a devout Jew it was not likely to come in that directly personal way—"my Father." On the other hand, the whole spirit of the narrative forbids us to take it as a complete recognition of unique sonship. He was interested in religious things. He felt at home among them as a child feels at home in his father's house, and he suggested to his mother that she might reasonably have expected to find him in the place of his highest interest.

A Calendar with a Personality.

Some people think the calendar crop has fallen off in recent years. However that may be, we are getting our full assortment. The kind we like best of all is the one published by N. W. Ayer & Son, the "Keeping Everlastingly At It" Advertising Agents of Philadelphia. For the purposes of a business calendar nothing we know of equals it, yet as a specimen of the printer's art it takes highest rank and will harmonize with the finest office furnishings and decorations.

The epigrams printed in the blank spaces will interest those who are interested in advertising, and that means an increased number every year. They are good reading and furnish a hint as to the why of the success of this firm and its clients.

The publishers have issued this calendar for many years and state it as their experience that when a business man has lived with it for a year he is unwilling to do without it. The edition is limited; while they last, twenty-five cents sent to N. W. Ayer & Son will bring one.

COULSON.

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. Anna Coulson, of New Douglas, Ill. She was one of the most faithful of Christian women. George L. Snively preached the funeral sermon on New Year's day.

EDWARDS.

At the home of Bro. Isaac Henthorne, Amos H. Edwards, his father-in-law, died Dec. 30, 1905, aged eighty-eight years, eleven months and one day. Deceased was born at Mount Holly, Vt., Jan. 29, 1817. His life motto was "To do good." He was a teacher about forty years. He married, Aug. 1, 1843, at Greenfield, N. H., Miss Eliza C. Grant, a second cousin to Gen. U. S. Grant. He leaves, surviving, five sons and one daughter, Sister Henthorne, whose filial and loving ministrations soothed him in his last illness. The funeral service was conducted by the writer at the home of Brother Henthorne. The interment was at Kearney, Neb.

HODGEKINS.

To live ninety-five years in this world of trial without leaving a stain upon character is certainly a noble achievement; but to use those years in such a way as to make them contribute to the highest development of all the Christian graces is not only a worthy achievement, but it is so unusual as to demand very special consideration. All this and more was true of Mrs. James P. Hodgekins, whose death took place Nov. 19, 1905. Mrs. Hodgekins was the mother of Mrs. Amelia Farrington, widow of the late beloved George B. Farrington, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who, for so many years, was the mainstay of the Christian church at that place. Mrs. Hodgekins was in many respects a remarkable woman. If it be true, as the Scriptures teach, that "in quietness and in confidence" shall be our strength, then her course of life was eminently calculated to increase strength. She was a Christian from her early childhood, and was one of the pioneers in the state of New York, who pleaded for simply the New Testament Christianity. Her patience in suffering, her courage in necessity, her courtesy in her social relations and her contentment in whatever position she was placed, were all remarkable. Very few mothers in Israel have left a more enduring influence behind them. Truly it may be said of her, "she rests from her labors and her works do follow her."

RENFRO.

T. A. Renfro was born in Madison county, Ill., May 4, 1835, and died at his home in Milton, Ia., Nov. 6, 1905. He came to Iowa in 1845 and was baptized by Elder Joel Plue and united with the Church of Christ in 1859. For more than thirty-five years he was a faithful minister of the Gospel and large numbers of people became obedient to the faith under his preaching. He was largely self-educated, was possessed with an unusually strong intellect, was an able preacher, and but few men in southern Iowa were better known and had a greater influence for good. He organized the church at Milton and was its pastor, in all, six years, serving two years each at three different times. A remarkable thing about his ministry was that he kept a complete record of his ministerial labors, giving the text, time and place where he preached each sermon. He was married to Miss Emma Plue, Sept. 7, 1859, and she remained his faithful companion until separated by death. His widow and two daughters. Mrs Lizzie Knizel, of Denver, Col., and Mrs Alfred Jolly, of Milton, Ia., survive him. The funeral services were conducted by his old personal friend, M. Downing, of Bloomfield, Ia.

B. S. DENNY.

Des Moines, Ia.

WOOD.

William C. Wood was born in Mason county, Ky., Nov. 19, 1830, and died in Chillicothe, Mo., Wednesday, Dec 6, 1905. He was for years a faithful member of the Christian Church, a deacon, and held both county and city offices. He was honored for his sterling worth, and for qualities of mind and heart that were the result of years of ripening in the "faith once for all delivered to the saints." He was humble, faithful, pure, and we shall miss him from his place in the house of the Lord.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I like your plea for oneness in The Christian-Evangelist for December 21, and see no good reason why the Disciples and the dozen or more sects of Adventists and other denominations of Christians should not unify. In New Testament usage "The Church" is the name of the body of believers in Christ about 100 times; "The Church of God" and "The Church of Christ" about half a dozen times each, with name of place, when local.

Process: Believe into Christ (it is eis, not en); then testify. Confess your faith in him by baptism into his name, showing hope of resurrection. We baptize believers, not sinners, on profession of faith in Christ, before baptism. O. R. L. Crozier.

[If Brother Crozier speaks for the Advent Christians, we can assure him that the way to unity with Christians who do not use the prefix "Advent" in their name, is very simple. Drop the prefix and the abnormal emphasis for which it stands, and let there be an all-around emphasis, in Scriptural proportion, of the whole of the New Testament teaching, and the thing is done!—Editor.]

"Brotherly Criticism."

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have been reading very closely all that has been said for the past two or three years on church federation and Christian union through The Christian-Evangelist. I have been reading The Christian-Evangelist more or less for twenty years with profit and pleasure; but I must confess that your position on church federation and Christian union puzzles me. There are some things you have said recently that ought not to pass without some brotherly criticism.

In your issue of November 16, "Editor's Easy Chair," you charge upon some of the brethren that their attitude toward the great union movement is pharisaical. I think this charge is unbrotherly.

I do not know of a representative man among the Disciples of Christ who would not gladly unite on any New Testament plan looking toward the union of all the churches in Christendom. Be it understood, I do not oppose union movements, but I do object to the plan or method you advocate to bring it about, and the method adopted by the Inter-Church Conference held in New York recently.

You ask: "Would not Jesus be in a great gathering like this?" If he were I am sure he would have submitted to that great body of representative men for their acceptance the same principles and platform he gave to the world almost two thousand years ago.

I next call the attention of your readers to your address before the Inter-Church Conference, as published in the issue of November 16: "A United Church and Religious Education." In view of the Lord's prayer, which you quote, and the plea of Christ and the apostles, the latter half of your address appears out of harmony with the whole teaching of the New Testament. Let us look at a paragraph or two: "We may not be prepared at present to consummate that unity of our religious forces which is contemplated in the prayer of our Lord, when he prayed that his followers might be one, even as he and the Father are one; but let none say that because such union is impracticable now, it will therefore forever be impracticable." Do you not virtually teach that Jesus' prayer was impracticable when he offered it, or would be at some future time? If it was practicable then, why not now?

"Such a convention as this, which is now here assembled, would have been impracticable and impossible even ten years ago." I do not believe it. It is out of harmony with the prayer of Jesus. It is not in harmony with the teaching of the apostles. It was for this very purpose that Jesus came into the world, to unite in one body all people (Eph. 1:9, 10; 2:12-21).

If Christian union is impracticable and impossible now, when will it be practicable and possible? If your position is tenable and true, I can not see any reason for such a conference as convened in New York, on November 15, 1905. It is a hard doctrine that a great body of representative men of 18,000,000 people can not come together and agree to drop all human and party names, and simply be known as Christians.

I think from what has already been reported of the Inter-Church Conference that the plan to be submitted to "Thirty Religious Bodies" will only add another organization to the hundreds of organizations that now already exist, without effecting the desired end. I hope this will not be true. I think it was Mr. Jacobs, of Chicago, the great Sunday-school worker, who said in substance some time ago that we could delay the coming of Christ a thousand years by simply failing to do our duty.

S. R. Drake.

[1. We welcome "brotherly criticism." It is always interesting and often instructive to see the different points of view of different persons on any subject. Our brother says he does "not know of a representative man among the Disciples of Christ who would not gladly unite on any New Testament plan looking toward the union of all the churches in Christendom." Nor do we. But we know of several *un*representative men who would require conformity to their peculiar views and opinions in order to union. These are they who stand aloof from their brethren, who differ from them, and thank God that they are not as other men, who introduce innovations and departures from the word of God. Pharisaism is not too harsh a term for such persons.

2. The Editor's address before the Inter-Church Conference is criticised because it states that Christian unity, as Christ prayed for it, may not be immediately practicable. Does our critic believe that it is? He says: "If Christian union is impracticable now, when will it be practicable?" It will be practicable when Christian people will cease to make their opinions and methods terms of Christian fellowship, and are willing to be one on the broad New Testament basis. That time is not yet. This may be a "hard doctrine," but it simply states a fact which every one must recognize as true. Our critic wishes to know why the Inter-Church Conference should have been held, if Christian unity is not practicable. With the view of making it practicable, of course, by removing prejudice and misunderstanding. Our critic evidently does not discriminate between what is right and what is practicable. It would certainly be right for Christians to unite now if they were in a condition to do so. It is the duty of those who believe in Christian union to prepare the way for it.

3. Mr. Jacobs was right. We may delay the union of Christians, and therefore the conversion of the world, a long time, through our failure to see our opportunity and to perform our duty. This is why we are so concerned that we shall not fail to do our duty in relation to the great union movement among the churches of Protestantism.—Editor.]

What Is It All About?

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have been greatly interested in the discussion on the Holy Spirit now being carried on in The Christian-Evangelist. I frankly confess that I have so far failed to gather from the discussion whether the contention relates to correct interpretation of Scripture regarding the gift of the Holy Spirit, or to the fact of the actual indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the mind and heart of Christians.

Without troubling you with my opinion on the subject, I desire to submit two questions, by answering which you will confer a great favor on me:

1. Can one know, beyond the possibility of doubt, by his feelings or emotions, when he receives the Holy Spirit? And,

2. If he can, why is there such earnest contention on the subject among men whose piety and sincerity there is no reason to question? T. Davis.

Boone, Iowa.

[Replying to the questions above, we would say: 1. That no one can "know beyond the possibility of doubt" any spiritual result, because spiritual knowledge may become clouded by sin or unbelief. The possession of the Holy Spirit is a spiritual fact which is attested not by sensible or physical emotions, but by spiritual results, including what is enumerated by Paul as the "fruits of the Spirit." One possessing these fruits in his heart and life may know that he is in possession of the Holy Spirit.

2. The discussion referred to either results from rationalistic tendencies, which lead one to deny what he can not explain, or from some philosophical presupposition which prevents one from accepting the doctrine of the indwelling Spirit, or from the habit of ascribing to secondary or instrumental causes those internal experiences which are properly attributable to the Holy Spirit.

The discussion with Brother McGarvey has not been so much about the fact of the indwelling Spirit in the Christian as about the privilege and duty of Christians to pray for the Holy Spirit. The realities for which we are contending are: 1. The personal influence of the Holy Spirit upon the hearts and lives of Christians, and, 2. The privilege and duty of Christians to pray for a larger measure of the Holy Spirit, until they shall be "filled with all the fulness of God."—Editor.]

The Hundredth Tree.—II.

BY WILLIAM A. WURTS.

(Concluded from last week.)

Growing more fervent, as was his custom, as he proceeded in his prayer, he invoked the aid of the Great Power to "watch over and protect the widow and fatherless"; to "guard them from loss and disappointment and hardship, either through their own or others' acts, and grant to them all the desires and necessities of this life that to the Infinite Wisdom may seem right and just." He prayed, too, "that to all may be given the desire to walk uprightly and deal honestly by their fellow men"; and that "if any one among us, even unto the stranger within our gates, has through his own direct acts or the acts of another to which he may have contributed, in any way wronged others, may the desire to make reparation by any means in his power be put into his heart and held there as a sacred trust."

As he arose to give out the closing hymn the deacon glanced again toward the door. The young man's seat was vacant. He had slipped out during the prayer as quietly as he had entered.

The day had been sultry, and as Hetty started along the road homeward from the meeting, little tongues of lightning shot across the western horizon, and on tree and bush the leaves hung motionless in that dead calm which so often presages a storm. There was little light, but this did not concern her, for she knew the road well. She was thinking of the deacon's prayer, and wondering if others in the meeting could have suspected the motive that had prompted it.

Suddenly, with a little startled exclamation, she stopped short in her rapid walk, for a few paces ahead of her as she was passing the wood-lot a figure stepped out into the road.

"I beg your pardon; it's only I—Allen Talbot," it said. "I didn't mean to frighten you, but—"

"Oh!" she exclaimed; then, recovering herself, though her breath came in a little nervous flutter, for there, over his head, just a few feet beyond, towered the solitary hickory, "I—I didn't know—I thought—Why, how do you happen to be here so late, Mr. Talbot?"

"I didn't 'happen'; I came with a purpose. I wanted to see something for myself. But won't you shake hands? Five years is a long time, I know, but I've counted on a friendly welcome from you ever since I knew I was to come back here."

She took the hand so frankly held out; she could hardly in courtesy refuse, and to tell the truth, she didn't really wish to.

"Two days ago," he said, "I heard things from my uncle's attorney that I didn't know before. He told me of that," and he pointed toward the wood-lot, "and I've heard it again—not quite so directly, perhaps—at the meeting to-night."

"Why, were you there?" asked Hetty, surprised.

"Only for a little while. I slipped in near the door; no one saw me, I guess—no one but Deacon Hewlett. I saw you going in; I wanted to speak to you; and when I'd finished my business at the village, I came back."

"I must hurry; it's going to rain," said Hetty, ill at ease. In the west a black, pyramidal cloud was banking up higher and higher, and distant rumblings told what was coming.

"But, Hetty—Miss Windham—just a minute! I want to tell you about—about my uncle—how sorry I am. I know what poor things apologies are—how little they count—but I feel as if I ought. I can't think he meant it. He was unfortunate—I know now—but he was always honest. I never dreamed he was in difficulty until I heard he was gone."

"Tell me," she said, and her eyes searched his in the dim light, "was it true what he said about your costing him so much at college?"

"That's what the deacon meant by 'the stranger within our gates,'" he said bitterly. "I knew because I heard it all two days ago, and the deacon had been staring straight at me before he began. I hadn't the courage to meet you then, even to apologize, for I knew you and he had talked it over. So I slipped out again while he was praying."

"But is it true?" persisted Hetty, hoping in her heart he could say no.

"I—I'm afraid so. His attorney says so. I know I was extravagant—culpably so, perhaps, but I didn't think of it then. I thought there was loads of money—that I had only to ask—for it had always been so, and uncle was generous and never refused me. And besides, even the proper cost of a technical education, after college, is a lot now-a-days. Then all at once everything stopped, and I knew what it was to be without money myself. God knows I'm sincerely sorry on your account and your mother's!"

"Yes, I'm sorry, too," said Hetty, and her voice faltered suspiciously. As they talked they had unconsciously walked on ten yards or so beyond the tree. The black cloud had overtopped the zenith, and big drops were falling.

"Here, take my raincoat," he said; "I ought not to have kept you." And he threw it over her shoulders. "But don't think everything has gone to smash. I believe my uncle will come back some time; and anyway, my life is all before me and I—"

A blinding flash illuminated everything around, and his words were drowned in the terrific report, like the explosion of a bomb, which instantly followed.

"Look out!" screamed Hetty, with a terror-stricken glance at the tree. "Look out! It's falling!" And with a sigh and a shiver, more than half of the old hickory, riven by the bolt, came crashing toward them.

At her cry he had hurriedly pushed her ahead of him, and she, having an instant's earlier warning, was out of harm's way; but the bolt had dazed him, and as he staggered after her a giant branch caught him and pinned him to the ground.

"Whoa! Hello there! What's the matter?" shouted a voice out of the blackness, and the deacon's old buckboard rounded the bend in the road behind them, its lantern making a little twinkling eye of light that served to show him some one was ahead. "What! You, Hetty? Why, what on earth! —Hello! What's this!" for she was bending over, trying frantically to raise the branch from the form lying prone beneath it. "Here! Hold the lantern an' give me a try. You couldn't budge that limb in a week. Ain't dead, is he? There now—jest pull him out a mite if you can, when I heave up the limb." And his brawny shoulders strained mightily, while Hetty, with all the power of her strong young muscles, gently drew out from beneath the branch its unconscious victim.

"Hold on, now, till I lead Jess around this ruck, an' we'll put him in the wagon. My gracious! That was an awful crack! I knew it struck pretty clos't. Now," he directed as he lifted Talbot to the back of the buckboard, "can you steady him a little so's he don't pitch out? We'll drive to your house—it's the nearest—and then I'll git the doctor. I reckon it's a job for you an' your mother, though I guess 'tain't more than a broken leg, maybe."

Deacon Jerry's diagnosis was right, but even a broken leg brings days of tiresome waiting for nature to supplement the surgeon's skill. Still, to Allen Talbot they were anything but tiresome, though he chafed under his sense of obligation to those upon whom he, of all others, had so little claim. Hetty seemed to ignore completely all thought of this. He was "the stranger within their gates," and they must be good to him. And besides—well, perhaps there were other reasons.

"I'll never have such a nurse again, Hetty," he said when he could get about on crutches. "I'd almost risk the other leg some time, if I thought I should."

"You'd better not," she said; "you might find it worse next time—the break, I mean."

"I couldn't find the rest of it better, anyhow—I'm sure of that," with a grateful look in his eyes. "Do you know, Hetty, now I'm getting about again I want to finish what I was saying when that tree caught me—that I wanted to take that debt upon myself, for likely I did help make it. And though it may be some time yet, I want you to feel that it isn't hopeless, at least."

"Don't let's talk of it; I try not to think of it any more. It can't do any good to mourn over it. Let's just leave it to Providence and Deacon Jerry," she said, as he saw that in his eyes which caused her to turn her own away and look across the fields where the splintered stump of the old hickory still pointed toward the sky.

"But I want to talk of it—I can't help it," he said petulantly. "Do you think I could rest under this sense of obligation for your kindness and not think of it? Oh, yes, I see what you're looking at! Well, it's done now, anyway; the last of the hundred; and that makes it all the more my debt, for I really believe that Providence heard Deacon Jerry that night and sent me under the tree just so I should have all the more reason to cancel it. And, Hetty—it'll likely be a long time before I can; but until then—until I can see my way to do it—don't you think that—that you could take me as a sort of hostage for it? And if I succeed—if I work awfully hard and prove to you that I really mean it all—that you'd be willing to keep me, afterward?"

A new light shone from her eyes as she put her hand in his. 'Why couldn't I help, Allen?" she said shyly. "Perhaps if I make it my debt too, we'll find it easier working it out together."

When she told the deacon, he didn't seem surprised.

"But I reckon I was right in my idees about makin' such things special subjects of prayer," he said. "Only I can't say I really did have faith to think Providence 'd set things movin' quite as fast as that."—The Interior.

The College Kitten.

BY L. R. HORNISH.

A Eureka Reminiscence.

Who brought it or where it came from, I never knew, but when I returned from class on a bleak December day and entered my study room, a little gray kitten lay curled up before the fire. Now I, though a great big boy, like kittens and always have; my mother likes them, too, and so did her mother before her, though there is a tradition of her trying to hang one once for some grave misdemeanor; I, however, never believed this.

So when I saw this little one a tender chord in my heart began to vibrate. I thought of our own happy cat, called by mother the Awknoud of Swatz, but bearing the general title of Mr. Pickwick. He was once a wanderer, homeless, ragged and hungry. Then I wondered what the fate of this kitten would be; whether it would add grace and finish to some warm fireside or, after the next chill blast had swept the land and left its white mantle over a frigid earth, would kitty be found, cold and lifeless, a victim to the storm and sad evidence of the heartlessness of man?

The innocent kitten, as if it understood my thoughts, came purring and jumped upon my knee, seeming to say: "You'll not turn me away hungry and cold, I know." "No, little kitten," thought I, "though it might not do for you to abide here, you shall have one good meal anyhow"; so I slipped a piece of meat into my pocket at supper, and taking the kitten downstairs and out of doors—with many misgivings, I left it in the hands of Providence. At night the plaintive mewing of a kitten sounded in the hall, and in the morning one of the boys, the leading spirit in all our mischievous plots (although studying for the ministry) said he got up in the night to throw a kitten downstairs, but it mewed so sweetly and innocently that he took it in.

After breakfast we called at H's room with meat for the kitten, but it was nowhere to be seen; however, on calling, the covers of the bed began to ruffle, and out jumped kitty, greatly refreshed and with splendid appetite for his morning's meal. A consultation was held at which it was determined that kitty should be adopted by the boys and become the common property of the hall; it was also agreed that each should take turns in caring for it at night. The first night, as occupant of room number 1, it was decreed the turn of W. What was to be done? W. flatly refused this favor, and, with bolted doors, sat in defiance in his den! Such conduct, such an example in a hall of good intentions, was not to be tolerated.

A posse of boys assembled before his room talking together, and now and then rapping loudly upon his door, but no answer was given. The supper bell now rang and we all hurried away. After a hasty supper we hid in ambush for W's return, and when he came through the hall we pounced upon him, and, while one held the kitten, we gave him such a lecture that even his hard nature softened and he promised in faltering accents to keep pussy from all harm.

I left the hall that evening (Friday) wondering if, when I came again on Monday, I should find the kitten, but there he was, growing fat and looking very comfortable indeed.

An elderly lady, Mrs. W., was employed to sweep the hall and make the beds. Now, it may surprise you, but this old lady had a great aversion to cats, and especially to innocent kittens; she even had the audacity to tell me that she had, the day before, thrown our kitten out of the window! She seemed to think nothing of this at all, but I, then and there, told her my opinion of the matter; told her how I had always thought women to be more tender hearted and kindlier than boys and men, and how her conduct surprised me. I asked her if she would like to be thrown from the window herself, but she only smiled and went on with her dusting. Old prejudices are hard to efface from old hearts.

At noon of the next day kitty was nowhere to be found; not in P's room nor in mine; nor in my neighbor's; not in H's bed; nor on the rug in the corner. Gone! The milk was in the saucer for its dinner; the boys had gathered as usual to watch it play and caper about, but kitty was nowhere to be seen.

Dark hints were now thrown out linking Mrs. W. with the mysterious disappearance. She had been heard to say, "I ain't goin' to have no pesky cat or kitten under my feet." No one had been in the hall that morning but Mrs. W. and the girl who helped her, and the girl firmly denied being party to such an act; but Mrs. W. only smiled, a sinister smile, the boys said.

What better evidence of guilt could be given? It was perfectly clear to us who had killed the kitten and who must suffer for it. That very evening W. covered the upper hall with ashes; P. tipped over the tables and piled the chairs in the corner, and later, the whole building was aroused by two buckets of coal that tumbled downstairs with awful uproar and filled the stairway with chunks and dust. This tumult speedily brought Professor C., the hall manager, upon the scene; he, stumbling to the foot of the stairs, was completely enveloped in a bed comforter dropped from above; but when at last the professor reached the head of the stairs, boiling over with wrath, every boy was in his room studiously at work.

But you should have seen Mrs. W. next morning as she swept up the coal ashes and straightened the hall! The way she berated boys generally; the way she lampooned and lashed about was a sight to be seen and one that was seen and enjoyed by more than one. Now, how it got there I don't know, but as Mrs. W. left the hall, with many threatenings and great show of disgust, a piece of white paper pinned to her back gently waved to and fro, on which, in capital letters, were the words, "I KILLED THE KITTEN."

The Old Year and the New.

BY J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

"He came to my desk with a quivering lip,
His lesson was done.
'Dear teacher, I want a new leaf,' he said,
'I have spoiled this one.'
I took the old leaf, so stained and blotted,
And gave him a new one, all unspotted,
And into his sad heart smiled,
'Do better now, my child.'

"I went to the throne with a quivering soul,
The old year was done.
'Dear Father, hast thou a new leaf for me?
I have spoiled this one.'
He took the old leaf, so stained and blotted,
And gave me a new one, all unspotted,
And into my sad heart smiled,
'Do better now, my child.' "

How many lives in the book given us at the beginning of the year 1906 are now "all stained and blotted"! Resolutions broken; promises unkept; opportunities neglected; the word of encouragement we did not speak; the kind letter we did not write—these and a thousand other little sins of omission have helped to mar the beauty of that book whose pages were once all bright and fair, for—

"It is not the thing we do, dear,
But the thing we leave undone,
That gives us a bit of heartache
At the setting of the sun."

But let us not suppose that there are no sins of commission. There is "transgression" as well as "disobedience." And not only are there two ways of sinning—transgressing and disobeying—but there are two classes of sins—those of the disposition and those of the body; there is "the pride of life," as well as "the lusts of the flesh." The Elder Brother exemplifies the former class while the Prodigal Son displays those of the latter. The sin of disobedience is greater, we believe, than that of transgression, as it can be remedied only by rendering obedience, which, if not done, will forever preclude the idea of salvation and pardon. So, too, do we believe the sins of the disposition to be worse than those of the body. There are those who would not think of raising to their lips a cup of liquor, yet they themselves are drunken with envy, malice and prejudice. The Elder Brother condemned the wayward life of the Prodigal, yet there is little doubt but that his own unrelenting spirit and unforgiving heart were greater sins in the eyes of his father than hose sins of the flesh which, in his younger brother, he was so ready to condemn. At any rate, "all have sinned and come short." We have all made our mistakes, and will continue to make them in this life. Only dead men make no mistakes. But we must not allow ourselves to become discouraged because of past failures.

"Has your life been bitter sorrow?
Live it down.
Think about a bright to-morrow,
Live it down.
You will find it never pays
Just to sit wet-eyed and gaze
On the grave of vanished days,
Live it down."

So we take our leave of the old year, with its sunshine and shadow, its successes and failures, its losses and gains, its good and evil; and, with our cares behind and our hearts ahead, "we press toward the goal."

The new year is now before us and we all have another book given us whose pages are fair and whose pictures are beautiful. For this let us "thank God and take courage."

"Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every morn is the world made new,
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you,
A hope for me and a hope for you."

Comforting thought! Glorious hope!

Gleanings From January Magazines.

About Habit.

Because we have not hitherto had the best possible habits is no reason why we should not begin to form them in 1906. Professor James, who has made a profound study of habit, has furnished us with one or two excellent maxims on the subject. First, he tells us that it is indispensable to begin with "as strong and as decided an initiative as possible. Accumulate all the possible circumstances which shall reinforce the right motive. Put yourself assiduously in conditions that encourage the new way and make engagements incompatible with the old; in short, envelope your resolution with every aid you know. Never suffer an exception to occur until the new habit is securely rooted in your life. Each lapse is like the letting fall of a ball of string which one is carefully winding up; a single slip undoes more than a great many turns will wind again. Let the expression of your habit be the least thing in the world, speaking genially to one's grandmother, or giving up one's seat in a horse car if nothing more heroic offers. But let it not fail to take place."—Margaret E. Sangster, in Woman's Home Companion.

The Hope of America.

An editorial in the January Century suggests that we are deteriorating in our demagogues, but points out grounds of hope for America's future:

It is to be feared that in the future the danger from the demagogues in American politics is perhaps greater than ever. It sometimes looks as if we were deteriorating as to the character of our demagogues; as if some even of our decent citizens were willing to advance the fortunes of politicians of more disreputable record, of more vindictiveness in their methods, of more loathsome cant and hypocrisy, and of more evil influence, than have hitherto been able to make good men their dupes. In every community there is crying need of men, young and old, who will take a hand in civic concerns, not for the graft that is in them, not merely for the glory that is in them, but in a pure and patriotic spirit and with the love of and the reward of legitimate fame. Our institutions are making such men; two bright examples are now living and greatly honored among us—inspirations to all. One of these men has been the President of our country, and one is now its President. The country that has found and used and honored such men is capable of producing more of the same fibre—and, in fact, is doing so before our eyes. In this is the hope of America.

Coffins and Filial Piety.

A coffin is not the ghastly object in China that it is considered in the West. A man will purchase his coffin while he has money to command a good one, and will think nothing of having it standing around in his home waiting for him. Not only so, after a man is in his coffin, it is not at all uncommon for his family to keep the corpse sealed in its coffin for years, waiting to accumulate money enough to give the body a fine funeral. We know a man whose father died while he was a child. The widow kept the body until the child grew up, and had had his education; then before the young man should go abroad to receive his physician's degree, he stopped at home long enough to bury his father. This act of the son was a bit of filial piety.

Filial piety ramifies and modifies domestic economy, political economy, and everything else that has to do with human relations in China. It produces some odd results in some of its operations as, for instance, when a man gave all his attention to getting his father's corpse out of the burning home, and in the meantime his wife and children were burned to death. We have been told that there is a death penalty in China for letting one's father's corpse burn. Of course if the law teaches the lesson implied by fixing such a penalty there may be some excuse for a man's misdirected activity. Then the Chinese have a saying that, if a man lose a wife, he can get another, but he can not get another parent. This man made the sentiment cover care of the corpse as well as care of the living parent.—Mary Porter Gamewell, in The Chautauquan.

Unbusinesslike Farming.

The layman can hardly realize the lack of system that prevails on the average farm. Drainage is little thought of on the lowlands, crops are rotated only as chance determines, and probably not one farmer in a hundred can tell what enterprise on his farm and under his conditions is the most profitable. In no other business is it likely that men can be found with $10,000, $20,000 or $50,000 investments who never pretend to keep books of the business. Farmers' books are too often kept in this manner—gain, money in the bank; loss, money borrowed. The writer once argued this question of keeping books with a well-to-do American farmer, who finally concluded his argument by saying, "Farming ain't all keeping books, by a long shot." Truth lies in the argument, but keeping books is not all there is to manufacturing furniture or transporting freight, and yet it must be a valuable accessory or it would have been discarded years ago.

There are still thousands of farmers in the middle West who do not follow the markets, who rarely, if ever, stop to consider the relation between prices of feeds and prices of beef and pork. Hogs are fed because "there is money in hogs," and many an operation on the farm is done according to some preconceived notion. The writer knows a German farmer in western Minnesota who has a beautiful, clean farm, and is evidently prosperous. While watching him feed his hogs one day, this conversation took place: "How old are those pigs?" "Sixteen months." "Why don't you sell them?" "Well, I don't like to sell a hog until he weighs up good and heavy." Further conversation revealed the facts that corn was worth forty-two cents per bushel and pork four dollars per hundred weight, live weight. When asked if the pigs he was feeding were gaining enough to equal or exceed the value of the corn, and pay him for his labor, he realized that each bushel of corn had got to produce about twelve pounds of pork to yield him any profit. Knowing that his pigs were not gaining the half of that amount, he decided to sell both pigs and corn.—Edward C. Parker, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews.

The Chinese Newspaper.

Archibald R. Colquhoun contributes to the January number of the "North American Review" an interesting and informing article on "The Chinese Press of Today." Peking is the home of the oldest newspaper in the world, the "Peking Gazette"; and, long before the modern newspaper made its appearance in China, there was an extensive use of placards and broadsheets, which, though they often contained criticisms of the government, were not censored, and indeed there are no press laws in existence in the Middle Kingdom to-day. The first modern newspaper was published in China in 1870, but the growth of the Chinese press was slow until after the Boxer rising. Now Peking has three daily papers and two fortnightly ones; Tientsin has three dailies; Shanghai has sixteen daily papers; Foochow, Soochow and Canton between them have some six or seven dailies; while there are five at Hong Kong and one at Kiaochow. Besides, several papers are now published in the interior. In all these, there are, as in American and English papers, leaders and leaderettes, news items, telegrams, scraps of general information and advertisements. In describing the Chinese paper, Mr. Colquhoun says:

"Along the top, where we are accustomed to see the title, runs the pious exhortation to 'respect the written word,' and the custom of reverently collecting and burning all printed matter still survives, although it is neglected in some of the treaty ports. Special correspondence is 'conveyed' from the foreign press, and not always well

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and can not compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy.

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

translated, which leads to many ludicrous mistakes. The acknowledgment is made to a 'Western Friend,' and the leading papers have a foreigner to advise on foreign news, but some of the more advanced statesmen have men to translate direct to them, as had Li Hung Chang. Advertisements in the more popular papers are much in evidence, as in our own papers, and war news is given prominence. This is a modern development, for at the time of the Chino-Japanese war the defeats of China were never chronicled, but imaginary victories were dithyrambically described, and the same happened in some parts of China at the time of the Boxer movement. As a rule, the articles in Chinese papers and magazines are not signed, but the niceties of style are such that the authors are soon recognized locally; whereas, in Japan, the leading writers enjoy quite a national reputation. This does not imply that the Japanese pressman is well paid, any more than his Chinese brother, for the maximum salary of the former rarely exceeds a hundred pounds a year, and is oftener between thirty and fifty. The Chinese is even more poorly paid.

The Age of Political Enlightenment.

Since the beginning of the twentieth century empire building has continued to spread; but, in recent years, the strength of democracy and of the new play of world forces has been spreading in proportion. The student of international affairs must perforce follow not only effects, but causes. A revolution means much, but the causes that produce it mean more. We close the year with the glare of revolution over Western Europe, and the light of progress burning steadily and brightly in the East. There were mutterings and rumblings in Central Europe. In that witches' caldron, the Balkans, by the light of the moon, men in peasant's dress, but with weapons in their hands, passionately talk of liberty and independence. In the north of Europe there has been a bloodless revolution and a dual kingdom has been cleft in twain. There is a spirit of unrest. Blind obedience to the divine rights of kings no longer exists.—A. Maurice Low, in the Forum.

Silly Women and Their Gowns.

Although the selling of old clothes—old, so to speak, because, while the garments are second-hand, they have not been worn more than two or three times—by society women is a practice of long standing, few out of the theatrical world know to what extent it is done. Should one happen to wander into one of the numerous little shops scattered along Sixth avenue, between Thirty-third and Thirty-ninth streets, New York, he would be surprised at the quantity and quality of expensive garments, rich silks and brocades, chiffon and lace gowns, which are displayed there for sale.

The secret of their sale is that women who are seen everywhere that society congregates seldom wear the same gown more than three times, for she who aspires to leading, or even following, knows that dressing well is half the battle, and she who dresses well must constantly be seen in new and expensive garments. A gown made over would be instantly recognized and the wearer would be secretly accused of trying to economize, so the only alternative is to sell the garments; for, contrary to popular opinion, neither poor relations nor ladies' maids come in for the harvest of silks and satins. A lady sells these because she has no further use for them.—Leslie's Weekly.

Business Maxims Applied to Church Work.

It would be businesslike not only to send resignations to neglectful church officers, but also to privates who are perpetually on a furlough from their duties, doing nothing beyond running an excuse factory. With the watchword, "A business of religion," each church should thoroughly revise its rolls at least once a year, as Sunday-schools do once a quarter, and business firms oftener still, and make the list include only "practicing Christians," lest it should be publicly credited, as so many unpruned churches have been, with keeping in its fellowship "practicing knaves."

The chief of a kraal in Natal, South Africa, gives his consent to his people becoming Christians, thus: "If you become better men and women by becoming Christians, you may remain so; if not, I won't let you be Christians at all." That is a good rule for Americans as well as for Africans.

If our religion "means business" it will take just as much rain, just as much heat, just as much cold, just as much weariness, to keep us from church and Christian duty as from our daily occupations. What would you think of a man who went to his business only in fair weather? What success would you expect for a young man who never went to his work when the thermometer was above or below "temperate"? How long would you employ a man who did not come to his work when he found himself a little weary or indisposed or not feeling like it? How many of your excuses for absence from meetings on Sunday or on week days, or for other neglect of duty, would stand the analysis of the question, "Would this same excuse be sufficient to keep me from my earthly business or from an expected pleasure?" That question is a good standard for measuring a Christian's excuses. If an excuse will stand that test, it is doubtless a good one.

"A business of religion"—that was the idea in the mind of a certain boy to whom a preacher said, "Is your father a Christian?" The lad replied, "Yes, sir; but he ain't working at it much lately."

A minister, recently settled in a Connecticut town, called one Saturday upon a photographer to have his picture taken. The artist did not recognize him. He was very busy with a holiday rush, and could not appoint any time for a sitting. After a moment's pause, however, he turned abruptly to the minister with the question, "Are you much of a Christian?" A little surprised at such an unexpected question, the minister said that he was trying to be a Christian. The artist then remarked that he would be in his rooms the next morning (Sunday) between the hours of nine and twelve, and would be happy to see him if he would drop in then. "Between those hours I shall be in the pulpit, preaching the Gospel," replied the minister, "and will return the compliment and ask you to drop in and see me there instead." "Oh, good-morning!" said the artist, with a sheepish look upon his face, as he perceived his mistake and disappeared in his dark room.

That Chicago expressman who advertised at the moving time "Furniture loaded so as to show to the best advantage," manifested a deep knowledge of one of the most dangerous traits of human nature—the desire to seem other than we are. Our Christianity must be as deep as truth, or it is not secure against the epidemic of fraud.

As a cure for this sham religion we must cultivate TRUTH. I do not mean merely its surface, veracity, but its depth, reality. We need to introduce the Eastlake style into character-building as well as houses; that is, instead of seeking outwardness and show by veneering and varnishing, let us be what we seem. This is TRUTH, for which the man was seeking who prayed, "Lord, make me real."

I had a dream—whether day-dream or night-dream matters not—that was strangely significant. I was approaching a large city by railroad. I looked from the car windows and saw upon barns and fences the signs: "Go to 1150 Main street for all kinds of books at lowest prices." Near it in several cases was the picture of a man with a carpet-bag in his hand, walking rapidly, and below the picture were the words, "I'm going to 1151 Main street for ready-made goods." Another inscription told of a large assortment of jewelry at 1155 Main street. I reached the city, and hurried to "1150 Main street." A large sign over the door and handbills in the window announced "Books of all sorts at very low prices." I went in. The bookseller was there, but not a book was to be seen in the store. He said that he was hoping that he might have some. I suppressed my indignation and went into "1151 Main street" for ready-made goods. Again I found a storekeeper, but not goods, although the store was covered with placards announcing "great bargains." In 1155 I found the same falsehood. Like the others, he expected stock some time. I walked along the street and found many such stores. On the whole street there were about 400 stores, and although every one had its glaring sign, only about two hundred had any goods to show. The king of the country came into the street and entered many of the stores to make purchases, but found so many places where they did not have goods corresponding to their signs and handbills that he ordered his attendants to pass through the street and tear down all the false signs and drive out all the false traders. Then there came the crash of falling signs, and I awoke to find that I had been dreaming over a church record. There were long rows of names with the sign "Christian" over them, but alas, how many had nothing but a sign; no fruits of the spirit behind the sign, no "love, joy peace, meekness, gentleness, patience"! None of that activity in Christlike work, none of that tenderness of Christlike sympathy, none of that unselfish devotion to the salvation of others that is implied in the name Christian! Our religion must be something more than a label. Who trusts in labels? Who thinks that the label "Butter" always means butter, or that "Honorable" is applied only to men of honor? When the King of kings comes to make up his jewels, what a crash there will be amid these false signs and labels, as many whose profession has said, "Lord, Lord," shall be driven out with the word, "I know you not—Depart!" Tear down your sign if you have gone out of the business, and do not delude passers-by with the expectation of finding goods that you have long since sold out.—From "Successful Men of To-day," by Wilbur F. Crafts.

The Advance Society Letters.

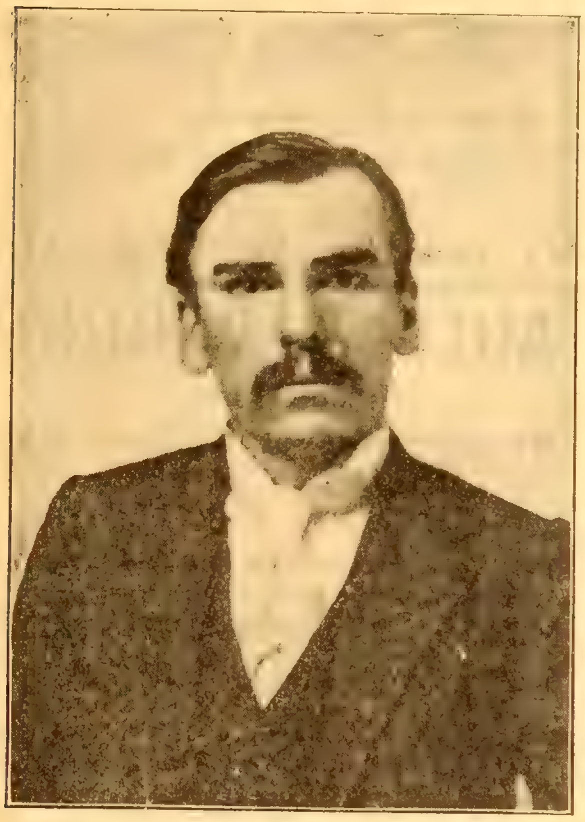
BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Next week begins our new continued story. As you might know from your experience with all of my stories, it will be a long one, running throughout the year. If you get on at this end I will see that you get safely off at the other end about next Christmas. That is, of course, unless Brother Garrison loses the last chapter. We will try to watch him. The new story is entitled, "The Secret Bowl." As there is no use to keep anybody in suspense I will come right out here and explain that it was a gold bowl and that the secret was engraved on it. Since it was engraved in English and had not become worn by time, of course anybody could have read it and so learned all about the secret, only, nobody had the bowl. You see, it was buried. They didn't know that. I mean at first. Afterward it grew rather exciting. But, all in all, "The Secret Bowl" is a story of sure enough people, young and old, and of experiences quite common enough. It is not a story of secret crimes, or of hairbreadth escapes, or of Indians. Still, I must not disguise the fact from you that it contains a secret. But you don't have to worry about the secret at all; that is in the story for the characters to worry about. The principal characters are a boy and a girl of exactly the same age. They had some troubles, but if they hadn't, who would want to read about them? Happy people are not interesting to read about. The dullest part of the United States History is when the presidents are prosing along without any wars on hand. Just suppose George Washington had led as peaceful a life as Van Buren, for instance, or Madison, or—who are the rest of them that always stayed at home? If Washington hadn't had wars and privations, he might have run a hatchet factory and nobody would have cared for him. I will tell you now that the story ends all right. You ought to know that so you will feel willing to read it for a whole year. If you followed it week by week only to have a big funeral next Christmas, you would feel that I had led you on to deceive you. This story ends just right to make everybody as happy as possible. Of course you can't make some people happy; it's no use to try. And now for a few of our first 1906 Av. S. letters:



J. BRECKINRIDGE ELLIS,
Who will Write our New Serial Story, Beginning Next Week.

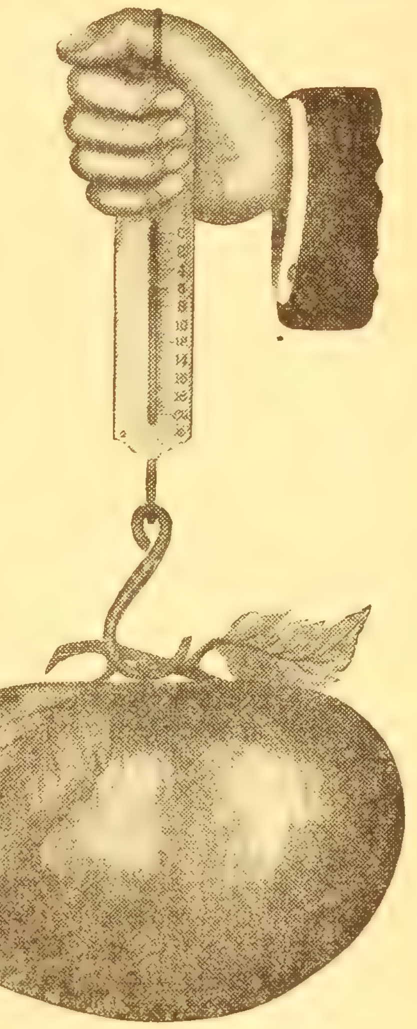
John Hillary, Orange, Cal.: "Most of your new members begin by saying, 'I am a little girl.' I am glad to say I am a boy. My age is 14. I have kept the Av. S. rules 12 weeks, just to see if I could. I'm going to keep them all 1906 if I can. I don't like poetry at all. Maybe if I make myself read it I will get to liking it. 'A Week with the Woodneys' was the best story you ever wrote. I'll tell you what I like about it. It seemed so much as if I was right there. At first it seemed funny for a 'week' to run all year. But I got to thinking; every week you told us about one hour. So if we could have read the story all at once, I mean if it had been printed in a book, it would have seemed a short week. I know I was sorry it didn't go on. I would like to know if the saloon was shut up. If you start us a new story, I wish it would be like 'The Woodneys.' You could just go on with them and give us the second week. I like that family. I feel as if I knew each one of them. I don't know what we can do for orphan Charlie. I don't see how he is ever to work with only one leg. He will have to make his living by using his mind. I wish I could help to educate him, but I am going to try to earn something to send." (By the way, my friend, George W. Dawson, of Kansas City, recently sent me $2 to be divided between Charlie and Drusie. And did I ever report that Mrs. Carrie P. Johnson, of Perrin, gave me a dollar?) Lillie Fisher, Dunlap, Mo.: "I like 'The Woodneys' very much; but I would like to know how Mrs. Geraldine came out with her novel. I got a good many things Christmas morning, among them Longfellow's short poems, presented by my teacher, Miss Mildred Creswell. I appreciate it very much." (It will help you on your Av. S. work.) "I am glad Felix concluded to stay with his friends in Arkansas, because we would hate to lose him out of the Av. S. By the way, my Uncle Albert Fisher is in Ark. on a vacation." (By the way I never before realized the appropriateness of having "Ark." stand for Arkansas. It is doubtless because there is such a flood of rains here.) "My birthday is Feb. 20, and I would like to know if any other member of the Av. S. is the same as mine?" Thomas Garland, Greet, N. M.: "'The Woodneys' is all right. I wish we could have a month of them. I don't care if you don't know how it ended, I believe the blacksmith married Lizzie Day. Anyway the story couldn't have ended in a week. With what you had to build with, it would have to have taken a long time to find out what anybody was going to do. I liked that little wandering musician the best of all. I play on the violin, although I am not so strict about always playing classical music as he was. I can play 'Arkansaw Traveler.' I'd think you'd be humming that all the time. I am like you, I think Opal Johnson must be a brave girl to carry milk so she could make some money to send our orphan. I wish somebody would tell me what to do to earn some money for him. I send you my 3rd quarterly report." Jennie Laramore, Trenton Fields, N. J.: "I observed in the last CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that you said that you think there are no more troublesome animals than boys except girls. I desire that you should explain yourself." (I said, in speaking of "rude and rough" children, that boys of that nature are the most troublesome animals known to me, except girls of that description. That is to say, I don't care so much for a rude and rough girl as I do for a rude and rough boy, but a rude and rough anything is bad enough.) "If you meant that neither one should be rude and rough" (just the point) "then I agree with you. But if you meant that girls are more troublesome than boys, I beg leave to differ from you." (It is granted.) "Now, do you think girls are the more troublesome? This is the question." (As I am a boy, myself, I fear I would prove a prejudiced judge.)

THE WORLD'S LARGEST TOMATO
WEIGHT 6 LBS. 2 OZS.
THE MARVEL OF THE GARDENING WORLD



Never before has there been such an enormous Tomato grown as the one herewith illustrated. This wonder being grown by Mr. W. H. Richards of Wilburton, Ind. Ter., who raised numerous other tomatoes in the same patch, weighing 3, 4 and 5 pounds each. This new tomato was originated by the St. Louis Seed Co. 512-514 North Fourth Street, St. Louis, Mo., who [illegible] giving away FREE packets of the seeds to all who write them for it. Their beautiful new enlarged Catalogue also describes and illustrates the world's largest cucumber, length 22 inches. Their wonderful new corn, that they offer a cash prize of $5.00 per ear for. Their new mammoth yielding oats, which has a record of 183 bushels per acre and an endless variety of other new offerings that cannot be found elsewhere. We urge our readers to write them to-day, for their handsome new Seed Catalogue, also the FREE packet of Tomato Seed, kindly mentioning this paper. Address them as above.

Lawson, Mo.: "Inclosed find $2, one for our missionary Drusie, the other for our orphan Charlie. I pray the Heavenly Father will abundantly bless all orphans, missionaries and every person interested in the uplifting of humanity, and the advancement of Christ's kingdom." Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "Wishing you all a happy new year. My report will be late this time as I forgot to learn my quotation, but of course I will begin again. Inclosed, a money order for $3, half each for Charlie and Drusie, from mamma and me, as a New Year's greeting. May God bless them both." Howard Farmley, Butte, Mont.: "Is a dime too little to send for our Charlie? I hope not, as it is all I have in the way of spending money. I want to begin the new year by sending something." (We think it a splendid gift.) "'A Week With the Woodneys' was first class. All of us read it and then lent the paper to ur neighbor, and he read it alou three children each week. I hope that poor old horse didn't die from his hard time of getting in and out of the house. We have an old family horse, and we called him Bill, but ever since we came to that part of your story, we have called him Bonaparte. Tell Felix that Bonaparte sends best wishes for a happy new year."

I was sitting, a few days ago, worrying over the plot of my new story, trying to think of something you would like, something that would interest, and at the same time do no harm, when the mail came and in it a letter from Blooming Grove, Texas. I opened it with a smile, thinking, "Now here is a letter from down south. Some warm-hearted southern reader of my department is cheering me up in my work, perhaps sending a trifle for Charlie or Drusie, or at least a kind word regarding my work. Ha, ha!" thought I, "ha! ha! it is good to get these notes of encouragement throughout the year." The letter began just as if it were from kinfolks: "Dear Brother: And the 'Week With the Woodneys' is ended. Don't you think it was the longest week you ever saw? I got so tired of it, tired only because it was so long. Now, if it had been a year with the Woodneys it would have been all right, but no one expects a week to last so long. Please don't tell us another. It isn't your forte. Try some other style, something that hasn't a tale to it. I have read 'A Week With the Woodneys' anxious to see the end. But after all I was not to see the end! I am sorry. I was anxious all the time to see the end. Sad! Yet I'm glad! Meaning no harm, but giving expression to my likes, I am respectfully, T. J. Harris." You could have made an end to it at any time by ceasing to read it. Do you not think Brother Garrison's end of the paper was worth your money? One is not obliged to eat every dish on the table. Perhaps if my story did not interest you, my Advance Society did? Are you interested in our missionary Drusie or our orphan Charlie? I hope you are. Why not send some money in their cause? Don't you bother about the Woodneys, whom you do not like; here are two sure-enough people who actually need your help. My dear and respectful brother, do, do listen to me just a moment while I tell you something about our orphan Charlie. You know of course that he has but one leg and that there is nobody in the world to help support him, except those who are moved by the pity of his case. But do you know that he has a dear little sister, about two or three years younger than himself, who lives with a family far away from St. Louis? Just think! A little sister whom he can never see until he is able to go to her. Kind friends care for her, but of course the children remain apart. When you think of the brothers and sisters dwelling together under the same roof, happy in each other's lives, gay in mutual sport and tender in mutual parent-affection, does it not interest you to think of Charlie in the Orphan Home, while his little sister lives where she never sees his face, or hears his voice? I know this interests you, for you are, as you say, my brother. Send something to show your interest, or something to show that you think of our brave little missionary laboring for Christ in far-away China. Active aid for such causes is worth the interest in a thousand stories. It is really of no moment if you were tired of my "week," except for a passing disappointment to me; but it is of eternal moment if we show our interest in orphans and missionaries by active service. Send us something, Brother Harris, and a happy new year to you and to every one of my readers; the blessing of lives well spent be yours! And remember that next week we begin "The Secret Bowl."

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. GARRISON.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

A New Department.

The Omaha National Convention of the Churches of Christ, voted to fittingly celebrate the close of the first century of earnest effort for the restoration to earth of the faith, ideals and practices of the primitive church, and appointed a committee, of which J. H. Garrison, of this city, is chairman, to arrange appropriate services for the Centennial Celebration at Pittsburg in 1909. Not only is this committee commissioned to prepare a celebration of what would be accomplished through the ordinary development of this great movement, but to do its utmost for the attainment of sublime achievements worthy of our plea and spiritual descendants of the great men in whose hearts the thought of Restoration had birth.

Among the sensational triumphs contemplated are the doubling of our membership, the multiplication of our benevolent, missionary and educational resources, the payment of our church debts and building of better church homes, greatly increasing the circulation of Christian literature, forward steps in the unification of all God's people, the deepening of spiritual life and the ennoblement of Christian character. To do the work committed to it, the committee has effected an organization, with W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, in the lead as general secretary. Already the propaganda has the swing of success, and there are now grounds for faith in our surpassing the thrilling hopes of those who formulated the Omaha resolution.

The Editor dedicates this space to this great centennial propaganda in co-operation with Brother Warren and the committee. Herein will be recorded achievements of our brethren—missionary, benevolent, educational, evangelistic and materially effecting Christian unity worthy this undertaking, and we trust some inspiration. also, may here be found. Not the least of its purposes will be the placing of The Christian-Evangelist in every home that will give it welcome. If this be accomplished early in the beginning of this campaign, victory is nearly assured. Communications in harmony with the purposes of the centennial committee and this department will be gladly welcomed.

Could not do without The Christian-Evangelist. H. A. Osgatharp.
Winslow, Ind.

We Are Orthodox.

We all send new year's greetings to the entire Christian-Evangelist force and all its readers. Brother Garrison's book on "The Holy Spirit" is certainly orthodox and should be in every Christian home.
Brookings, S. D. J. A. Seaton.

Sanguine Nicoson.

I hope you may succeed in placing The Christian-Evangelist in 100,000 homes. I would like very much, indeed, to have every member of my church read it. It will greatly help the work. I regretted very much to see you give up the benevolent work, but feel you will do a vast work for Christ and his Church through The Christian-Evangelist.
Memphis, Mo. M. J. Nicoson.

A Familiar Friend.

I have been taking The Christian-Evangelist from its beginning. I want to take it as long as I am in this body. It has been a source of great comfort and knowledge to me, so please find enclosure for renewal. C. R. Shawhan.
Lees Summit, Mo.

Right Education.

The party to whom I am sending this year's paper is a ministerial student in the college here. He recently came to us from the Presbyterians. I want him to read The Christian-Evangelist as a help to him in his work and development.
Wilson, N. C. A. M. Windhorst.

A Ray of Cheer for the Sick Room.

Enclosed find money for my paper until 1907. I am an old subscriber, a widow 73 years of age, and a shut-in, but enjoy reading your paper so well that I can not do without it, and shall use my influence to get others to read the paper, that they may come to Christ.

Sticking Close as a Brother.

I have been a reader of The Christian-Evangelist all my days and can not get on in the Christian life without it, and I expect to read it the rest of my life, if it continues as good; in fact, it gets better all the time. J. E. Throckmorton.

A Comfort to the Lonely.

I am lonely; nine have gone of my immediate family. I have been a reader of every volume of this paper, and I want it as long as I live. Mrs. E. M. Bailey.
Elkton, Ky.

It gives great pleasure to the Editor to know that he is uncurtaining stars of hope and cheer to shine down into the hearts of the sad and lonely.

Without Other Church Privileges.

I enjoy reading The Christian-Evangelist so much. It is the only means I have of knowing what is going on religiously, and I gain so much strength from the editorials, especially from the "Easy Chair." May the dear Lord spare you many years yet to battle for the right.
Collinsville, Ill. Mrs. M. J. Evans.

One of the most useful ministries of The Christian-Evangelist is visiting Disciples deprived of congregational worship.

A Great Work Possible.

You have done a splendid work in the interest of the Benevolent Association. I know of no place where you can do as much good as in this new sphere. There is a mighty power in a Christian paper like The Christian-Evangelist. Would that it might enter every home. It comes as a messenger of love, and I personally rejoice that your personality is going to be connected with the greatest of our religious papers. I have always enjoyed your articles in the ——— and shall look with pleasure to what you write for The Christian-Evangelist. May God bless you here as he has in the former work. Your enthusiasm and earnestness, as well as your knowledge of men and churches, will be a great help in pushing The Christian-Evangelist to the 100,000 mark. I assure you of my hearty co-operation in all your plans.
Frankfort, Ind. Wm. J. Russell.

The Widow of J. T. Toof.

I have taken great pleasure in getting up a list of twenty-five subscribers to The Christian-Evangelist because I think it a loyal messenger of the Christian Gospel, and I believe its influence in the home is a very helpful one. Leda T. Toof.
Quincy, Ill.

Sister Toof's husband, J. T. Toof, of Quincy, Ill., was for many years the most popular preacher in Illinois. Although taken away in his early manhood, he left an indelible impress on the Christian character of thousands. A commendation of The Christian-Evangelist by his dear companion will be most grateful to a multitude of the old Illinois friends.

The Grace of Reciprocity Needed.

We are in receipt of a letter from a western reader, expressing regret that the writer can not continue his subscription for the ensuing year, basing his inability on the fact that Rockefeller, Carnegie and other monopolists have "gathered in all the money of the west."

We have no fears that this good brother will suffer lack of proper physical nourishment because of this sequestration of money, but fear he is willing to let the whole of these economic wrongs fall on the spiritual side of his life. Should not the grace of reciprocity bid him make some sacrifice for the support of The Christian-Evangelist, than which there is no greater factor in America for the overthrowing of these great monopolistic tyrants oppressing the homes of our people? Little would be done for the deliverance of the poor from these cruelties were it not for sentiments of humanity and fraternity created and maintained by our religious press. Were this brother's example generally followed, there would be no voice of protest against the rapacity of which he complains. Loyalty to his tribune would enroll his name on the subscription list of an influential religious paper; justice between body and spirit requires the former to bear part of the exactions of the trust magnates, whose reign we believe will be brief; the best he and others similarly situated can do is to read the Bible, The Christian-Evangelist, pray much and vote conscientiously.

Current Events.

Congress. In transmitting to Congress the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, the President took occasion to speak a vigorous word in defense of the commission and of the general management of affairs on the isthmus. He expressed the opinion that the work is being well done, without waste of time or money, and that the criticisms which have been made have no foundation except in the imagination or malignity of persons seeking notoriety or trying to air grievances. The Senate, which has already been in an altercation with the President over the canal question, took this message as a challenge and by a unanimous vote ordered an investigation of the conduct of the canal work and the Panama railroad and the management of the canal zone.

Further occasion for friction between the President and the Senate was afforded by Senator Bacon's resolution calling for the correspondence relating to the proposed international conference regarding our trade relations with Morocco, a step which many consider an encroachment on the field of the executive; and by the discussion of our relations with Santo Domingo, which have apparently been made more dubious and complicated by the flight of President Morales.

Slow progress is being made toward legislation on railroad rate regulation. The Hepburn measure in the House is reported to have the right of way and to have received the approval of the administration. It is a compromise bill, giving the interstate commerce commission power to fix a maximum rate in place of one found to be unjust, but not empowering it to fix minimum rates.

The opposition to the joint statehood bill for Oklahoma-Indian Territory and Arizona-New Mexico has become almost decisive. Fifty-one "insurgent" Republicans have signed an agreement to vote with the Democrats against the bill. Three more will make a majority.

The Smoot case is to be reopened and further testimony received as to the eligibility of the Mormon senator.

President Harper. After a long and valiant struggle against a painful disease, William Rainey Harper, President of the University of Chicago, died January 10. He was born in Ohio in 1856, and was a few months less than fifty years old at the time of his death. His powers matured early and he combined in an extraordinary degree the intellectual and scholarly processes with the abilities of a great executive. He was graduated from Muskingum College at the age of fourteen; received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy from Yale at nineteen; was president of a college at Mason, Tenn., at twenty; professor of Hebrew in the Baptist Union Theological Seminary (the germ of the present University of Chicago) at twenty-three; and professor of Semitic languages at Yale at thirty. His power both as teacher and as administrator showed itself in connection with his early work as a professor of Hebrew, for he not only taught with enthusiasm but organized a correspondence school in that somewhat unpopular subject, and, by sheer force of personal energy and executive ability, soon had hundreds of persons all over the country studying Hebrew. His capacity for hard work was equaled only by his willingness to do it. At Yale the story used to be told of a student who applied for some private instruction in Hebrew and was told by Doctor Harper that the hour from 2 to 3 A. M. was the only one he could give him, but that he would gladly meet him then. When the organization of the University of Chicago was proposed, Dr. Harper was called to be its head and began in 1891 the work by which his name will always be remembered. To outsiders, the success of the president in getting money has seemed wonderful, and so it was; and the institution's growth has seemed too rapid to be healthy. Those who know how many more millions might at any time have been had for the asking, admire rather the patience of the man. It was one of his deepest desires that he might be remembered not as a money-getter, but as one who had borne a scholar's part in the advancement of education.

The Right to Die. The question whether it is ever justifiable to take human life as an act of mercy to the victim, is by no means new, but it has been newly raised by Professor Charles Eliot Norton, who takes the unpopular affirmative side of the proposition, affirming that persons incurably and painfully diseased ought to have their lives brought to a comfortable and speedy end so that needless suffering to themselves and their friends might be avoided. His opinion is that the life-saving function of modern medical science may easily be overdone, and that this is actually true where life is prolonged although the certain pains outweigh the possible joys of continued mortal existence. The argument, we think, is seriously defective and the doctrine is dangerous. In the first place, the desirability of life is not measured by casting a balance between its pleasures and its pains. Only the suicide, who is always mentally abnormal if not actually insane, fails to see that life itself has a value, however heavy may be the balance on the side of unhappiness. In the second place, the incurable are sometimes cured; the helpless sometimes find grounds for hope, and the permanently useless often become useful. Finite knowledge can never say with certainty just when the failure of all life's joy and usefulness has become so overwhelming and final as to justify ending life, even if the principle were a valid one.

Service and Society. The funny department of a recent magazine contains this amusing episode:

"A Washington lady, engaging a new housemaid, was asked: 'How many evenings a week does you allow off? The reason I wants to know before making permanent arrangements is I am a debutante this season and requires a good many evenings for my social engagements.'"

The funny thing about this incident is that it is meant for a joke. It is more than funny; it is a trifle saddening. We all know that the essence of humor is supposed to lie in the association of incongruous ideas. In this case the incongruous ideas are domestic service and social engagements. But why should a housemaid not be a debutante? Is our talk about the dignity of labor and the honor of service all sheer twaddle? Do the fine ladies who write club papers on Ruskin and William Morris still feel that there is some inherent absurdity in the idea that a domestic employee should be a human creature and therefore a social creature? Of course the housemaid in the above episode betrays by her grammar her intellectual unfitness for participation in our society, but there are always plenty of social circles in which a disagreement between subject and verb occasions neither criticism nor comment. The whole problem of domestic service, and, for that matter, of any sort of service, is rendered difficult by this assumption that the social instincts have no right to exist in those who are housemaids, but only in those who have housemaids. As a joke, recital of the incident is stupid and snobbish.

Physicians on Football. The two physicians who had charge of the Harvard football squad last season, have published a report and some opinions based on it. There were 150 men in the squad; 70 were able to play through the season; 35 had not yet recovered from serious injuries at the end of the season. During the season, about two months, 145 injuries which might be called serious (i. e., broken bones or worse) were treated. The injuries reported were only a fraction of those received, those unrecorded including obscure and dangerous internal injuries. Nine conclusions follow, the last of which are "that the percentage of injury is too great to justify the idea that football is a mere sport, and that the medical evidence calls for a modification of the game in behalf of physical soundness and safety."

American Wealth. We are in the habit of thinking of the United States as the richest country in the world, and so it is. The fabled wealth of the Orient is poverty in comparison. How rich we are, was set forth in an article the other day by Cleveland Moffett. The amount of gold in the country is $1,320,000,000, which is a larger stock of gold than any other country possesses. Our total banking strength is fourteen billion dollars, or more than two-thirds as much as that of all the rest of the world combined. We produce one-third of the world's supply of coal, one-third of the grain and three-fourths of the cotton. In addition to producing such a large part of the world's store of raw materials, our manufactures are double those of the United Kingdom. Our railroads carry twice as much merchandise as those of all other countries together. These are great data alike for the spread-eagle orator and for the anxious student who sees in increasing wealth an increasing opportunity for oppression and corruption. It is of the nature of money to grow. Dollars multiply rapidly, if you have enough of them together. If the poverty of a century ago has grown into the wealth of to-day, what colossal aggregations of capital may we not expect within the next century if the present forces continue in action without interruption.

Christian Union: An Historical Study.

I. THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

1. The Birth of the Church.

God had a "chosen people" under both the patriarchal and Jewish dispensations among whom there were devout souls who "walked with God" and obeyed his will so far as it was revealed to them. But the institution known as the Church, the Church of God, or the Church of Christ, came into existence on the first Pentecost following the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ. This occurred in the city of Jerusalem in about the year A. D. 29 or 30. There was a concurrence of events at this time and place that marked the introduction of a new age, or dispensation.

Fifty days before this event Jesus had been crucified at the time of the Jewish Passover. On the third day afterwards he had risen from the dead. Forty days after his resurrection he remained among his disciples, appearing to them at different times and furnishing them many "infallible proofs" of his identity and of the reality of his resurrection. He had then ascended to his Father from the Mount of Olives, where, under the brilliant light of the Syrian sun, he was parted from them in the act of blessing them, and was received into heaven. One week later, being the day of Pentecost, he fulfilled his promise to his disciples by sending upon them "the promise of the Father." The week between the ascension of Jesus and the advent of the Holy Spirit seems to have been spent by the disciples in a prayer meeting. (Acts 1:14.)

Being thus gathered together the Spirit descended upon them, "and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them uterance." Peter, who seems to have been the chief speaker, explained the phenomena which they were witnessing as the fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel concerning the pouring out of the Spirit in the last days, and vindicated Jesus as the true Messiah by announcing his resurrection and coronation in heaven. As a result of his preaching and that of the other apostles, three thousand were convicted of sin, and were baptized in the name of Christ on that day. (Acts 2).

At that time and in that place came into being what has since been known in history as the Church. It could not have come into existence earlier, because (1) Jesus had not died for our sins according to the Scriptures; (2) had not risen from the dead for our justification; (3) had not ascended into heaven and thus vindicated his claims to the Messiahship; nor (4) had the Holy Spirit been given in his new relation to men, through whom men were to be convicted of sin and made alive in Christ. Besides, this was the time and place for this event, according to the Scriptures. Centuries before Isaiah had prophesied, saying: "And it shall come to pass in the latter days, that the mountain of Jehovah's house shall be established on the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted among the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many peoples shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of Jehovah, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he shall teach us of his ways, and we shall walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem." (See also Micah 4:1, 2.)

Concerning this same event Jesus had prophesied more specifically when he said to two of his disciples on the way to Emmaus, "Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem. Ye are witnesses of these things. And behold, I send forth the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city, until ye be clothed with power from on high" (Luke 24:46-49). This passage fixes definitely both the ime and the place of the beginning of that great spiritual movement which we call the Church.

There was a time of necessary preparation going before this in the life and personal ministry of Jesus Christ, and in the training of his apostles who were to be the charter members and nucleus of his Church, and ministers plenipotentiary in the proclamation of the Gospel and the terms of salvation. But even these apostles had a vague and inadequate conception of the mission of Jesus and of the nature of his kingdom until they had received the enduement of power from on high. How much less prepared were the others to become spiritual members of a church made up of regenerated persons! It was not the work of Jesus during his earthly ministry to establish his church and win men to his spiritual reign by his own personal appeal. That was to be the work of his apostles and others who should come after them. His was a work of preparation—the preparation of the Gospel message and of men who were to declare it. This was why he could say to his disciples, "And greater works than this shall he do [who believes on me] because I go unto my Father" (John 14:12). His going to the Father by the way of the cross, the sepulcher, the resurrection and the ascension, would complete a message which, when told by men under the power of the Spirit, would enable them to do greater works than any miracle he had wrought.

Thus came into existence, through the preaching by the apostles of Jesus Christ and him crucified, and through faith in and obedience to him, that Church whose fortunes we are to follow and the secret of whose unity we are to seek to find. It is important to note the following facts in connection with the beginning of the Church, as they will have an important bearing in our future investigation of this subject.

1. The subject matter of the preaching which produced the faith and conviction of sin, causing the men who heard it to cry out, "Brethren what shall we do?" was Jesus Christ, crucified, risen again from the dead, ascended into heaven, crowned king, and sending forth his Holy Spirit upon them, through whom he declared the message of life and salvation. In other words, it was the simple facts of the Gospel—a story which later came to be summarized in a single phrase, "the Cross of Christ." There were no theological definitions or philosophical speculations or far-drawn inferences, but the earnest proclamation of well-attested facts concerning Jesus of Nazareth.

2. The power by which these facts were declared, and which used these facts in convicting of sin those who had been the murderers of Jesus, was the Holy Spirit, without whose enduement they were not permitted to begin their work.

3. So clear and unmistakable were the directions given to these men that 3,000 persons on that same day yielded obedience to the Lord in baptism and were added to the church.

4. Notice, further, that this church was a spiritual institution, the Gospel having been preached by men who were "filled with the Spirit," and each individual member, having believed, repented and been baptized unto the remission of sins, received the gift of the Holy Spirit.

It is not strange to read of such a church that, "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and soul; and no one of them said that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common, and with great power gave the apostles their witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all" (Acts 4:32, 33).

Dr. William Rainey Harper.

This distinguished scholar, author, and university president passed away on January 10. His death occurred in the prime of his life and in the midst of a great and successful career. The cause of his death was cancer of the intestines. Three years ago Dr. Harper underwent an operation for appendicitis when symptoms were discovered which led the surgeons to suspect graver troubles. Another operation performed in Feburary, 1905, revealed the true nature of the malady. Although he left the hospital a doomed man he took up his duties again at the university and seemed confident and cheerful. His strength failed him very rapidly during the last fortnight, although his mind remained clear to the last.

Dr. Harper was a man of prodigious energy and capacity for work. He was a clear thinker and one of the ablest Hebrew scholars in the country, but it was as the head of the great university, administering its affairs and taking part in all the active movements of the day for the promotion of religious education that he earned the greatest distinction. Like most men of large and liberal views, he was much misrepresented and misunderstood. In spite of all that has been said to the contrary, he was a man of profound faith in God and in his revelations of truth and grace in Christ. He laid great mphasis upon religious training and the later efforts of his life were looking in that direction.

Though dying young, comparatively, Dr.

Harper will leave behind him a monument to his memory, in the university he has helped to organize and establish, in the books he has written, and in the lives which he has impressed, that will be far more enduring than marble or brass. His name will live among the distinguished educators and Bible scholars of the country and as the ardent friend of every movement that looked to the betterment of mankind.

The Spirit and the Kingdom.

We are glad Brother Hawkins has written the article which appears elsewhere. It anticipates an article we had in view on "The Spirit and the Kingdom," and helps wonderfully to simplify the question at issue between us. We are perfectly agreed that the coming of the kingdom and the coming of the Holy Spirit are simultaneous, if not, indeed, different names for the same thing, so far at least as the subjective phase of the kingdom is concerned. No man has the kingdom of God within him except as he has the Spirit of God. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." Jesus taught his disciples to pray both for the Holy Spirit and for the kingdom. So Brother Hawkins admits. Are these prayers now out-of-date?

Brother Hawkins says, "I can see no more reason why we should pray for the Spirit because Christ taught his disciples to do so (Luke 11:13) than that we should pray for the kingdom to come because Christ taught his disciples to do so (Luke 11:3)." We entirely agree with that statement. But there is infinite reason why we should pray for both. Our brother adds: "If the kingdom has come and I have received it, and the Spirit has come and I have received him, then I am not in the same attitude toward either the kingdom or the Spirit that the disciples were in while Christ was with them."

That is true, as to order of time, for both these events—the coming of the Holy Spirit in his new relation to men, and the establishment of the kingdom through the agency of that Spirit—were yet future events. But are there not millions of our race to whom the kingdom of God and the Spirit of God have not yet come? Is not the kingdom of God coming all the while with increasing power and influence in the world? Has our brother never prayed for the kingdom of God to come in his own heart and life with greater power, until every energy, activity, imagination, and thought should be brought into captivity to the will of Christ? In what sense did Christ teach his disciples to pray for the kingdom to come? "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Has it come to that extent yet?

We think it would be a true generalization that those brethren who believe that we ought not to pray any longer, "Thy kingdom come" would also think that we ought not to pray for the Holy Spirit, for, as before indicated, the kingdom of God, in its subjective reign over the mind and heart, only comes with the incoming of the Holy Spirit. God reigns within us by his Spirit. The fundamental misconception with Brother Hawkins and those who think with him on this subject seems to be in supposing that the measure of the Holy Spirit received by each believer is exactly the same, and that we all have the kingdom of God within us to the same degree, and that this degree is a fixed quantity, which, having once been received, there is no occasion for any further seeking, asking, or knocking. Now this seems to us to be directly contrary, not only to the teaching of Scripture, but to the facts of our own experience and observation. The kingdom of God within one is a matter of growth and development. The measure of the Holy Spirit we receive is in proportion to the measure of faith and consecration to the work of God. Every true believer desires earnestly to be more completely under the reign of Christ and to have more of his Spirit. Why should he not pray for these spiritual blessings as well as for any other?

Our brother wants chapter and verse to show that prayer for these spiritual blessings is involved in a life of obedience to God. We might, with greater propriety, ask for some proof that these constitute exceptions to the general law of the kingdom of God—"Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you." How can one read the apostolic epistles, and especially the Pauline epistles, and not understand that they teach the Christian believer to open his heart, in the deepest yearning and sincerest prayer, for the highest of God's spiritual gifts, and that the only limitation fixed to these aspirations is "all the fullness of God"?

We thank Brother Hawkins for his contribution, for he has helped us to an explanation of the difficulty which we trust will serve to clear away the misunderstanding on this subject.

Notes and Comments.

"It is not the mere phrase, 'Disciples of Christ,' we object to, but the unscriptural thing the phrase represents."—Christian Standard.

Now, what does the phrase, Disciples of Christ, represent? It clearly and unmistakably represents the aggregate membership of the churches associated with the religious movement inaugurated by the Campbells in the early part of the last century for the restoration of New Testament Christianity and the union of the people of God, and it is the only name, by the way, that does unequivocally represent that idea in all parts of the country. We deny, therefore, that this is an "unscriptural thing."

But it is the distinguishing of ourselves from others that is the "unscriptural thing" according to the "Christian Standard." It says:

"Let us be brethren, saints, disciples, in the simple New Testament meaning of these relationships, and no additional terms or peculiar use of the terms referred to will be necessary to distinguish us from those who would be disciples, saints, etc., plus something else."

Why, then, does the "Christian Standard" make such distinction? It makes it in this statement, and all through the article of which the above is a part. The fact is, the distinction is absolutely essential in order to write intelligibly on the subject. The very object of names is to distinguish things and persons that differ. Our contemporary is simply making war on a law of language that is as old as human speech, and as essential to clearness of thought as language itself. Take, for instance, that phrase which our contemporary uses so often—"Those Disciples of Christ who would be simply Christians"—does that not distinguish "us" from "those who would be disciples, saints, etc., plus something else"? Is not the thing it represents, therefore, an "unscriptural thing" also?

There is a form of local church designation now coming into general use which might be discontinued with advantage and propriety. It is the habit of calling the oldest congregation in a city, "The First Christian Church." Why not distinguish local churches of the same faith and order by the name of the street on which they are located? The policy of calling churches the "First" and "Second" Churches often leads to the anomaly that there is not any "First" Christian Church, only a Second and a Third, etc.! Then there is the semblance of primacy or pre-eminence in the numerical method, though not so intended, that would better be avoided.

W. R. Warren, Centennial Secretary, has sent a circular to the pastors calling their attention to education day, and asking for a postal card report of the observance. We hope our preachers will co-operate in this way with our Centennial Committee, and make prompt reports to Brother Warren, who will report through the press.

W. J. Russell, who has recently concluded a good meeting in his own church, at its conclusion paid a tribute to the efficacy of advertising, in which he is a firm believer. He said that advertising is as essential to the Lord's work as it is to commercial work. Other ministers had criticised him because he had advertised his meetings, but he said that the advertising had caused many to investigate, resulting in their conversion to the cause of the Master. The great audience present approved, by a rising vote, the following statement:

"Many instrumentalities have been united in making our revival services a great success. One of the most important factors in all Christian work, as well as in the business world, is that of advertising, and your pastor has not failed in keeping this evangelistic work of ours before the public. The daily and weekly press is a potent educational force, and while we magnify the power of the Christian pulpit, we should never depreciate the magnificent power of our daily and weekly journals. The papers of our city have been kind, considerate and liberal with space in giving reports of our services, and there is due them, for all favors received, the deep and sincere gratitude of this entire congregation."

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is one of those gray days, with lowering clouds and murky atmosphere, and the melting snow which fell a few days ago makes it as unpleasant below as it is dreary above. We have such days, and they evidently have their purpose. Sometimes these dark and cloudy days fall in harmoniously with our feelings.

> "Into each life some rain must fall,
> Some days must be dark and dreary."

Some people find fault with the earth because it is not heaven, but bears the marks of imperfection. But the earth is certainly not more imperfect than the people who live upon it, and we have the divine assurance that with the passing away of human imperfections there will come a perfect natural order. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth are passed away." God has not finished his work either on the earth or on its inhabitants. No doubt an imperfect or an unfinished world is better adapted to the condition of imperfect and unfinished people than a perfect world would be. It is comforting to know that beyond these lowering clouds bend the blue heavens illuminated with the shining sun. It is comforting to know that the clouds of care and anxiety which shadow our paths to-day will be dispersed on the morrow by the light of his countenance who, "behind a frowning Providence," still "hides a smiling face."

But just as there are people who complain of an imperfect world in which to live, so there are those who murmur at an imperfect church. There are people standing aloof from the church whose only excuse for so doing is that the church has imperfections. Of course these punctilious souls would feel right at home in a perfect church! What is the church, anyway, but an aggregation of sinners saved by grace who are struggling to overcome their faults and to attain to strength and beauty of character? What right have we to expect perfection in an organization made up of fallible human beings whose only title to membership in it is that their hearts have turned, in love and penitence, toward him who is the perfect ideal? On any other ground who of us could hold membership in the church, with all our faults and imperfections? Of all the flimsy excuses framed by the inventive genius of man to justify himself in refusing to identify himself with the people of God, none is more frail and diaphanous than this, that church members are imperfect Christians! As if the very object of the church were not to develop the spiritual life of its members, correct their errors through their spiritual growth, and bring them at last into the image of Christ. We have only one question about worthiness for church-membership, and that is, is there a longing desire in the heart for a purer and better life, and is there a purpose to struggle toward that ideal? If so, we can afford to be very patient with one another, "forbearing one another in love."

Again, there are those who refuse to co-operate with their religious neighbors on a basis of equality because of imperfections in creed or practice of the aforesaid religious neighbors. The need of closer union and co-operation among those who love the Lord, against the forces of evil, is readily acknowledged, but how can we, who are perfect in our faith and knowledge and practice, who completely fill up the measure of what the New Testament church should be—how can we associate on terms of equality with those who, although they love Christ as well as we, have so many imperfections in the way of creeds, doctrines, and practices? Waiving the fact that such persons are not gifted with the power which Burns coveted, of seeing ourselves as others see us, it ought to be a sufficient answer to say that the Lord is evidently co-operating with these people in carrying on his work, and that if he can tolerate their imperfections with a view of making something better out of them, we ought to be equally charitable. It seems never to have occurred to some very good people that the Lord has only imperfect instruments to work with here in the world, and that he chooses to use these imperfect instruments rather than to import from a higher sphere a race of perfect beings. If he were not gracious and kind enough to accept the help of imperfect human beings who, though following him, follow at too great a distance, none of us would be honored in being made co-workers with God. Beloved, if God so loves us as to work with us and in us and through us, in spite of our errors and imperfections, ought we not so to love one another?

Of course, the stock-in-trade, in the way of argument, with those favoring isolation as against federation and co-operation with other followers of Christ, is the danger of compromising our principles by mixing with others considered less sound in their faith and Scriptural in their practice. This principle would have kept Christ out of the world. We might imagine some conservative angel protesting against the plan of the incarnation on the ground of the wickedness of us poor mortals and our unworthiness to have fellowship with him who was "the fairest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." But we know the protest, if made, did not prevail, and though existing in the form of God, he emptied himself, stooping down to our lowly condition and having fellowship with us, that he might lift us out of our sins and our ignorance into a truer and better life. "Wherefore he was not ashamed to call us brethren." Think of it! He that was sinless and undefiled, the Lord of glory, associating with fallen men and calling them brethren! Brethren, "Let this mind which was in Christ Jesus be also in you." So shall we be his disciples. Let none of us think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but think soberly and righteously. If we could judge ourselves more severely, and others more charitably, it would bridge many a chasm which separates the people of God.

Finally, we have an imperfect political system. Politics has become corrupt. How shall we purify our political life and put honest men in office, who will discharge their duties in the fear of God and the love of man? Political Phariseeism is the greatest foe to civic righteousness. The man who stands aloof from his fellow men, and refuses to vote or take any interest in the government or political life of his city, state and nation, because there is so much corruption extant, is a foe to good government and a menace to society. How can we "turn the rascals out" and put honest men in office, if honest men do not participate in politics and let their influence be felt, not at the ballot box alone, but both by pen and voice? The same thing applies to industry. Shall men go out of business and cease to have dealings with their fellow men because of corruption in our commercial and industrial life? No, the principle of aloofness we are combating is inapplicable in every department of human life. Those who have truth that others have not are under special obligations to mingle with others less fortunate than themselves in every possible form of activity in order to the dissemination of their knowledge among others. No one may hold truth as a monopoly. Those who have it hold it in trust for the benefit of others. And so, since we live in an imperfect world, among imperfect human beings, and have an imperfect church seeking to help weak Christians to a stronger life, made up of weak and sickly members as well as of those stronger and healthier, and are citizens of an imperfect government, we must make the best we can of the situation, believing that our own perfection is hastened by our efforts to advance the welfare and happiness of others.

There is some compensation in every situation in life. The joy of growing into a better knowledge and into a richer and fuller life is the special prerogative of imperfect beings. Added to this, is the joy of helping others to a better knowledge of the way of salvation, and assisting them in the development of Christian character. Perhaps earth has no sweeter joy than that which comes from the consciousness that God is working in us with a view of fashioning us into the image of his Son, and that he is permitting us to work with him in this divine task. How dull life must be to one who has learned all there is to know, and has attained to the pinnacle of human perfection! Life must seem insipid and tame when there is nothing new to learn, and no higher pinnacle of achievement to gain! On the whole we would prefer to live with imperfect human beings who are conscious of their imperfection, than with perfect human beings who are conscious of their perfection! And so we are content to live in an imperfect world that is growing better, and to work in an imperfect Church which is growing steadily toward the divine ideal, and to be a co-worker with imperfect religious neighbors who, like us, are gravitating Christward, and to participate in the political life of the country that is seeking to correct its faults and to get back to the higher ideals of the republic. In a word, imperfection shall be no bar to our co-operation with others who are seeking the same ends and ideals as we are, believing that such co-operation is the best cure for our mutual imperfections.

The Church and Higher Ministerial Education

By William J. Russell

We have reached that period in the growth and development of our plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity when there is a general demand for a more efficient and better educated ministry among us. It is generally admitted that if the pulpit would win the attention of men, its intelligence must be abreast of the latest thought of the people to whom it brings its messages. And if we, the Disciples of Christ, are to be an aggressive force in the religious world, we must take our place among the best and strongest of religious bodies. This can only be done by means of an educated ministry. It is understood that other qualities are needed. Piety, for instance, inspires the minister with ardent zeal, and keeps the flame alive amid all the icy indifference by which he will so often be encompassed. This gains for him the good-will and sympathy of his hearers, the most ungodly of whom will feel that devout earnestness on his part is becoming, and entitles him to respect. Then, too, the minister needs the capacity for clear thinking, with strong feelings, and a vigorous imagination; also the capacity for expression, and the power of forcible utterance. No amount of education can compensate for the lack of these. But the ministry of the Christian Church must be worthy of the time in which we live, in intellectual attainments. Men with limited education have frequently displayed splendid natural gifts. But whatever such men have been able to accomplish would have been augmented many fold if they had gone through the process of careful training.

There is a tendency prevalent among us to-day to get an education by the "short cut" process. Young men often feel that four or seven years spent in college are just so many years wasted. And they are encouraged in this foolish notion by some of the churches for which they minister, whose members say: "The world is in sin and darkness, and needs the Gospel. Why should you spend so many years in preparation when men and women are starving for the bread of life?" In many instances young men have in their inmost souls a passion for Christian work, and sometimes intellectual apathy prompts them to act upon the suggestion to abridge their college course, and the result is they drop out of the college with only a partial equipment for life's duties. Of course it is possible for a young man to be poor and unable to complete his college course, or sickness may prevent him from doing this. In such cases, if he is a consecrated man, he will find a place where he can render most efficient service. But nevertheless it is a misfortune for him, and one that he will always feel, to be compelled to discontinue his educational preparation a part of the way along. The "short cut" process is not the way to success. Napoleon III tried it at Sedan and was ignominiously defeated. But Grant fought it out "on this line," counting neither time nor effort as too costly for the end in view. From the time of Alexander, who desired his preceptor to show him some shorter and easier way to learn geometry, men have found that the shortest cut to success has been the patient pursuit of a toilsome and possibly tedious way. It is the old route of patience, perseverance and labor.

WILLIAM J. RUSSELL.

We are often told by those who are opposed to the long college course that God has chosen the weak things of this world to confound the mighty. They tell us that Moses was weak before the Egyptian nation; that Isaiah was weak at the courts of Ahaz and Hezekiah; that Paul preached to the Corinthians in fear and trembling; that Luther was helpless and alone at the Diet of Worms; that Beecher was outnumbered, hooted, and hissed when he pleaded in England against almost universal sentiment for the emancipation of the negro; and that the little company were weak that settled at Bethany, Virginia, to teach and preach and print the plea for a restored Christianity. Yet it should be remembered that these weak ones, who accomplished a work that has affected generations and eras, were men of the best education that their times afforded. While God has chosen weak means, he has never selected incompetent means, to carry out his purposes in the world. If it be said that the apostles were men from the humble walks of life, uneducated in the technical sense, it should be kept in mind that the Master immediately put them to school under himself. And when Christ chose his last apostle after he had ascended to heaven and when it was no longer possible to give him the advantage of his personal training and instruction, it is a significant fact that he chose Saul of Tarsus, an educated man. The great Protestant Reformation was largely the result of the revival of learning. All the great reformers were college-bred men. Luther was no mean scholar, and his power with the common people was not hindered but helped, by his book knowledge and his ability to make books. Savonarola, Wickliffe, Melancthon, Zwingli, Erasmus, Calvin, the Wesleys, Whitefield and Knox—all were men of scholarly attainments in philosophy, in language, in literature, and above all in the Word of God. The great leaders in our restoration movement were not exceptions to the general rule. Thomas and Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott and Barton W. Stone were men of liberal education, and knew well that any religious movement aiming to permanently influence the religious thought of the world must have the advocacy of men of liberal training and of disciplined minds. It is a fact that modern civilization has been made by a few educated men. They have been encouraged and supported by thousands of humble and faithful helpers; but the scholarship of the Christian pulpit has been the generalship of Christian forces from the day of Pentecost to the present.

As Christian civilization advances, the ministry has higher demands to meet. No man in our day can maintain himself in the pulpit if his preaching falls below a certain standard of excellence. If he would be in touch with the great intellectual world, and command the respect of all, learned and unlearned, he must be a man of liberal culture, with mental faculties fully disciplined for his work. There is a clear, distinct call for such men—men who are abreast of the latest and best thought of the day, and who can meet all the currents and whirlpools of modern skeptical thinking. This is a critical age. It will not do for the man who is ignorant of the history of the Old and New Testament canons, and the circumstances under which the various books of the Bible came into existence, who is unable to see the force of the criticism and test its strength or its weakness, as the case may be, to simply cry out and rail against the "higher critics," and speak contemptuously of their work. He must have scholarship, that he may point out the error and defend the truth. Of course every man who knows the truth has the privilege to tell it, wherever and whenever he can get an audience. But there is a field of historic and critical investigation which none but scholars can explore. If scholarship has attacked the Bible, the attack can be proven wrong only by a better scholarship. The minister who can not patiently bear and satisfactorily answer the questions bearing upon the meaning and the integrity of the Scriptures, is unprepared to cope with the forces which are working against our holy Christianity. He owes it to the Church, he owes it to the time in which God has called him to labor, he owes it to the restless and perplexed but often honest minds in whose presence he carries on his ministry, to be a cultured man. To those great questions which both stir and disquiet men, he is bound to bring that knowledge which will give him a claim to be listened to. "Know as much as you can"; that ought to be the rule to which an educated minister should hold himself forever tied. A minister ought to be a prepared man—a student, a thoroughly read, broad minded, highly educated man, full of the assurance of an undoubting faith.

One of the happy signs of our present age is the manifest disposition on the part of so many young men to be content with nothing short of a thorough preparation before entering into the regular work of the ministry. Many of those young men graduate from our colleges, but, desiring to take more advanced work than can be secured at any of our present institutions, go elsewhere. Is it not time that the Disciples of Christ should arouse themselves on this subject of education, and see that we have a school with sufficient endowment, which will enable it to give such an advanced grade of study as will meet the demands of those who now go to our state universities, or those institutions which are under the control of some other Church, or no Church at all? There may be some advantage in going to a German university—the travel, the larger college world, and the reputation, whether well earned or not; there are advantages in attending a state university—numbers, library, apparatus, and special courses; but these advantages are nothing when weighed against Christian culture and the building up of Christian character.

It is the Christian college that represents the true idea in education. And by a Christian college we mean a school in which it is provided that the highest scientific and classical culture shall be accompanied by the lessons of the Bible, the songs of praise, the prayers of godly men, and the evidences of the Christian religion. Intellectual development alone does not constitute education. The moral and spiritual elements are a part of the mind, and their neglect must, necessarily, produce sad consequences. Mr. Huxley once said that education consisted solely in learning the laws of nature and training oneself to obey them. Thus he would leave out heart culture—the development of man's moral and religious nature. But it seems that on closer reflection Mr. Huxley became dissatisfied with this one-sided idea of education, for, just before his death, in an article in the "Contemporary Review," he said that, while he had been strongly in favor of secular education in the sense of education without theology, he must confess that he was most seriously perplexed to know by what practical measures the religious feeling, which is the essential basis of conduct, was to be kept up in the present utterly chaotic state of opinion on these matters, without religious instruction. In this confession Mr. Huxley acknowledges the value of Christianity and the superiority of the Bible over all other books in placing it as the basis of religious conduct. This is well. For Christianity is in harmony with all that pertains to the highest culture. A writer in the "Princeton Review" says: "When education passed into the hands of the Christian Church, instruction in the new doctrine of our Savior and his apostles became naturally the main end. The individual had now an infinite value in himself." This thought marks the practical difference between Christian and un-Christian education. And Dr. Scot Butler, the former president of Butler College, says: "Because I believe that secular education never has made and never will make the world morally one whit better; because I believe that mental stimulation is not sufficient for moral growth and development; because I believe in the words of Archbishop Ireland, that morals, without religious principles, do not exist, therefore I hesitate not to claim for our church colleges that, among the higher educational institutions of our country, they are the conservators and the only conservators of genuine morality."

And now in view of the essential part which Christianity must take in the highest culture, the Church should be foremost in encouraging our Christian colleges. It may be something of a sacrifice, when we are already taxed to support state institutions; but the founding and liberal endowments of colleges where the Bible shall be a part of the curriculum, is a work for us as the people of God. Every great religious movement has given the world educational institutions adequate to express its genius and power. Such institutions are essential to the unity, permanence and progress of our restoration movement. We speak with pride the names of Bethany! Hiram! Eureka! Drake! Butler! and Kentucky University! We recall the splendid service they have rendered. They have given us a ministry of noble type. Not a word would we utter to cast disparagement upon them. But we are a great and growing people. The educational equipment of a generation ago will not meet the demands of this growing and progressive twentieth century. There is a call for an enlargement in every direction, but especially in the endowment and equipment of our institutions of learning. The Church owes to her young men who are preparing for the ministry opportunities for the highest and truest culture. As a people, there is no lack of money. A million dollars could be given any day without a sacrifice. May we not hope the day is near when we shall have not only a college, but a great university, fully equipped with a well organized theological seminary, in which the professors will not be overburdened with work, but will have time to carry on certain lines of investigation and research, and write books which will compare favorably with those that are being published by some of the other great religious bodies. Since the days of Alexander Campbell, not a single name can be found among the Disciples of Christ that can be placed beside his in point of theological learning and authorship. Our scholars have done the best they could. The Church should help the present and coming generation to do better. Give our colleges a better financial support, and this can be realized. Then we will have professors with Christian scholarship of the highest order. The brightest science and the purest faith will stand together in everlasting friendship. Young men will arise and, coming from under such influence and such instruction, they themselves will become teachers of teachers, and masters of assemblies. The Church of Christ needs to-day a thousand men in sympathy with the simple and beautiful plea for the return to the New Testament Christianity, and yet young men skilled in historical and scientific knowledge, as well as being clad in the armor of heaven, that they may with all the greater ease carry the war into the strongholds of Satan. "One strong, well developed mind will do more for Christianity in the next generation," says Clinton Lockhart, "than a dozen stunted, drifting incompetents."

The Value of Church Music.

(Concluded from last week.)

The next step, after adopting the right book, is to encourage congregational singing, which is, and always must be, the true center of all Protestant music. All the paid organists and choirs in Christendom can not put the greatest spiritual value into a vicarious operation, that ought to be a personal act on the part of every individual. Every person ought to sing because every person ought to worship. Luther's enemies said he made more converts by his hymn-singing than by his preaching, but his hymns would never have converted had not the people appropriated them, and used them as their own. But modern services show an astonishingly small amount of active participation in the singing. There is utter indifference on the part of many as to any responsibility. Many charter members of the chuch—blessed old saints with quavering voices—feel crowded out of the musical service because their old songs have been replaced by new ones, or because the music is so artistic that they fear to spoil it. How they brighten at "How firm a foundation" to the old tune! And they should join in singing it—if there is more of portamento and anticipation in their rendering than we moderns approve, let's forgive it for the heart that is more prominent. God's ears will surely not disapprove the praise of any child of his, no matter how broken the voice.

Instead of imagining that congregational singing is hard to maintain, we may believe that usually it is only awaiting its chance. It will fail where there is no religious life that wants expression. It can not succeed in the face of ministerial neglect or musical blundering, but it will respond gloriously when it is given a chance and is treated with loving common sense.

The elevation of church music and the steady pressure toward higher ideals are responsibilities entrusted, most of all, to the ministers. It will never rise higher than the average ministerial estimation, and it will respond surely and steadily to the stimulus that only the minister can give. Unfortunately, in many cases, he does not know music. It should be a part of his college curriculum, for music stands among the most active instruments with which he works. If he use it studiously and skillfully in the homes, the social meetings, the church services, it will unify his people and stand eminent and highly blessed of God.

But there are conditions that are far too general that make the religious value of music almost a mockery. It is hard to be patient when a hymn is used as a cover for disorder, or a cure for restlessness. If a hymn has any religious value it is neither a pastime and interlude nor a piece of calisthenics. If worth using at all, it should be used with the same care as sermon or prayer. It should be neither casual nor mechanical. If it does not prepare the minds of both preacher and people for the message of the hour, it fails of its real mission.

Another reformation that needs bringing about is intelligent regard for words. Often we sing mechanically, thinking little or not at all of the sentiment. We have even become addicted to the habit, in some out-of-the-way places, of singing by arithmetic, always first, second, and last verses regardless of any climax of sentiment. Such a habit is mechanical enough to kill the sentiment of the best song ever written. "Love for all, and can it be" is such a song—one that sounds the gamut of life's deepest feeling from despair to exaltation. It is a crime against good taste to mutilate such a song. Religion is surely earnest enough to take time to express our worship without abbreviations.

When choir rehearsals are poorly attended, when the choir leading is listless, when the hymns are selected at the last moment with an indecent scramble in view of the audience, when the singers complain of having to sit up in front and hear the sermon from behind the minister's back, when petty jealousies and enmities find a place among the members, when the congregation limits its comments to criticisms, and is constantly lodging complaints against individuals—how can the message of the music or words reach our hearts through such self-imposed barricades!

But happily such conditions are not general. With genuine Christianity in the choir, with plenty of men for a support morally and musically, a faithful organist, a sympathetic, tactful chorister with choir and organist under willing control, a minister who works with the choir and a congregation that believes in them all, and gives them warm, loving, enthusiastic support, praising with Christian kindness and generosity, then there is a revival of everything that is desirable. This is not impossible. Music is a talent lent us by the Master. Let us invest it gladly, gladly, and it will repay us an hundred fold.

This great instrument for his praise has been in the world ever since the morning stars first sang together. It has built Gothic cathedrals that will stand longer than Westminster Abbey. Such colossal masterpieces as Bach's Passion of St. Matthew and Handel's Messiah summon us into the audience chamber of the Almighty, while the simpler church music of to-day is a great ocean of tone—the tides of music's golden sea, sweeping toward eternity, a sea in which all creeds unite, like the tones of a chord. We plead for unity. Church music is one of our strongest allies. As a central attraction it is more powerful than our differences. It binds together ancient and modern times, nations of various races and languages, church-men and non-conformists, churches reformed and unreformed, and hastens the unity of all good Christians.

Some time, a thousand years hence, we shall know the full sweep of its magnificent harmony, and with it shall vibrate in accord with the Master-musician of it all, the God of Music, the Master and Friend of man.

Christ in Art*

By W. E. BARTON, D. D.

Modern art has exhibited no lack of fidelity to the truth as it is in Christ, and there is a distinct return toward the dominant conception of the early Church. In answer to the question what pictures of Christ are most called for, the manager of a house that deals in one-cent half-tone reproductions, answered that, as a series, those of Hofmann are most in demand, with "The Boy Christ in the Temple" the most popular; and that among pictures of the adult Christ the one sold in largest numbers is Plockhorst's "Good Shepherd." This is a notable change since the day when Guido Reni sent forth his sorrowful and thorn-crowned "Ecce Homos" by the score. It reminds us at once of Stanley's declaration that the religion of the early Church "was in one word, the religion of the Good Shepherd. The kindness, the courage, the beauty, the grace of the Good Shepherd was to them, if we may say so, prayer book and articles, creed and canons, all in one. They looked on that figure, and it conveyed to them all they wanted.

What wonder that the face of the Christ should be the perpetual challenge and the despair of artists? What wonder that they should have failed to express all the glory of him in whom men saw the life of the Father? It could not be otherwise. If the artist's best work gives expression to one phase of the beauty of his life, but ever suggests the lack of something which no human brush can paint, it is but what we might expect. We should need to add together all the elements of dignity and beauty and sweetness and strength of all the artists, and still we should lack a complete picture of him. The face and character of the Christ stand as a perpetual exhortation. The likeness of Christ ennobles our daily tasks and exalts our ideal of the good and true and beautiful in human life.

We set out to explore the world of art in an effort to answer the question, Who is the Christ whom the artists have found in popular thought and given back again in their paintings? Hastily we have looked at representative paintings of the past and the present, of our own nation and of other nations. We have not been satisfied; we are still seeking the face which we have almost discovered. But we have found a surprising consistency, a high ideal, and a face and figure, which, however disappointing, are never vulgar or uncouth, never base or suggestive of evil, but always reverent, sincere and noble.

If we should meet in real life the Man whom the painters have seen and shown to us, with form erect and imperial, but manner and bearing gracious and kindly, with face compassionate, sensitive, pure and sympathetic, with eyes tender, penetrating and affectionate, we should instantly be attracted to him. We would welcome acquaintance with him. We would give him our confidence. We should be sure that we could trust him. We could not think of doubting his sincerity, his purity of soul, or the earnestness of his life. And if we were to know him in such various relations as the painters show him, in scenes of festivity and of mourning, among the multitude and alone, among close companions and in the hands of his enemies, and always found him, as the painters show him, calm, gentle, and full of all human grace and loveliness, we could not help but love him. How thankful, then, ought we to be for pictures that so impress him, in every age from infancy to the grave, upon the imagination of little children and of men and women. To these the Christ of art is a veritable, even though a partial, revelation of God's love and grace disclosed in the life of Jesus of Nazareth.

Nor can we count the paintings as failures that fall below our ideal. They enlarge and exalt the imagination even when they impose limits upon it. Happily we still have the second commandment, and are forbidden to count any work of art a finality. We are at liberty to love the paintings that help us and to outgrow them when they fetter us, and ever to seek for that which exalts our conception of Jesus. The ear is not the only avenue to the soul; the eye, too, has its revelation. The good spirit of God, by whom the Word of life was revealed, still accompanies the preaching of that Word; and the same Spirit that gives wisdom to him who preaches gives grace to him who paints in an honest endeavor to make the Christ real to men. Increasingly may men labor to disclose and to discern "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ."

"Blue Monday."

Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, in "The Sunday School Times," says:

"The time has passed when the official position of the clergyman can carry him; he must be a man if he would have the power to lead souls to God. For a minister, therefore, to have what is called a 'Blue Monday' is to make himself ridiculous in the eyes of healthy men, and to lose his influence. Tired, because he has been telling the old story of the cross? Nervously exhausted, because he has preached twice, and perhaps spent five minutes in the Sunday-school? Despondent, when he has been urging others to hope and cheer? If so, surely he does not believe what he preaches, or, worse yet, makes no effort to set an example to his flock. But the majority of ministers must plead guilty. . . . .

"Monday ought to have so many opportunities that the minister would have no time to think of himself. The day is too short for it all if we would be faithful to the trust. Monday is a harvest day. Arise, hasten, for souls are waiting."

What Lord Curzon Did Without Knowing It

By William Durban

One of the most remarkable incidents that has ocurred during my lengthy ministry happened through what might seem to be an exceedingly trivial cause. But all thoughtful Christian people well understand that in the dealings of divine providence stupendous issues hang upon exceedingly small beginnings, just as ponderous doors swing upon invisible little hinges.

Some years ago it fell to my lot to found a Christian church on simple, unsectarian, evangelical principles, with the help of a few earnest friends who had, after study of their Bibles, come to the conclusion that the divided state of Christianity was an evil for which a remedy could be found. As might be expected, the new congregation which was gathered into the mission chapel consisted of individuals of very mixed sentiments. Some were attracted by the novelty of a newly-started institution, some by the advertisements of the services, some by the wish to hear a strange preacher, and yet others by the announcement that the aim was to inagurate a "church of Christ, unsectarian, evangelical, and apostolic."

As the responsible preacher I did not hide my flag. As I had been led to adopt the pure white banner of primitive, apostolic Christianity I was anxious in truth and love to press on others the principles implied. And, as may easily be imagined, many of the hearers were charmed, as I myself had been, with what was to them like the revelation of a new Bible. Some said that this was just what they had been waiting for, without understanding what they were groping after. They felt that they had been brought straight to the pure, crystalline fountain-head of ecclesiastical doctrine, and that the wonderful thing was that they had not previously seen the beauty of Christianity in its uncomplicated and original simplicity.

But in other cases the result was extremely different. Fierce opposition and bitter resentment were roused in minds which were fanatically prejudiced in favor of popular sectism. I will not refer in detail to any of these. I am, in writing these lines, concerning myself with a very singular case in which conviction was brought about by evidence from an extraordinary quarter. In my congregation was a lady, who was one of the first to recognize the force of the plea thus advocated. She had traveled considerably in foreign lands, and had seen very much of the deplorable conditions induced by the papal apostasy. This lady was exceedingly solicitous for the spiritual welfare of her husband, who had lapsed into worldliness, but, nevertheless, was willing to accompany her to the sanctuary. He was a very able professional man, and, indeed, both husband and wife were exceedingly intellectual.

It was encouraging to me to discover in a short time that Mr. Roderick was displaying an increasing interest in the religious services. One Sunday he earnestly requested that I would on an early day pay a visit to his home. I did not fail to do so. I found, at the outset of the conversation which ensued, that Mrs. Roderick was delighted at the spiritual revival of which her husband had become the subject.

"I am specially anxious," said Mr. Roderick, "to ask you how you can imagine it possible to realize your strange dream of an unsectarian type of Christianity. My wife heartily accepts your doctrine, and I am very thankful to have attended the church of Christ with her. The services have been an unmistakable benediction to me. But, though my wife dreams the same dream, to me this idea is altogether visionary, unpractical, and impossible. Indeed, I am unable to see any issue of this kind of ecclesiastical attempt, excepting the manufacture of one more denomination while attempting to escape denominationalism."

"My dear friend," I replied, "in the first place, your assertion that some of us are dreaming, including your own wife, is simply a dream on your part. You dream that we are dreaming, but we are very wide awake indeed, awake to a solid and ancient truth, as old as Christianity itself. It is no dream that early Christianity was without schism or sect, and it is also no dream that it enjoyed peace and possessed power until schism and sect robbed it of both. That is simply a fact established by historic record. And we are not dreaming when we declare that sectism must vanish and unity must prevail. For, as scientific men tell us, nature always tends to revert to the simplest type, and, in like manner, spirituality must tend toward simplicity."

I have ever since that day thought it extraordinary that I happened to have with me when paying this visit a certain book which I had been to secure at Mudie's library. It was Lord Curzon's work, "Problems of the Far East," which made his fame both as writer and statesman. I had laid the book on the table of my friend during the conversation. During my omnibus ride I had been scanning many pages, and one chapter in particular had astonished and impressed me. I took up the book when Mr. Roderick paused again, after attempting to prove that denominationalism after all was doing immense good. Opening Lord Curzon's volume and turning to the chapter by which I had been struck, I handed it to Mr. Roderick, and asked him to read aloud a certain passage in which, with great emphasis, the famous author declaims concerning the hopeless mischief wrought in Japan in modern times by sectarian Christian missions. Lord Curzon gives a long list of the various denominations, which have created endless difficulties for the good missionaries themselves. The Japanese have been terribly confused and bewildered by this absurd exhibition of division amongst those who all claim to be right, so that vast numbers of the intelligent heathen turn away with indifference and contempt. How can they be expected to decide which is the genuine type amongst all these contradictory varieties of faith? How can there be one faith at all among Christians if they can not settle their differences, but are split up into all sorts of jarring sects?

My friend looked astonished at the conclusion of this reading. We three were silent for a short time. I felt that Lord Curzon had put the plea of Christian unity even better than he knew, and that I could say nothing more forcible. But with the most commendable frankness, which proved that he was a genuine truth-seeker, not blinded by prejudice, Mr. Roderick suddenly and seriously exclaimed, "Well, I am bound honestly to confess that I have never thought of it in this light. And I believe he is right. This kind of thing must be all wrong. It is time that there was a new reformation, and I am with you from this moment with heart and soul."

Since that day I have many times in conversation with intelligent people referred to Lord Curzon's powerful testimony. I have shown it to several missionaries from the field spoken of, and from other parts of the heathen world as well, and one and all frankly admit that the lack of Christian unity is one of the chief obstacles to the rapid conversion of the heathen, to whom the strange divisions of the Christian world constitute a hopeless perplexity.

A GOOD THING

When It Comes Along Don't let It Get Away From You.

"I really feel that it is hardly possible to say too much in favor of Grape-Nuts as a health food," writes a Chicago woman:

"For 9 or 10 years I had suffered from indigestion and chronic constipation, caused by the continued use of coffee and rich, heavy, greasy foods. My ailments made my life so wretched that I was eager to try anything that held out a promise of help. And that is how I happened to buy a package of Grape-Nuts food last spring.

"That ended my experiments. For in Grape-Nuts I found exactly what I wanted and needed. From the day I began to use it I noticed an improvement and in a very few weeks I found my health completely restored. My digestive apparatus now works perfectly and my chronic constipation has been entirely relieved. I have gained in weight materially, and life is a very pleasant thing to me so long as I use Grape-Nuts once or twice a day. I have found by experiment that if I leave it off for a few days my health suffers.

"A physician in our town has great success in treating stomach troubles, and the secret of it is that he compels his patients to use Grape-Nuts food—it always brings back the power of digestion." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Bethany has given to the world politicians as well as preachers. She has had as many as three Congressmen from the state of Missouri that I now think of: Benjamin Franklin, A. M. Lay, and Champ Clark. Perhaps her two most important public men to-day are B. B. Odell, of New York, and Champ Clark, of Missouri. Both of these men received inspiration from the little school among the hills along the Buffalo, and both remember with sincere affection her contribution to their advancement. If you want to arouse their enthusiasm all you need to do is to name W. K. Pendleton and Charles Louis Loos. They got their first glimpse of the universe from the college tower. They began to hitch their wagons to the stars from Pendleton heights.

Clark is again sporting under the Dome. Friday, January 6, he had a field day in the House, and for three hours talked on the Philippine tariff and the world in general. The mere announcement that the eloquent Missourian is to speak is sufficient to fill the galleries and crowd the desks. It is almost as good as special "performance" in the Neotrophian or the A. L. I. of college days. Incidentally the Champ Clark brand of pure Democracy was defined by its most distinguished exponent and the House was entertained and enlightened by a speech replete with wit, humor, sarcasm, ridicule, repartee, anecdote, and classic allusion quite up to Sunset Cox of other days. Standing in the forum in front of the speaker's desk, and facing the Republican side of the chamber, to which he addressed his argument, he handled without gloves the various things which are now under consideration at the Capital. And not only things but men passed in gay and festive review before him. The standpatters; the gray and grizzled veteran, Uncle Joe Cannon; the leaders, Grosvenor, Dalzell, Payne, Hepburn, Cooper, Watson; beet and cane sugar, tobacco and corn, free hides and bimetallism, Bryan and the President—all passed in rapid succession before his delighted listeners. When asked what kind of a Democrat he was, "I am a Champ Clark Democrat," he rejoined amid hearty laughter. They plied him with questions. The brightest men of the House kept up a continuous cross-fire at him. Questions and interruptions and red flags came thick and fast on every hand, but our man from Missouri stood his ground and floored every man who sought to measure lances with him. Pike county is on top.

Here was the style of the debate. Senator Lodge, said Mr. Clark, had been stirred to action by the recent election in his state and wanted reciprocity and free hides and other things for the manufacturing industries of his commonwealth.

"If he takes the tariff off boots and shoes and other manufactured products, he'll get it, but in no other way," said Mr. Clark.

"Would the gentleman support a proposition for free hides coupled with a reduction on leather products?" asked Mr. Gardner, of Massachusetts, son-in-law of Senator Lodge.

"So quick it would make your head swim!" retorted Mr. Clark.

Looking directly at Speaker Cannon, who early in the debate had taken a seat in front of Mr. Clark, the Missourian said: "The newspapers say President Roosevelt and Speaker Cannon have entered into a modus vivendi by which the Speaker will permit or facilitate railroad-rate legislation during this session if the President will not send in a message in favor of tariff revision."

HON. CHAMP CLARK.

"Does the gentleman believe that statement?" asked Mr. Grosvenor after the laughter had quieted.

"I am not on the witness stand,'" was the answer. "But President Roosevelt entered into a modus vivendi with President Morales, of Santo Domingo, and Morales has taken to the woods, modus vivendi, government, and all." (Laughter.)

Clark did not want the Philippines. He had voted against paying for them, after the treaty of Paris had been ratified, and he wanted that fact engraved on his tombstone. He read a description of the islands given by a U. S. marine.

"As I see them—the Philippines—they are a bunch of trouble on the horizon of civilization. They are bounded on the north by rocks and destruction, on the east by typhoons and hurricanes, on the south by cannibals and earthquakes, on the west by sharks and smugglers. The interior of the islands is composed of mud and mountains. The Philippine Islands are a nice bouquet for a deadly enemy. Malarial fever is so prevalent that several times the islands have been shaken by the vibrations of the inhabitants in their chills. The natives are very industrious—their industries being cock fighting and stealing. Their marriage ceremony is very impressive, especially that clause in the contract providing that the wife may labor for her husband as much as she desires. The towns are aggregations of shacks, full of fleas, cur dogs, cats, horses, pigs, chickens, carabao, bedbugs, and the families live on terms of equality. The Philippine Islands, as a whole, are a forsaken, cannibalized, Aguinaldo-infested blot on the earth. At least the marine thinks so when he has thirty long months to stay."

Clark is to-day one of the most striking figures in Congress. Who has not heard of the member from Pike county? He first appeared in the Fifty-third Congress and soon came to the front. I chanced to be in New York City on the day after the Glorious Fourth and picked up "The World," to find my friend's fame had indeed become worldwide. The night before he had spoken for Tammany. Another had been billed as the chief spell-binder, but failed to appear. Clark was to speak among the "and others." Few knew anything about the young M. C. from Pike county, but he carried Tammany by storm. All Gotham was talking about him the next day. "The World" pictured him in all his various attitudes and had bracketed after every few sentences, "Applause," "Loud applause," "Continued applause," "Sensation," etc., and since then everybody knows Champ Clark, the old-fashioned Democrat from Pike county, "Missoury."

He is classed among the humorists of Congress, but men concede to him certain high statesmanlike qualities which give him an honorable position outside the mere role of fun-making. He has shown himself a good deal of a leader. His speeches read like Cox of New York. They have the same brightness and sparkle, the same literary finish and wealth of allusion; and the man from Missouri has achieved a place among his colleagues not unlike that of the genial spirit from the empire state. His style of oratory was somewhat flamboyant and Neotrophian in the beginning and older members did not know whether to take him seriously or not, sometimes breaking out in audible smiles, and at others gasping with astonishment. Later his speeches have had a more classic, American-Literary-Institute, Websterian finish, which some have attributed to the fact that, in his race for the Fifty-fourth Congress, he was beaten by a music teacher, which somewhat quieted and harmonized him.

The Unconscious Mind and the Holy Spirit

By A. B. Jones

(Concluded from issue of January 4.)

This brings us to the capital point aimed at in this article—the relation of the Holy Spirit to human consciousness. It is claimed by many Christian people that they have the direct consciousness of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in their hearts and lives. Excited emotions and ecstatic, rapturous moods of which they are conscious, in their way of thinking, are identified with the Holy Spirit. But are they conscious of the immediate presence of the Holy Spirit as the cause of this inspiration, as they are conscious of the presence of a friend in conversation whom they see and hear and know? On this point Dr. Schofield argues and quotes as follows:

"The larger and more potent part of our spiritual, as well as of our physical life, is behind the veil of our normal consciousness, and beyond our brightest intellectual capacity. Kingsley says: 'It leads to the mistaking conscious emotions for the workings of the Spirit, which must be above consciousness.' A well known Christian teacher, the Rev. Dr. Andrew Murray, writes: 'Deeper down than where the soul with its consciousness can enter, there is spirit matter linking man with God; and deeper down than the mind and feelings or will—in the unseen depths of the hidden life—there dwells the Spirit of God.'" The author also quotes from Professor Barrett as follows:

"There are higher and more capacious powers wrapped up in our human personality than are expressed even by what we know of consciousness, will or reason. There are supernormal and transcendental powers of which, at present, we catch only occasional glimpses; and behind and beyond the supernormal there are fathomless abysses, the divine ground of the soul, the ultimate reality of which our consciousness is but the reflection or faint representation."

In another chapter the author expresses himself on this subject in the following style:

"It has long been felt that the doctrines of Christianity of a new birth and nature, of the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and even of conscience, are not directly realized within the sphere of consciousness. Also that the basis of ethics and all morality lies in a voice and judgment that speaks to us from the unknown within, however much its tones and words may be modified by circumstances and teaching derived from consciousness. The value, therefore, here of the establishing of the fact of the unconscious mind is immense, giving at once the key to all, and showing where our highest spirit-life and moral sense dwells, and whence proceeds the voice of conscience, and shall we say, of God?"

In conclusion the reader's indulgence is sought in making a personal allusion to myself. Some twenty years ago while engaged in the study of Sir William Hamilton's lectures on metaphysics the idea of the "unconscious mind" was first brought impressively to my attention. About the same time I was reading a book on the Holy Spirit—"The Paraclete"—by the late Joseph Parker, of London, and I was quite interested in both studies. Soon afterward the John Burns Publishing Company of St. Louis published a small volume—"A Symposium on the Holy Spirit." I contributed the leading article in that book. A paragraph from that article is here reproduced:

"Now, just why the Holy Spirit is not himself revealed directly to us in consciousness is a question we may not be able to understand. I venture, however, to say a word upon this point looking in the direction of a possible solution. That there may be causes present to the mind and influences really exerted, which effect modifications upon the passive soul, and which even excite mental activity, without developing consciousness, is a fact maintained by the highest authorities in psychological science. Upon this point I quote a few sentences from Sir William Hamilton:

"'The problem then is—are there, in ordinary mental modifications, mental activities and passivities, of which we are unconscious, but which manifest their existence by effects of which we are conscious? . . . . I do not hesitate to maintain that what we are conscious of is constructed out of what we are not conscious of . . . . There are many things we neither know nor can know in themselves—that is, in their direct and immediate relation to our faculties of knowledge, but which manifest their existence indirectly through the medium of their effects. They are not in themselves revealed to consciousness, but as certain facts of consciousness necessarily suppose them to exist, and to exert an influence in the mental process, we are thus constrained to admit, as modifications of mind, what are not in themselves phenomena of consciousness.'

"Assuming now the fact that we all have experiences of a subjective character, spiritual experiences, so subtle in their causes, though definite in their effects, that we are wholly unable to account for, by reference to anything which comes within the sphere of direct consciousness; experiences, too, that we can never formulate in words or adequately express; divine experiences, which find their complement only in heaven, are we not led to the belief that the Holy Spirit is in relation to our poor souls, breathing into them an immediate divine influence?"

It was thus I wrestled with this subject a quarter of a century ago. This was the best I could do at that time. It was a new view to my mind. I had never seen the idea in any book before, nor have since until reading this work of Dr. Schofield. I have been greatly helped by this book in both my religious and metaphysical thinking, and especially along the lines where they overlap.

As Seen From the Dome.

In all his speeches he shows his religious training. He calls the Ninth Street Church "The Democratic Campbellite Church" and is not unwilling to assume any odium that may attach to this unusual and somewhat erratic combination. The Bible he quotes more familiarly and pertinently than any man in the House. His father was a deeply religious man in the "Old Kentucky Home," but Champ was not so pious. One day he ran across Patrick Henry's speech in the Virginia House of Burgesses, beginning, "It is natural for man to indulge in the illusions of hope." One sentence in the speech struck the boy's fancy: "The race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." He told how it impressed him. His father took him down by remarking: "King Solomon wrote that sentence; and if you will read your Bible you will find a great many things equally as good." So, from curiosity, Champ began to read the Bible and has kept it up ever since. One of his ablest lectures is called, "The Riches of Golconda," and is a eulogy on the Word.

Clark is nothing unless original. He wears his hat in an original way and has an original walk. His manner of speech and methods of work are all his own. His very autobiography in that brilliant collection of lives of great men so modestly put forth, known as "The Congressional Directory," is peculiar to himself.

Our Missouri brother is one of the most companionable of men. He loves a horse and a dog and a man. His smooth shaven face beams with good humor. Somewhat intense he may be in his political ideas, and sometimes led to say very radical things, but he comes very near to being that impossible thing—an honest politician.

UNCONSCIOUS POISONING

How it Often Happens From Coffee.

"I had no idea," writes a Duluth man, "that it was the coffee I had been drinking all my life that was responsible for the headaches which were growing upon me, for the dyspepsia that no medicines would relieve, and for the acute nervousness which unfitted me not only for work but also for the most ordinary social functions.

"But at last the truth dawned upon me. I forthwith bade the harmful beverage a prompt farewell, ordered in some Postum and began to use it. The good effects of the new food drink were apparent within a very few days. My headaches grew less frequent, and decreased in violence, my stomach grew strong and able to digest my food without distress of any kind, my nervousness has gone and I am able to enjoy life with my neighbors and sleep soundly o'nights. My physical strength and nerve power have increased so much that I can double the work I used to do, and feel no undue fatigue afterwards.

"This improvement set in just as soon as the old coffee poison had so worked out of my system as to allow the food elements in the Postum to get a hold to build me up again. I cheerfully testify that it was Postum and Postum alone that did all this, for when I began to drink it I 'threw physic to the dogs.'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

—W. T. Tibbs one of the stalwarts of our plea, is dead. He was interred at Mt. Sterling, Ky., the funeral services being conducted by H. D. Clark and J. W. McGarvey. We publish some particulars in another column.

—The brethren at Bowling Green, Ky., recently made a surprise call upon their preacher, W. T. Wells, and presented him with a fine gold watch and his wife with some beautiful cut glass as an expression of their esteem.

—W. F. Turner writes that F. F. Walters, at Neosho, Mo., is so blessed in his new work that the church has had to rent a larger building to hold the people. He is now in a meeting, with L. D. Sprague as singer. A new building is imperative there.

—The Idaho field is a very difficult one and Lewiston has a hard name in religious circles, but the church there under H. H. Hubbell is preparing for an evangelistic forward movement to begin about February 1. B. D. Chestnut, of Iowa, will assist the pastor as leader of song.

—At the Island Christian Church, Wheeling, W. Va., special evangelistic meetings will begin next Lord's day. Brother Rice will be assisted by Percy H. Wilson, of Moundsville, and after the meetings at Wheeling, Brother Rice will assist Brother Wilson in a series of meetings.

—H. W. Miller, who has taken charge at Harrison, Ohio, finds the church there in a flourishing condition. The ladies' aid gave a reception for the new minister and his wife. A meeting will be begun the first Lord's day in February, with Frank Thomas, of New Salem, Ind., taking part.

—Since W. J. Clark took charge of the church at Owenton, Ky., two years ago, the amount given annually for missions has been doubled. The year just closed has been the most successful in the history of the church. A great ingathering is expected at the meeting planned to be held in the spring.

—During December the Foreign Society received $20,274.46, a gain of $10,874.29 over the corresponding month, 1904. For the first three months of the missionary year the receipts show a gain of $10,828.42. If the friends continue with the same interest for the nine months following, the $300,000 will be raised.

—The brethren at Brunswick, Mo., are growing more interested in missions. T. A. Abbott was with them recently and $142 were raised, while one member gave $100 for the permanent fund of the state society. E. H. Williamson, the pastor, believes that this should appeal strongly to the brotherhood of Missouri at this special time.

—H. C. Varner organized a church of forty members at Roseberry, Idaho, last winter and he has now entered upon the pastorate there, a good church building having been erected, to seat 275 people. A meeting will be held in February. Brother Varner will endeavor to organize congregations at other points close by.

—Our church building at Cambridge City, Ind., which has been closed for extensive repairs, has been reopened. Some $600 were spent upon the improvements. The individual communion cups have been introduced. At the opening service there were two additions by confession and one by statement. C. C. Redgrave is the pastor.

—O. P. Spiegel, general evangelist of the home board, is in a meeting at Pensacola, Fla., where the people know little of the plea of the Disciples of Christ, for our brethren there are few in number and weak financially. Any tracts that may be sent to Brother Spiegel will be judiciously distributed and ought to do much good.

—The brethren at Marion, Ohio, have gone into their Sunday school auditorium and hope to be in the main room next month, when there will be a missionary rally, dedication, and an evangelistic meeting. It is not true, as reported, that O. D. Maple has resigned the pastorate. He is to remain another year. The brethren are looking for an evangelist.

—S. W. Nay, secretary, writes us that at a recently well attended meeting of the ministers' alliance of Kansas City and vicinity that body expressed itself unanimously as being in perfect sympathy with the spirit and purpose of the recent Conference of Churches held in New York City, and appointed a committee to write a suitable memorial to be published later.

—In renewing his subscription, W. H.

Tufts, Sr., Linneus, Mo., writes: "I often think of our pleasant visit to the coast together last summer and hope we will meet again." Do not we often think of that trip and our joyful fellowship together? Yes, Brother Tufts, we are sure to meet again—if not here, then there, and who knows what expedition we may take together up there?

—The Board of Church Extension has received its third gift of $1,000 on the annuity plan for the year 1906. This gift comes from a friend in California who formerly gave $1,000. This makes $4,000 received on the annuity plan from January 1 to 6. Concerning the annuity fund write G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo.

—Investment should be sought in our institutions of learning. How many people invest in blank gold mines, failing oil wells, and speculative fruit farms only to see their money vanish! Better invest in men. The world needs men. The true philanthropist is he who helps to produce men. College is the essential factor in the largest manhood. He who helps the college, therefore, blesses the race.

—J. E. Davis has left Stanberry, Mo., and is now at work at Beatrice, Neb. He had a very successful pastorate at Stanberry, the three years' record showing 248 additions to the church, with over $20,000 raised. A new building costing some $15,000 has been paid for with the exception of $2,100, which are pledged. Brother Davis leaves the church in good health, united and happy. It has a membership of 450. It has called G. W. Terrell.

—I. H. Burgess, who is now located at New Haven, Mo., where the church is moving forward for better things, is anxious that some co-operative work may be done in Franklin and Gasconade counties. He would like to hear from all churches in these counties with a view of working up a convention in the spring. He reports that there is a good opportunity for work at Pacific, Mo. He is now engaged in a meeting at Chamois.

—The ministers of the churches of Christ on the Niagara frontier have organized themselves into the "Ministerial Association of the Churches of Christ in Western New York." It includes the pastors in Buffalo, Tonawanda, North Tonawanda, Niagara Falls, Dunkirk, East Aurora, Williamsville and Clarence. B. S. Ferrall was elected president, E. F. Randall, vice-president, W. C. Bower, secretary and treasurer, and B. H. Hayden, critic.

—A local paper of Bloomington, Ill., spoke very highly of the work of William Ross Lloyd at the First Christian Church there. It said he was "earnest, diligent, conscientious and able, and bringing his message of truth as a preacher and exemplifying his faith before his people and the whole city. His sympathies have been shown toward all humanity and he has labored to make men better." The congregation presented Brother Lloyd with a purse of gold as a token of the esteem in which he was held.

—R. H. Love reports that the church in Ponca City, Okla., goes forward. Two months ago the small church building was removed from its obscure location to one of the most prominent corners on the main street of the city and the work of enlarging and remodeling was at once begun. It will require four or five weeks to complete the structure, after which it will be the finest church house among our people in Oklahoma north of Guthrie. The membership is composed very largely of Missourians and Kentucky people.

—S. R. Maxwell, who has been serving the churches of St. Louis for some time as city missionary, has decided to enter the evangelistic field and devote himself to that work. The brethren in St. Louis have not only learned to love Brother Maxwell for his Christian character, but they have a high appreciation of his ability as a preacher of the Gospel. He has, we believe, superior qualifications for evangelistic work, and we predict large success for him in this field. He may be addressed at 1315 Laurel Place, St. Louis, Missouri.

—We are glad to know that President Burris A. Jenkins, of Kentucky University, has returned to his work completely restored in health, and fears no further recurrence of his physical disability. A great part of his care and responsibility has been removed from his shoulders through the selection, by the Executive Committee, of Walter M. White, late of San Francisco, as secretary to the university. Brother White is already on the ground, and has taken up his work enthusiastically. He has put a new spirit into all the friends and forces of the university.

—We have received a statement from the committee having the matter in hand of the charges of immorality against A. R. Adams, who was minister of the church at Fairfield, Ia., stating that Mr. Adams has made a full confession of his guilt and asks to be restored to the brotherhood. The committee believes, in view of the circumstances under which the wrong was done and his sincere repentance, that his plea for forgiveness should be accepted by the brethren. Brother Adams is now in Idaho and this report leaves him free to make a new career for himself.

—R. H. Tanksley has accepted a call to Fredonia, Kan., where he will remove the last of this month from Humboldt. E. E. Lowe was pastor last year and did a splendid work. He received a call to Arkansas City, Kan., but is undecided about his future plans since losing his boy. W. H. Rust, of Iowa, has already taken up the work at Humboldt, and will prove a good addition to the Kansas forces. Brother Tanksley's call was unsolicited and unanimous. Everything points to a successful work by our brethren at Fredonia. The interest of the business men of the church is one of the bright features.

—Marcellus R. Ely writes from New Orleans under date of February 6: "To-day we laid in the tomb the body of the youngest child of Brother and Sister Malcomson R. Pittman. The child met its death through the igniting of a can of gasoline. Brother Pittman was formerly pastor of the First Church in this city, but has been engaged in business here for some time. His name is well known to many of the brotherhood, for he has spent twenty-five years in the ministry in the Carolinas, Virginia, and New York. He recently expressed his purpose to re-enter the ministry. He would be a strong man for some church."

—C. F. Ellis, writing from South Chicago, says: "Our church has been hampered on account of meeting in a small lodge hall, with no midweek privileges, since its organization. Our membership is about 50. The Congregationalists have a parsonage and a church building as a mission from their main church a few blocks south of us. They have a Sunday school of between 150 and 200 members with an average attendance of 125. They are now turning this mission (buildings and scholars) over to us, we to take possession the first Sunday in the new year. As our teaching capacity is limited the Congregational brethren have agreed to stay by us for four months with their help." Here is the spirit of co-operation again.

—S. G. Inman, superintendent of evangelistic work for the Disciples of Christ in Mexico, sends out as his greetings for 1906 the following quotation from "Stanley on Livingstone," hoping that these words, "descriptive of a great soul," may be a source of strength to others: "There is a man who is manifestly sustained as well as guided by influences from heaven. The Holy Spirit dwells in him. God speaks through him. The heroism, the nobility, the pure and stainless enthusiasm at the root of his life come, beyond question, from Christ. There must, therefore, be a Christ; and it is worth while to have such a helper and redeemer as this Christ undoubtedly is, and as he here reveals himself in this wonderful disciple." What if every disciple of Christ were proof of Christ in this way?

—A subscriber from England writes: "We are in heartiest accord with your noble purpose in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I have been intensely interested in the epoch-making congress in the interest of union which lately met in New York City. I am reading your work on the Holy Spirit, criticisms and all." It is interesting to note how closely our movement in England is connected with our work in this country, and how deeply the brethren in that country are interested in the great movements in our own land. Having seen some of the sad fruits of legalism in that country, they are naturally appreciative of all efforts on this side to escape similar results. Alas, we know something by experience in America of the divisive and retarding influences of a false theory of Christianity which takes the heart out of it, and seeks to make the New Testament a new Leviticus.

—In a personal letter from Dr. D. M. Breaker, of Carters, Fla., he writes: "I am compelled by stern necessity to abandon the work as a volunteer evangelist. I have been met everywhere with a warm welcome and have been encouraged with evidences of the presence and power of the Holy Spirit; but the contributions are too meager to meet the absolute demands of necessity. To be forced out of the work just as opportunities for successful labor are opening before me is peculiarly hard, but there is apparently no help for it." It is greatly to be regretted that Brother Breaker can not be kept in the field as an evangelist. Can not the state or general board do something to assist him? Three hundred dollars would probably suffice to keep him in the field. There are many men of means who might well make him their living link evangelist. He can give satisfactory evidence both of the quality of his work and his character.

—The "Christian Messenger," of Toronto, Canada, referring to its "attitude to union schemes," says:

"There used to be, years ago, an old fogey idea that 'night air' was injurious. From continually breathing with safety the only air that was to be had people have abandoned the theory. Amongst others, lots of good Christian people have abandoned the idea. They are now content to believe that the Lord never made anything consistently bad intended for popular use."

The "Messenger" thinks, "there are lots of 'night air' theories floating around the religious world." The danger of co-operating with our religious neighbors is pointed out as one of these. It adds: "Brethren, if the Christian people of America wish to federate for lawful ends in the campaign against sin, let us say Amen to the scheme."

They have a pretty clear atmosphere up in Canada and see things apparently in their true light.

—We regret to learn that E. H. Rayner, who accomplished so successful a work in Kissimmee, Fla., has been compelled to retire from that field and return to Worcester, Mass., on account of the health of his wife and child. Brother Rayner began his work in Kissimmee under very discouraging circumstances, with very few members and very little support. Since that time more than ninety persons have been received into the church, largely by confession and baptism, a new house has been built on one of the best locations in town, at a cost of from $4,000 to $4,500 in cash and labor, with an indebtedness of only $800 remaining. Bro. B. Q. Denham, who dedicated the church in the autumn, is temporarily filling the pulpit. The church desires to secure the services of a good man for that field. Those interested may address Brother Rayner, 19 Home street, Worcester, Mass., or Elder A. L. Davidson, Kissimmee, Fla. The state board of Florida has contributed to the support of a pastor.

—In a personal letter to the Editor from Hon. Champ Clark, he says: "In November, while en route to Washington, I swung down into Alabama on a lecture tour—lectured in Elder Claude E. Hill's lecture course in his magnificent new church to a magnificent audience. Being one of my Pike and Ralls county boys, I naturally take a deep interest in him. He is succeeding wonderfully at Mobile. When he went there two and one half years ago, he found twelve members of our religious persuasion. Now, he has a congregation of about 170 and still a-growing. They have built a $16,000 house of worship. Of course the church boards helped; but Claude raised a large part of the funds, some locally and some by appealing to his friends in Missouri and elsewhere. He seems to know everybody in Mobile and to be liked by everybody. His brother Charlie is doing equally well in New Mexico. They are fine examples of boys from what was once 'The Bloody Ninth,' now 'The Peaceful Ninth.'"

—An officer of a church asks a question as to the course to pursue with reference to those who "persist in playing cards—playing cards for prizes—after having been lovingly admonished both in private and in public." It is not always easy to know what is the best course to pursue with members whose Christian life has been so imperfectly developed as that they will indulge in these doubtful amusements, to say the least, which grieve their brethren. As a rule, we think forbearance, giving opportunity for further instruction and for spiritual growth, is the best policy. To withdraw fellowship from them for such an offense is not likely to prove beneficial to them and that, after all, is the end of discipline. We are bound to recognize the fact that there are members in the church whose religious life is feeble, and who must be borne with and admonished kindly with the hope of developing their spiritual life. Love is more potent in remedying such evils than even righteous indignation, manifested in the form of exclusion. Of course the time comes, in some cases, when forbearance ceases to be a virtue, but that is always when the moral life of the offenders leaves no question whatever as to the propriety of withdrawing fellowship from them. "As long as there is life there is hope" applies to the spiritual as well as to the physical condition, but when life is extinct, exclusion becomes a necessity.

—Bro. David Bowler, of Emden, Ill., having read what has been written in The Christian-Evangelist about the Holy Spirit, asks the Editor to answer these questions:

"1. If one believes everything the heavenly Father has said through his Son, our Savior, or otherwise, and obeys everything he has commanded, may such an one claim the gift of the Holy Spirit?

"2. If one does not believe all that God has said through his Son or the apostles, and will not obey all he commands him to do, can such an one receive the gift of the Holy Spirit?

"3. Has God ever made any communication to men, from Adam to the present time, that he did not make either by speaking or writing?"

The first question we answer in the affirmative. The second in the negative with the emphasis upon "will not obey." The answer to the third would depend on what is meant by the word, "communication." In the olden time God certainly revealed truth to men through visions and dreams. In all ages, but more especially in the Christian age, which is the dispensation of the Spirit, God has communicated comfort, strength, and guidance, in answer to prayer, which can not be identified with any special words, either written or spoken. It is this fact that gives meaning and value to prayer. Man can communicate with man without the medium of written or spoken words. Why should it be thought incredible that God can and does do the same?

—In Brother Scoville's meeting recently held at Allegeheny City among the five ministers who united with the church was a Bro. Duncan MacGregor of Allegheny. We are permitted to make the following extract from a letter he has recently written to Brother Scoville which shows how he feels in his new relationship:

"Very many, many grateful thanks for your kind words and willingness to help me into the evangelistic field. I can not thank you enough for the great blessing the Lord has made you to me. I was reared a Methodist, immensely imbued and terribly tangled up with creeds, but I have been blessedly delivered. I wandered so long in the wilderness and tangled mazes of speculative thought and study, it was hard to get out of my entanglemens; but thank the Lord, I have been extricated. I have fallen in love with the simple, plain teachings of Jesus only. It is so beautiful. I spent nearly all the night alone with him the night after you preached your sermon on 'What Church would Jesus Join?' and that night the last lingering vestige of men-made creeds I threw overboard. I told him I would keep all the commandments and follow his simple teachings, and my happiness is boundless. Since Sunday night, November 19, new conceptions, new purposes, new inspirations, and new life are mine; that night I left all past failures and entanglements, and started out anew."

Brother Scoville is now in a meeting at Anderson, Ind., with Bro. T. W. Grafton where he speaks of Brother Grafton as a "strong, noble pastor."

—Referring to our answer to the open letter of Bro. S. R. Hawkins, Bro. F. M. Hootman, Marshfield, Mo., writes: "Luke 3:21, 22 does not say that Jesus prayed for the Holy Spirit. How do you know that he prayed for the Holy Spirit?" No, the passage does not say, in so many words, that Jesus prayed for the Holy Spirit, but it does say that, praying, the Holy Spirit descended upon him in the form of a dove. What else was there for him to pray for? He was ready now to enter upon his active ministry except the anointing of the Holy Spirit. Who can doubt, therefore, that as he stood yet in the waters of the Jordan and lifted up his heart to his Father in prayer it was that he might be now equipped for the work which his Father had sent him into the world to accomplish? This is in the third chapter of Luke. In the fourth chapter we learn that "Jesus, full of the Holy Spirit, returned from Jordan and was led in the Spirit into the wilderness during forty days, being tempted of the devil." In the same chapter, in the fourteenth verse it is said, "Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee," and in the eighteenth verse he announces his anointing by the Holy Spirit for his lifework by quoting from the prophet Isaiah, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me because he anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor," etc. This evidently points back to his reception of the Holy Spirit at his baptism. The whole context, therefore, especially in view of what the prophets had taught concerning the Messiah and the Holy Spirit, leaves no doubt as to what Jesus prayed for immediately following his baptism.

A Suggestive Study.

W. J. Russell, minister of the First Christian Church, Frankofrt, Ind., writes:

"I read with pleasure your suggestion for all ministers to take advantage of the present course of Sunday school lessons, and, if possible, to start a revival of study in the life of Christ. This has been my purpose, and about the middle of December I began the work. It is my aim to take the entire life of Christ, chronologically arranged, based upon the four Gospels, and give the course in what I call studies, at the morning service of each Lord's day. Thus far I have covered the following ground:

"Part 1.—The Time of Preparation, from the Birth of Jesus until the Coming of John the Baptist: Introductory; Introduction by Mark (Mark 1:1); Preface of Luke's Gospel (Luke 1:1-4); The Prologue of John's Gospel (John 1:1-18); The Two Genealogies (Matt. 1:1-17; Luke 3:23:38); The Appearance of an Angel to Zacharias (Luke 1:5-25); The Annunciation to Mary (Luke 1:26-38); The Angel

Appears to Joseph (Matt. 1:18-25); Mary Visits Elizabeth (Luke 1:39-56); Birth of John the Baptist (Luke 1:57-80); The Birth of Jesus (Luke 2:1-7); The Angels and the Shepherds (Luke 2:8-20); The Circumcision and Presentation in the Temple (Luke 2:21-38); The Wise Men from the East (Matt. 2:1-12).

"My general subject is: The Life and Words of Jesus. At a single service I will often take two or three and possibly four studies. You can readily see that I am covering much more ground than outlined in the Sunday school lessons. The people are exceedingly interested in the studies, and our audiences are increasing."

This outline will no doubt prove suggestive to other ministers who are planning to take up the study of the life of Jesus with their congregations the current year.

Will Give $100.

We have a letter to-day from a brother who says that he will give the last one hundred dollars; whenever we have raised $2,900, he will make it $3,000. This proposition ought to stimulate all friends to respond immediately. We have received since last report $120.85, making a total since the campaign began of $376. We can succeed in the effort being made to raise $3,000, if you, my dear reader, will give something to this work. Read what Brother Muckley says:

NONE MORE WORTHY.

No appeal that has come to my attention in recent years is more worthy of prompt attention than that at Hot Springs, Ark. I am slow to ask my brethren to give in a general way to aid a specific case of church building, because the church extension fund was created for just that purpose. However, there will always be cases that will need specific gifts. Hot Springs is one of these. Our Board of Church Extension can not loan that church the money to buy the lot and put up the building. They must own the lot and then our board can help them build.

I have taken pains and time to investigate the worthiness of this appeal. I am convinced that the brethren everywhere should help pay for this lot for the following reasons:

1. The lot is the best in the city for church purposes and centrally located.

2. We must have this central location or remain unknown as a religious body in this important field.

3. Our brethren in Hot Springs have never had a fair chance for growth in their present out-of-the-way location. Brother Kincaid is supported by mission funds. It would be a waste of his time and money for the church to remain at its present location.

4. Our brethren have paid $2,000 on this $5,000 lot and can not pay the other $3,000 unaided. It would be a shame for a great religious body to lose this lot. Has not the time passed when we will allow such a thing to be done with a mission church property? I have expressed my faith by sending $10. Let two hundred others do the same.

Faithfully,
G. W. MUCKLEY.

An Address to the Brotherhood from the American Christian Missionary Society.

Bro. B. L. Smith having resigned as corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, the acting board has ordered that the work of the society be under the direction of Wm. J. Wright and Geo. B. Ranshaw until a successor to Brother Smith is secured. The committee appointed to commend a man for secretary is now corresponding with one eminently suited to lead this great work, one whose name will at once command the confidence of the entire brotherhood, and we hope to be able to make definite announcement as to his acceptance very soon. In the interim the work of the society will continue to go forward, as all who know the competency and loyalty of Brethren Wright and Ranshaw will not hesitate to believe.

Knowing something of the intelligence and spirit of our preachers throughout the country, I am assured that they recognize the importance of the great work that we are trying to direct, and that their interest in its welfare is being constantly deepened. This confidence in our ministry, together with that in the foresight and fidelity of all our papers, inspires faith and hope in our secretaries, issuing in courage and strength for the accomplishment of their work, for they know that thus supported in the proclamation of home missions there must follow on the part of our churches a practical recognition of indebtedness to the unsaved of America.

Having been identified with the American Christian Missionary Society for many years, I know something of its opportunities, its work, and its victories. I speak not from impulse, but deliberately state a fact when I say that the society never faced so many open doors as to-day. Appeals are coming from every quarter, and their urgency is more than emphasized by the importance of the fields we are invited to enter.

When we are told that by appropriating $300 a most excellent preacher can be sustained in a city of 50,000 people where we have several members but no organization, and on investigation find that by responding to this appeal we can hope for the early realization of a strong church in that city, though not having the money because of obligations already assumed, you can, nevertheless, easily imagine the temptation to make the appointment and thus walk by faith in God and confidence in our brethren. To such cries we must not be deaf, for to hearken not in such cases would reflect discredit upon a great brotherhood and evince indifference to the highest interest of the kingdom of God.

Brethren, the men composing the acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society believe in God and have faith in the wisdom and loyalty of the men and women constituting the Church of Christ. Perceiving, as we know you do, the magnitude and importance of this work which you recognize as yours, I am sure you will rally to its support as never before, and that the year 1906 will prove the most glorious in the society's history.

S. M. COOPER,
Chairman of Acting Board, A. C. M. S.

The Iowa Christian Education Society.

Education Day is nearly here again. May that day in 1906 be memorable for great achievements among the churches—a great day for the various colleges of the Disciples of Christ! Our education society is but one and a half years old here in Iowa, but fair progress has been made. The popular impression that the colleges are business enterprises, requiring certain fees from students, these fees defraying necessary expenses, must be overcome. The thought that our educational institutions should rank on an equality with our missionary enterprises if we would have the latter on a firm basis, is somewhat new to many, and a way must be made for this thought in the hearts of the people. We are trying to get the churches here in Iowa to definitely plan to help recruit the ministerial ranks by choosing good material, raising the $50 a year for scholarship, sending a student and so helping answer the prayer for more laborers in the great world-wide field. The reasonableness and dignity of such a course is drawing on some. Judson, the missionary of immortal name, said if he had one thousand dollars to give away he would endow a college in preference to giving the money to missions, because in the colleges we raise our seed corn. Iowa is a great state for corn. We anticipate a mighty crop of character growth in return for the sowing of the precious seeds of truth here at Drake University.

WHAT DO YOU CARE?
YOU'VE GOT YOUR HEALTH.

Great Natures Do Not Despair at Disappointment—They Look for Something Else to Do.

The broad-gauged man of to-day does not get blue just because things don't always come his way unless there is something the matter with him. If he "falls down" on one proposition he immediately starts to look up another. He always looks forward and keeps on hustling. A man with his health and faculties has plenty of opportunities and the man who gives up or even feels like it has either a small nature or some physical weakness.

Dyspepsia certainly puts the best of men out of condition for work of any kind. You can not blame the dyspeptic for getting blue. The very nature of his disease is most depressing and calculated to deprive him of ambition, energy and hope. There is hope for him, however, certain and sure.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are recognized throughout the length and breadth of the land as the one cure that's safe and sure. Their unbounded popularity—resulting from the thousands and thousands of cures they have effected, prove beyond the shadow of a doubt their greatness as a cure. Wherein lies their greatness? In the very fact that they are Nature's own simple remedy. They do the exact work in exactly the same way that the digestive fluids of the stomach do because they are composed of exactly the same elements and possess the same properties. They relieve the weak and worn out stomach of its burden of digestion and permit it without let or hindrance to rest and grow sound and well. The stomach will get well quick enough in its own natural way if it is let alone. That is what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do. They not only let it alone themselves but make the food taken into the stomach do the same.

You can satisfy yourself of the truth of this statement by putting the food you would eat into a glass jar with sufficient water and one of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. The process of digestion will be taken up and carried out just as the gastric juice and other digestive fluids would do it. Their action is natural and they cause no disturbance in the digestive organs. In fact you forget you have a stomach when they begin to do their work, so mild and natural is the operation. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50c a box.

Institute Work in Kansas City.

The attendance of teachers at the institute held with the First and Forrest Avenue Churches, Kansas City, was good. Much interest was manifested. The pastors, H. M. Barnett and W. F. Richardson, supported me loyally. On Sunday large crowds of their people heard me on behalf of the work. A teachers' training class was organized by the teachers of the First Church. They will begin the elementary course at once. The Forrest Avenue teachers, it is hoped, will add the teacher-training work to that of their teachers' meeting already at work. H. G. Bennett is assisting me and has just held an institute at Sheffield. I helped him one night, and then introduced the work at South Side.

Just home from St. Louis, where arrangements were made to touch every church in the city beginning February 7 at First Church. Teachers' training classes organized in Kansas City by Hardin at South Side, and H. G. Bennett at Sheffield, while Horace Siberell writes of same result at Flat River. He is at Elvins at present and goes to Hematite next. R. B. Havener is pounding away in Shelby county. Bennett will hold institutes the next two weeks at Mayview and Harrisonville. We are organizing for a campaign throughout the state in the spring.

Last Day of Worship in the Central Church, Columbus, Ohio.

The last day of the old year was also the last day of worship in the old Central Church building in the capital of Ohio. More than thirty years ago work was begun by a few faithful brethren and sisters on North High street and in a short time the location at Third and Gay was secured and first a frame chapel was erected, then a brick auditorium. The auditorium had the first "bowled" floor in Columbus. Here on this corner a great work has been done in the years gone by. But the encroachments of business and the noise of traffic rendered the location impracticable for continuing the work much longer. Almost all, children and grown folks, came to all services on the cars. It was the part of wisdom to sell the property and secure a good location in a residence section. The property brought $31,000 cash. We have purchased one of the finest locations in Columbus for a church house. at the corner of Broad and Twenty-first streets. Broad street is to Columbus what Independence boulevard is to Kansas City and Euclid avenue to Cleveland. Within a few weeks we shall begin the erection of what will be one of the handsomest church buildings in town. It will be of stone, with a seating capacity of about 1,000, and with a special view to Bible school work, having no less than eighteen or twenty class rooms, all of which may be thrown into the auditorium. The building complete will cost about $35,000. The lot cost $9,000. We do not expect to dedicate it until every dollar is paid, if that takes five years. The Central has had an honorable history. There have been serious trials and troubles, but out of them all the Lord has brought the church and made it a power for good in the city. It is the "mother" church. Four other congregations have been organized within the last ten or twelve years, and the Central has sent to all these some of her best working and paying members, thus weakening her numerical and financial strength. But we are glad to say that we have closed another year with all bills paid; with 89 members added to our roster; with a net gain of about fifty, and about $800 given to our various missionary enterprises. Here are some of the most faithful and liberal men and women I have ever known. For the time being we go to the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, opposite the State House, for worship.

EASTER GLORY!

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

The Hiram Memorial Church.

The new Hiram church is now under roof and will be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible. The building is a brick veneer with seating capacity of between five and six hundred. A light, airy basement will accommodate the Sunday school. It is intended to make a memorial church of it with memorial windows to many men and women of God who have lived and wrought here, including such eminent persons as President Garfield, President Hinsdale, Principal A. S. Hayden, Miss Almeda A. Booth, Professors H. W. Everest, J. M. Atwater, A. C. Pierson, Hugh McDiarmid and others. The estimated cost is $15,000. The Hiram community has undertaken to provide $10,000 of that sum, leaving $5,000 to be raised among outside friends. Already nearly $4,000 has been contributed by over one hundred people scattered about the country, in sums ranging from $1 to $1,000. A considerable portion of this has come unsolicited, some from far away mission fields. Money or pledges may be sent to Professor E. L. Hall, treasurer, or to the undersigned. What is done should be done quickly.

Basis of Union Between Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples

Dr. George H. Ball, a member of the committee representing the Free Baptists on the subject of union with Baptists and Disciples of Christ, writing on the subject of a doctrinal statement in the "College Record," does not believe that any other statement than the New Testament is necessary. He says: "The New Testament is really the only possible statement of Christian doctrine and practice upon which Christians can agree. Its statements, in substance and form, are unreservedly accepted by Free Baptists, Baptists, and Disciples. We are fully agreed to take its teachings just as they stand without adding to them or subtracting from them, or to any degree changing them. This we can not say of any other document in existence or likely to ever come into existence." Concerning the union of these three bodies, then, upon that basis, Dr. Ball says:

The three Christian bodies now especially interested are agreed:

(1) In taking the New Testament as their only authoritative rule of faith and practice.

(2) That both God and man are active, and work together in beginning and perfecting the Christian life, and in establishing and extending the kingdom of God on earth.

(3) That change of heart, change of state, and change of conduct are included in the transition from a sinful to a Christian life. These steps are variously described in the sacred oracles as a new birth, birth from above, believing in Christ, repentance unto life, receiving Christ, following Christ, confessing Christ, putting on Christ by baptism, obedience of faith, membership in the body of Christ, the church. Salvation in heaven is not the chief and immediate aim in becoming a Christian, but the salvation of men on earth, the universal triumph of "Christ coming in his kingdom" to redeem the world.

(4) That Christian baptism is solely for believers in Christ, and never permissible before faith which changes the heart. Baptism changes the standing, or state, of the believer before the world, just as the oath of allegiance changes the state, or civic, position of the foreigner, and makes him publicly a citizen, but never changes his heart. The specified formula of baptism is given in Matt. 28:19, to be "immersion into the name of the father, and the son, and the Holy Spirit."

We are not entirely agreed in our statements of the relation of baptism to the remission of sins, but we all agree that every person who is born from above and is baptized is also forgiven, and that no one who possesses faith in Christ, which works by love and purifies the heart, will fail of salvation in heaven at last.

(5) We agree that there is one church of Christ which includes all loving and obedient believers, and many local churches, each constituting an independent body, free from external control or dictation by pope, bishop, or organization. The association of churches for fellowship, counsel, and service, is both scriptural and useful.

(6) We agree that the Lord's supper is for the expression of faith, homage, and devotion to the crucified One, and to "proclaim his death until he comes"; that it is wholly declarative, and in no sense curative, or of magical and mystical significance. Wherein we differ as to the frequency of observance and the special order of service and discrimination among Christians entitled to partake, we leave to the judgment and conscience of each of the several local churches.

(7) We are agreed that the family name of the church, whether written or unwritten, whether spoken or unspoken, is "The Church of Christ." May we not relegate the question of using in any form definitive adjectives, or descriptive nouns, to differentiate our people from other Christian or un-Christian bodies, to the local churches or organizations of churches?

(8) We are pained over existing divisions and sinful schisms in the body of Christ. We are intensely anxious to show by action that union in Christ, under his Gospel, in Christian work, without enforced uniformity, is both possible and practicable. We are praying as our Savior prayed, for union, that the world may believe our testimony, and are earnestly seeking to act as we pray. Can we not truthfully and tenderly and sincerely make this declaration to all the churches of Christ and to the world by proceeding without delay to arrange for the organic union of our three Christian bodies, and so lead toward fulfilling the law of Christ?

[If all Baptists and Free Baptists think and feel as Dr. Ball does on this subject, does any one calling himself Disciple of Christ, or Christian, know of any good reason why the union should not be consummated?—Editor.]

LOST EYESIGHT

Through Coffee Drinking

Some people question the statements that coffee hurts the delicate nerves of the body. Personal experiences with thousands prove the general statement true and physicians have records of great numbers of cases that add to the testimony.

The following is from the Rockford, Ill., Register-Gazette:

Dr. William Langhorst of Aurora has been treating one of the queerest cases of lost eyesight ever in history. The patient is O. A. Leach, of Beach county, and in the last four months he has doctored with all of the specialists about the country and has at last returned home with the fact impressed on his mind that his case is incurable.

A portion of the optic nerve has been ruined, rendering his sight so limited that he is unable to see anything before him, but he can see plainly anything at the side of him. There have been but few cases of its kind before and they have been caused by whiskey or tobacco. Leach has never used either, but has been a great coffee drinker and the specialists have decided that the case has been caused by this. Leach stated himself that for several years he had drank three cups of coffee for breakfast, two at noon and one at night. According to the records of the specialists of this country this is the first case ever caused by the use of coffee.

The nerve is ruined beyond aid and his case is incurable. The fact that makes the case a queer one is that the sight forward has been lost and the side sight has been retained. According to the doctor's statement the young man will have to give up coffee or the rest of his sight will follow and the entire nerve be ruined.—Register-Gazette.

Let it be remembered that the eyes may be attacked in one case and the stomach in another, while in others it may be kidneys, heart, bowels or general nervous prostration. The remedy is obvious and should be adopted before too late.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

A Letter from Miss Pope.

Now that we have reached Bilaspur safely, for which we are so thankful I shall give you a brief account of our rrival in Bombay, and our journey rom there here.

The morning of Nov. 25 we steered into the harbor of Bombay. All was excitement. Passengers were hustling about; coolies were coming on board eager to take care of the "Sahibs'" luggage; boxes and trunks were being declared; and letters were being mailed for the afternoon steamer. Casting our eyes upon the shore we saw the natives thick as bees but not so busy. These, with their scant clothing, served as quite a contrast to the well dressed European. Among the throng could be seen the genteel looking Parsee, whom I had described as the man with the patent-leather cap on.

While much of this looked pathetic, the saddest of all were the ugly markings of red and yellow on the foreheads and temples of so many of the Hindus, as this was a sign of the god they worshiped.

After our landing, our party was divided. Miss Mills, who had come to meet us, took charge of Miss Drake and me. We were soon in a gari, which compares somewhat to our American cab, and driving through the streets of Bombay. Just here let me tell you how favorably I was impressed with this city. It has so many beautiful buildings. I never saw so much artistic architecture. Since there is so little need for fires, there was, of course, a freshness about the buildings, too, that is not generally seen in the northern climate.

In the afternoon we went to the native bazar. This was seeing Bombay from another standpoint, for here we did not see wide streets and magnificent buildings. The streets were narrow, and the shops small. These shops have no windows, and the only light they have is that which comes from the open front. Here the shopkeeper sits on a mat, beckoning and entreating you to buy, each claiming the superiority of his goods. It takes a great deal of tact to deal with these people, which Miss Mills possesses to the fullest degree. Upon entering the bazar, you are at once surrounded by a half dozen or more coolies, who carry large, flat baskets on their heads, in which they put your bundles, providing you employ one. This, however, is the best thing to do, for then you get rid of the rest.

On Sunday morning we went to the Bowen Methodist Church, where we heard Dr. Johnson, of New York. He preached a beautiful and simple sermon. The theme was, "I thirst." As this was a day set apart for prayer for all India, and since it was my first Lord's day in India, the service impressed me very much.

In the afternoon we spent a few hours in Victoria Gardens, which is considered a very beautiful park. Here we saw many varieties of the palm tree, also the banana, and many others that we were not acquainted with.

On Monday morning we did some shopping in the Australian stores, went to the market to purchase some fruit, where we had some more experience with the coolies, and boarded the train for Bilaspur, from the Victoria terminus. Since we had to pass through this building in such a hurry, I did not have time to compare it with our Union Station, however, I could not help noticing the massive marble pillars.

Now, a little of India's scenery between Bombay and Bilaspur. After leaving Bombay we were soon in the range of the Ghauts. These, to me, were rather unattractive, because of their barrenness and the large amount of exposed black rock. Towards evening we reached the Santpoors. These we saw at a distance and, since that always "lends enchantment," they looked much prettier. What we saw of them formed an almost unbroken chain. With their peculiar and regular shaped peaks, it seemed as if they had been chiseld so. The next morning we were in the foot-hills of the Vindhya mountains. These, with their jungle and scrubby-looking trees, resembled our own Ozarks somewhat.

After passing these, we reached the plains of our own district. With all that I had been told of the plains of India, I had formed a very dark picture of them but, much to my surprise, I found them quite the contrary. Here I saw trees in abundance, with fine, heavy foliage, and wide-spreading branches. Small wheat fields could be seen here and there, also other fields of produce that I was not acquainted with. The rice had been cut, what little there was of it, for it was almost a complete failure this year. This I was sorry to learn, since it will mean, and is already meaning, much suffering.

Another beauty of India is its railway stations. They are all adorned with vines, bushes and potted plants, of which many are now in bloom.

At four P. M. we reached Bilaspur, where we were met by Mr. Adams and Miss Boyd, who gave us a hearty welcome. We were soon off in the tonga, which is not at all an uninviting-looking vehicle. This particular one was built of teak, a very hard wood, was nicely polished, and its seats being cushioned and covered with the purest of white linen, looked quite attractive. Even the white bullocks corresponded.

Of the bungalow I need say but little, since you are well acquainted with its picture. However, the picture can not produce the natural coloring and fragrance of the many plants and flowers. Nor can you see and feel the beautiful atmosphere that prevails in and around it. On entering the drawing room, the word "Welcome," which was tacked on a screen in large letters of gilt, attracted our eyes. This had been done by the orphanage girls.

The following morning, Mrs. Lohr took me through the orphanage. Here I saw some of the girls at their needlework, others cleaning and hulling rice, some cooking, while on the front veranda two classes were being conducted, one in drawing and the other in geometry. In the afternoon Miss Boyd conducted us through the hospital compound, where, as soon as Dr. Smith arrives, I shall take up my abode.

On our return we stopped at the church, where Christian Endeavor was being held. Although I could not understand their songs, prayers and talks, I waa greatly benefited by the earnestness and zeal that was manifested. Miss Drake and I were introduced, and, through Mrs. Adams' interpretation, we told them how glad we were to be with them, and how much they are loved by our people at home.

Besides the missionaries in our own station, I have already met a few from other stations—Mr. M. E. Gordon and Mr. and Mrs. Madsen and children. They came to spend Thanksgiving with us.

We had a real, American dinner, after which we had a simple and informal service, where each told of the blessings received from God in the past year, and how thankful they were. Although I spent this Thanksgiving so far from the land where it was instituted, it was the sweetest I have ever experienced.

Pray that I may have many such in India.

Kentucky Missions.

W. J. Dodge secured $100 for the Jackson, Breathitt county, house of worship, and Hon. O. H. Pollard, one of the members, secured a like sum for the same purpose.——J. P. Miller, in Pike county, had eleven additions in December. This closes his engagement with the state board. He has been hindered much by sickness.——L. B. Haskins, at Erlanger half time, had one added. ——Earl B. Barr at Bromley, reports improvements being made on house of worship, new pews being one of the features. The house will be re-opened on the third Sunday in February.——Edward B. Richey is getting the work in South Louisville well in hand. Audiences are growing; sixteen added; $310 pledged for new house of worship. Lot costing over $700 has been paid for and there is every reason to hope for a large measure of success in this large and needy field.——A dozen additions constitute a part of the results of twenty days' work by G. W. Adkins in Carter county.——H. L. Morgan in Clay and Laurel counties had fifteen additions, and the location of eight preachers represents some of the results of his efforts; $216 pledged for the local work. ——The monthly visit of T. S. Buckingham to Edmonton resulted in one addition. He ought to continue there; but can not without the help of the board.——D. C. McCallum closes his work at Irvine. He has been very useful there, and is held in very high esteem by the people. J. H. Stambaugh has been invited to take the work; but his acceptance has not yet been received.——L. N. Early was at Chatham one Sunday. Part of debt on house was paid and prospects are good. ——James E. Thomas reports one addition at Beattyville; $160 raised on debt on house. He has declined a tempting offer for the next six months, that he may continue with this place as long as he remains in this country. He returns to Australia in June. ——Edgar C. Riley reports that the Belleview, Boone county, work is out of debt. One added during December.——William Lowen preached one Sunday per month during the year at High Bridge, for which we have contributed. He does not think that he has accomplished very much. In some meetings held by him there were 85 added; but none at High Bridge.

Texas.

Charles O. Barton has resigned the presidency of the Panhandle Christian College, much to the regret of his associates. A. C. Elliott, of Texas Christian University, has accepted the position and the school continues to prosper. There is a great field with this school as the educational center. Let every loyal minister and church make an offering for some Christian school. We sincerely pray that Education day will be generally and generously observed in Texas January 21. The Texas mission offering in November and December, through the corresponding secretary's office, was $2,253, a gain of $253 over those months last year. We are enlarging the mission work in Texas. S. D. Perkinson, pastor at Temple, and one of our Texas preachers from Kentucky, via Arkansas, who is much beloved for his safe and substantial work, has been engaged as a state evangelist.

E. J. Bradley, late pastor at Smithville, is now engaged as state evangelist. He is a young man of ability and promise and our board feels that we have been fortunate in securing two such additional workers as Perkinson and Bradley.

John W. Marshall and wife, who have recently held successful meetings at Mattoon and Normal, Ill., have been secured for our spring and summer campaign. We will hold camp meetings at Leaday and Hereford; also city campaigns in Dallas and Houston.

James T. McKissick, now taking a course in Harvard, will return to Texas and probably work for our mission board during our protracted meeting season.

Vernon Harrington and wife are to hold a meeting at Port Arthur, beginning in this month. Virgil L. Graves will continue successful work in east Texas. So you can see that Texas workers intend to make an earnest effort to do their part toward the centennial campaign as suggested by our national convention.

G. T. Black is now with the church at Quanah, where a much needed work can be done. A larger percentage of our Texas churches are now supporting regular ministers than ever before. It was a rare pleasure to have in our home for short visits recently Dean Hiram Van Kirk, Charles A. Young, Fredrick F. Grim and Brother Famuliner. We had hoped also to catch Paul Moore as he passed through Texas but Brother Grim lured him away to the home of the Leaday Christian settlement.

For the new year we sincerely and heartily wish the whole CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family the largest measure of success and happiness. J. C. MASON.

Ohio.

It is now Governor Pattison! The inauguration was a nonpartisan affair, and one of the most elaborate ever held in Ohio. In his message he asks for the enactment of the original Brannock bill and also pleads for the strict enforcement of Sunday laws. Already a strong anti-cigarette bill, an anti railroad-pass bill, a two-cent-a-mile bill and two temperance bills have gone into the hopper. Ohio will clean up this year.

Did you read carefully the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST? It was a fine number and full of good things. The Ohio man wants to subscribe his name also to the "Open Letter to B. L. Smith," by Chas. S. Medbury. The fact is, if it were passed around almost everybody would sign it. Then, too, the letter of W. A. Haynes, "From the Denominations," ought to be heartily endorsed. Will THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST take the lead in this much needed reform?

The new "meetin' house" at Linden Heights, Columbus, was dedicated to the service of God, Sunday, January 14. L. A. Warren has been the power behind the throne in this enterprise.

The daily press says the Central Church in Columbus has finally selected a location at the corner of Broad and 21st streets. If this is true, it is, in the judgment of this scribe, a very poor selection.

H. H. Clark will become preacher for the church at Salem, recently vacated by Walter Mansel, who went to Fourth Avenue, Columbus.

J. J. Tisdall, of Perry, is helping A. Baker and the Mount Victory Church in a meeting this month, and will in February assist A. J. Sever at Mentor.

Edgar D. Jones was compelled to postpone his meeting at Franklin Avenue, Cleveland, an account of an attack of quinsy.

I. J. Cahill, of Dayton, preached at the weekly vesper service at Hiram, Tuesday, Jan. 9.

A Brother Hamilton from Pennsylvania has taken the work at Unionport and is at it.

Roy Brown has been having a short meeting at Bellefontaine that has resulted in several conversions.

A rally in the interest of foreign missions will be held at Ashtabula on Jan. 26 and at Cleveland on Jan. 29. It is already time to enlist for the $300,000 campaign.

J. V. Updike will hold a meeting at the old church in Marion, in February.

H. W. Milner has come from Indiana to take M. L. Buckley's place at Harrison. He will find a fine lot of people at Harrison who are loyal, faithful and patient. The Ohio man tried their patience for over two years at one time.

C. A. McDonald reports sixty New Year calls and all departments of the Fourth Church at Akron in a flourishing condition. Brother McDonald is an untiring worker. He is also taking post graduate work in Buchtel College.

The Franklin Avenue Church in Columbus recently had a mortgage burning and annual social given by the men of the church. The next move now will be a new building. The purpose is to sell the present property and build on an entirely new location in the neighborhood.

W. A. Bellamy, of Grand Rapids, Mich., is doing the preaching in a meeting at Aetna Street, Cleveland, where Franklin Butchard is doing a very substantial work.

The church at Elyria will soon install a new pipe organ. John P. Sala seems to be a permanent fixture there, in which we all rejoice.

Do you believe in Christian union? Are you sure, beyond all doubt, that you know all about the how of the question? If you do so feel, we want to commend to you the new book of Amos R. Wells, "That They All May be One." Every preacher among us ought to read that book. Send a dollar bill to the Christian Publishing Company and get it. It has led me to attempt a line of actual union that will be reported later as to success or failure. Read Wells' book.

How to Make Money

I have just learned how to make money real fast and easy too. I have not made less than $56 a week since I began, and one week I made $118. Isn't that grand? I am saving my money too and do not lose a day. I am selling medicated gloves; they are easy to sell, being so cheap, only 30 cents a pair and they make the hands so nice and soft and are so durable It is a picnic selling gloves, you do not have to talk at all; people want them as soon as they see them, and many buy half a dozen pairs. Write to the Common Sense Mfg. Co., St. Louis, Mo., Box 10, and they will start you and tell you how to sell either at home or by canvassing. I have several friends selling gloves and all doing fine. If you want to make $5 to $10 a day, try the glove business; you cannot fail, as the gloves sell themselves. I am so proud of my success that I cannot keep still about it.

MISS L. A. C.

HOME MISSIONS IN OUR CITIES.—Luke 19:41-48.

"Home" and "foreign" missions are distinctions purely geographical. No differences between them in matters of heroism or scriptural authority, peril or romance, arduousness endured or consecration required, results attained or divine commendation, are noticeable.

The conquest of the world for Christ was to begin with Jerusalem. Your home city is your Jerusalem. If ye love not the unsaved whom ye can see therein, how can ye love the unsaved in India and Africa whom ye have not seen! There first make proof of your evangelical zeal and then a way will be made for you to Samaria and the uttermost parts of the earth.

One may be greatly blessed through attendance on the "Central Church," with its eloquent preacher, famous choir, and auditory composed of rich and cultured people, but we believe greater treasures are in heaven awaiting those who climb up into our mission halls, with their uncarpeted floors and general lack of conveniences, and try to melt the hearts of the miscellaneous audience into fervent love for the precious Son of God and help them to form characters that will be bright trophies of his earthly mission.

Think not that Jesus who so loved Jerusalem that he wept on seeing it on destruction bent is unconcerned about the modern city. He knows the drift and dangers, the easily besetting sin and the things that make for the peace of American cities as well as those of Tyre and Sidon, Jerusalem and Jericho, and he would gather them unto himself as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings. In all heaven will be no brighter stars than those adorning the crowns of men and women who have worn out their lives trying to make our teeming cities fortresses of our God.

Though our urban population is much smaller than our rural, yet because the city press disseminates city thought more thoroughly in the country than the rural papers do country sentiments in the city, our cities have acquired a greatly preponderating influence and prestige in the commonwealth, and the morals and spirituality of the state will never be much better or worse than standards obtaining in our cities. Therefore, while we should neglect no opportunity of exalting Christ anywhere we should make special efforts to coronate him as Lord of all our cities, for as they go, so goes the nation.

Our American cities afford exceptional facilities for preaching the Gospel to men of many tribes and tongues. In New York are more Jews than in Jerusalem; more sons of Erin than in Dublin; more Germans than in any other city save Berlin, and nearly as many Italians as in any other city save Rome. A missionary tour on a street car may not be so picturesque as one involving ships and camels, but may be as effective in saving precious souls and receive as high encomia from heaven. Let none of us feel deprived of missionary opportunities who can trolley into the great sodden unevangelized masses of our foreign populations.

In apostolic days there was but one church of Christ in Jerusalem, though the thousands [of disciples there may have had numerous assembly rooms. If that principle were to obtain now, a great impetus would at once be given city missions. We have so emphasized congregational independence we have almost destroyed that sweet fraternity that should prevail among our own Churches in the city, and secure for each the help of all others through the crises in its life. Let our city Endeavor Societies make one of their special works for 1906 the development of greater interest in one another's welfare on the part of all churches of Christ in the city. Churches, like individuals, should weep with those that weep and rejoice with those that do rejoice.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.—Mark 1:1-11.

Memory Verses, 10, 11.

Golden Text.—Prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only.—1 Sam. 7:3.

The first great division of the life of Jesus included the thirty years of private life and closed with the first mention of him as a mature man at the time of John the Baptist's ministry. The second great division might be called the Prelude to the Public Ministry. It begins with the preaching of John the Fore-runnner and includes certain events in Judea and others in Galilee, as follows:

1. John's Ministry and the Baptism of Jesus.
2. The Temptation.
3. John's Testimony (John 1:19-34).
4. The First Disciples (John 1:35-51).
5. The First Miracle (John 2:1-12).

The first two of the above are recorded by all three of the Synoptics and not by John. The last three are given by John alone.

Note the abrupt beginning of Mark's gospel, without prelude or introduction. There is no account of the birth and infancy as in Matthew and Luke, and no theological introduction as in John. Note, also, by comparing the verses of the lesson with the parallel accounts in Matt. 3:1-17 and Luke 3:1-22, the remarkable similiarity of the three records, even to words and phrases. Evidently they were dependent upon one another or were drawn from a common source.

(Every student of the life of Christ should have for constant reference a Harmony of the Gospels, giving in parallel columns the records of the four evangelists, with corresponding passages opposite each other, and presenting, so far as possible, a chronological story of the life of Jesus embodying all the data that have come down to us. The Harmony, by Stevens and Burton, is the most useful.)

John the Baptist was, by character, mission and method, closely alied to the Old Testament prophets. He was a preacher of righteousness. He denounced sin and proclaimed the imminence of the day of punishment. He announced the coming of a new regime based not upon respectability and ceremonial correctness, but upon practical morality and a real spiritual relation to God. All of these elements were found in the preaching of the early prophets. Besides, John's sturdy independence, his unconventional habits and attire, and the direct and searching quality of his address, all suggest a kinship to the prophets.

There was nothing new about the preaching of repentance. As to the ordinance which he used, the "baptism of repentance," it is possible, though scarcely certain, that an ordinance of similar form had been practiced by the Jews before John. If this is the case, John put new meaning into it by making it the symbol of repentance in view of a new order of things which was immediately to be established by the coming Messiah.

In his feeling that a personal Messiah was very soon to appear, we see John's chief superiority to his prophetic predecessors, whose messianic anticipations were for the most part (of course not altogether) general and impersonal and pointing to the deliverance of a purified Israel. The appearance of the Messiah meant for John the establishment of religion on a basis of moral and spiritual fitness, and the abrogation of any special hereditary privilege for the children of Abraham as such. The part which the Messiah should play in this new order was not specified by John, and he called men not to allegiance to this personal Messiah, but to repentance and the acceptance of these principles. (Read the fuller account of John's preaching as given in Luke 3:1-18.)

John's baptism had therefore a double significance for those who accepted it: First, it stood for repentance for past sins and the remission of those sins. Second, it gave evidence of an acceptance of this new regime in which moral and spiritual values, rather than Abraham's descent, or ritual performance, were to be the basis.

Why was Jesus baptized? As a sign of repentance, or for remission of sins? Certainly not. To him only the second of the above meanings applied, but that would apply to him as well as to any applicant for John's baptism. Having no sins he had no need of repentance. But it was right that he should give adherence to the new regime of spiritual religion. This is doubtless what Jesus meant when he said, in reply to John's objection, "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." It is inconceivable that one whose personal religious nature was so deep and whose spiritual experiences were so rich and full of meaning, should have gone through a meaningless form merely for the sake of setting an edifying example to others. Such an empty and insincere observance of an ordinance is in reality the worst kind of example. We must believe that his baptism meant something real and profound to Jesus. It meant a definite and complete dedication of himself to the new regime of which he was soon (perhaps he himself did not yet know how soon or how completely) to become the leader.

Of Baby's Torturing, Disfiguring Humor Use Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment.

Every child born into the world with an inherited tendency to torturing, disfiguring humors of the skin and scalp becomes an object of the most tender solicitude, not only because of its suffering, but because of the dreadful fear that the disfiguration is to be lifelong and mar its future happiness and prosperity. Hence it becomes the duty of mothers of such afflicted children to acquaint themselves with the best, the purest, and most effective treatment available, viz.: warm baths with Cuticura Soap, and gentle anointings with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure. Cures made in childhood are in most cases speedy, permanent, and economical.

THE CHURCH AND A "SQUARE DEAL FOR EVERY MAN."—Matt. 7:12; Isa. 5:8, 11:1-5; Jas. 2:1-13.

In the sacred vocabulary is a better term than "square deal"; it is love. He who gave it new courage and worth is higher too than the author of the former. "As I have loved you so ought ye to love one another."

Our Father's building the church for the rescue of us who could not save ourselves is our warrant for the establishment of homes, hospitals, and asylums for those dependent hosts who would also perish but for provision made for them through gratitude to God. Since God is their God and protector, the Gospel of the "square deal" requires us to "abound in this grace also" who look forward to a home in heaven.

Thackeray, in Vanity Fair, represents its devotees on one rung of the social ladder kissing the feet of those above them, but kicking and snarling at those below. An application of the law of the "square deal" may involve the pulling down of those above, but it surely requires the lifting up of all below. It will also annihilate all those social distinctions based on cash rather than character, and ancestry rather than present worth to church and society.

"Freely ye have received, freely give," means we must long bear with the erring and quickly forgive the penitent transgressor, and sacrifice much for the evangelization of the race; take into account the heredity, environment and personality of those with whom we have to do; and accept every gift from God as a renewed obligation to serve whom we may help—our scriptural neighbor and his ambassador.

The prophet pronounces a woe upon those who "join house to house and that lay field to field," that is, upon all who, for the sake of arrogating to themselves wealth and consequence, deprive others of opportunities of fairly providing for themselves and loved ones. The moral obliquity of this has at last been seen by some practitioners of the crime. Carnegie, the ironmaster, has said, "It is a shame to be rich." Soon it will appear a shame to amass riches to the injury of a brother.

Heathenism's noblest conception of brotherly love found expression in the Confucian dictum, "Whatsoever ye would not that others should do unto you, do ye not unto others." "Non-interference with the rights of others" is the highest aim of civil law. Are these principles beautiful in comparison with the practices of savagery and barbarism? At best it is only the superior beauty of an icicle of clearer water over one from dripping sewerage. How cold and ineffectual both are in comparison with the Savior's "all things therefore whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye unto them"!

The Savior's insistence on the "square deal" is enshrined in this doctrine: "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift beside the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." The significance of this doctrine will yet be grasped by rulers of counting rooms and exchanges, and revolutionize prevalent business methods. And between petty oppressors of shops and fields, and their altars will appear the white faces of those they have wronged mutely asking and receiving restitution. This verse will yet emancipate the race.

A New Thing.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST recently a statement is made by the Editor (or somebody who seems to know) that the Baptists up north, or west, or somewhere beyond Mason and Dixon's line, have all given up their "close communion," and other "differences," and become one people.

This is a new thing to us out here in the rural regions of the "Old North state." We have quite a number of Baptists of many "creeds" about us, and it is possible that those Baptists, north, who are no longer "close communionists" (as it is called) are of a kind that are unknown here and hereabout, or anywhere, except in the cold latitudes of the north; and it may be that the climate there has somewhat to do with their putting aside their "differences," and becoming "one people."

At all events, we are inclined to think there is some mistake about the Baptists, in any section of the country, giving up their "close baptism" (for that is what it really is) and "letting down the gap" for all sorts, and every kind, of loose Arminianists to come in and be "Hail, fellows, well met," with the regular New Testament, first church Baptists of our Lord Jesus Christ; one of which kind this scribe humbly claims to be.

Dunn, N. C. W. B. HARRELL.

[We were quite well aware in publishing the statement concerning the agreement of the Baptists of the north to no longer make the matter of open or close communion a test of fellowship, but to allow each local church to exercise its liberty on this question, that it did not apply to the Baptists of the south. Would that it did! We can hardly understand how Baptists, who are staunch defenders of liberty and of the independence of the local church, should not be willing to allow each congregation to decide such questions for itself. The practice of refusing the privilege of the communion table to all except those of our own "faith and order," is a little more than "close baptism," for Disciples of Christ, no less than Pedobaptists, are ruled out by the "close communion" theory. Our good brother will pardon us for smiling at his introduction of the archaic term of "Arminianists," as recalling an ancient discussion which no longer troubles the minds of the great mass of his own brethren, nor of the rest of the religious world of to-day. Surely he must live in a protected nook where the tides of modern thought do not sweep through to molest the ideas of a former time.—EDITOR.]

Reply to Brother Garrison.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

When I penned my "open letter" to you, which you printed in the December 28 issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, I thought I would say no more upon the question at this time, but since reading your remarks, I am constrained to make a short response to your comments.

1. You think that my questions to the preachers at our annual ministerial meeting "were very misleading," since you say, "Every life of obedience to God's commands involves prayer for the Spirit." But do you know this to be true? Did you ever see this doctrine taught in the Scriptures—particularly since the "New Covenant" was given and the Gospel of salvation in Christ Jesus was proclaimed to mankind? True Jesus in his personal ministry justifies his disciples in praying for the Spirit, intimates that it was entirely proper for them to pray for the Spirit (Luke 11:13).

But as you well know Christ lived and died under the "Old Covenant," and that he did not a few things and taught his disciples to do at least a few things which would not be proper for us to do to-day. The kingdom was "at hand" and he early taught his disciples to pray for it "to come." The coming of the kingdom involved the coming of the Spirit—their coming was simultaneous. Since reading your book on the Holy Spirit I feel confident you will not question this position. Since the coming of the kingdom involved the coming of the Spirit, to pray for the coming of the kingdom involved prayer for the Spirit. See Luke 11:3 and verse 13, together with the context.

Jesus was soon to leave the earth and his disciples, but in his stead they were to have a kingdom and the Spirit. Their future, temporally and eternally depended upon the coming and their receiving this kingdom and Spirit. As neither the kingdom nor the Spirit had come to them, and inasmuch as Christ made prayer a condition of their receiving the kingdom and the Spirit, it was entirely proper that they should pray for the kingdom and the Spirit.

I can see no more reason why we should "pray for the Spirit," because Christ taught his disciples to do so in Luke 11:13, than that we should pray "for the kingdom to come," because Christ taught his disciples to do so in Luke 11:3. And if the kingdom has come and I have received it, and the Spirit has come and I have received him, then I am not in the same attitude toward either the kingdom or the Spirit that the disciples were in while Christ was with them. And if such is my attitude—if I have received the kingdom and the Spirit, then I see no reason why I should "pray for either the kingdom or the Spirit." But having received the kingdom, and having received the Spirit when I did receive the kingdom, and seeing that he "dwells" in me to "lead," "guide," "comfort," to "bear fruit in me," etc., I see no reason why I should not be able to live a "life of obedience to God's commands" without being "involved" in the necessity of "praying for the Spirit."

Make It Plain.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Being a reader of your paper for the last year, and reading the discussion going on between you and Mr. McGarvey, as regards praying for the Holy Spirit, I must say that neither of you makes the matter very plain to my mind. I will ask you the following question, by answering which the matter may be clearer to me: If a man believes in the Lord Jesus Christ with all his heart, confesses him before men, and is buried with him in baptism, to rise and walk a new life, following the teachings of Christ and his apostles, as revealed in the New Testament, as near as he can, adding the Christian graces mentioned by Peter, does such an one need to pray for the Holy Spirit? P. E. I.

[Every obedient believer who, through faith, surrenders himself to Christ in the New Testament way, has the promise of "the gift of the Holy Spirit." He has not come to this possession, however, without earnest longing and prayer, nor will he cease to pray for the Holy Spirit in larger measure as he feels his need to abound more and more in the knowledge of Christ and in the fruit of the Spirit. The misconception on which much of the criticism about praying for the Holy Spirit is based is that all Christians are exactly alike, have received the same degree of spiritual blessings, the same measure of the Spirit, and this to such a degree that they need not pray for any increase. Our own observation ought to teach us that such is not the case. Church members vary widely in the measure of their Christian character and godliness, and none of them has attained to such perfection of life that he need not to pray to be "filled with the Holy Spirit" and with "all the fullness of God." Is this plain enough for our brother to understand?—EDITOR.]

JONES.

After a long term of failing health, Miss Allene Jones, of this place, died Sunday, January 7. She was a daughter of Brother and Sister A. B. Jones. She was known to many readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Hers was a spirit of rare excellence. Her death was a triumph of faith. The entire church will sympathize with Brother and Sister Jones over the death of the daughter who was, indeed, the light of their home. Miss Allene was a member of the Christian church, and died in the full assurance of faith.

TATE.

George W. Tate, of West Salem, Ill., son of William and Roda A. (Selby) Tate, was born in Decatur county, Ind., May 24, 1841, and died in West Salem, Ill., Dec. 5, 1905. He was, therefore, 64 years, six months and eleven days old at the time of his death. In his younger days Brother Tate followed school teaching until he had taught twenty terms, three in Indiana and seventeen in Jasper county, Illinois. He was baptized into the "Christian Connection" church by William Markwell, of Greenup, Ill., in 1858; and later came into the Christian church. Soon after his conversion he became an active worker in the church, and in 1873, was ordained to the ministry by William Read and J. C. T. Hall in the Wolf Creek congregation in Jasper county, Ill. From the very beginning of his ministry his motto was: "I am set for the defense of the word" (Phil. 1:17). He held five or six public debates. But in the latter part of his ministry he became more interested in evangelistic and pastoral work. He never claimed any very large tact as an evangelist, yet he held some very successful meetings, and was regarded as a good protracted meeting man. While his evangelistic work has been of a limited kind, yet in the radius of his field we have had but few, if any, preachers in southern Illinois who have done as good work as he. As a pastor, he was above the average minister in several very essential respects. He always secured the confidence, love and respect of not only his brethren, but of the entire community. His demeanor was always such that his name soon became a household word wherever he took a pastorate. He was closely identified with all our church and missionary enterprises both at home and abroad. He baptized as many candidates, preached as many funeral sermons and married as many couples as any preacher possibly in southern Illinois. His last public work was at Sailor Springs where he was conducting a meeting when the hand of affliction fell upon him and he was compelled to return to his home where he died just one week later. The immediate cause of his death was pneumonia. A funeral service was held in the Christian church in West Salem, conducted by the writer, assisted by Brother Morrell, of Olney, Brother Honey, of West Liberty, and Bro. J. E. Couch, of Friendsville. His remains were then taken to Bogota, Ill., where another funeral service was conducted by Brother C. M. Freeman and Fields to another large and sympathizing congregation. After this his body was laid away to rest beside the bodies of his loved ones in the old family graveyard.

TIBBS.

The departure of W. T. Tibbs at Mt. Sterling, Ky., demands more than a passing notice. No man among our preachers surpassed him in humility and but few equaled him in scholarly attainments. Early in the sixties he started to gratify his thirst for knowledge by a trip to the Holy Land, but an incident in New York city—a child at night in a garbage barrel hunting for food—changed his purpose and he went to work in the slums, spending all his means in the work and supporting himself by shorthand court reports for New York dailies. During this time he worked at the Five Points mission, preaching to the sailors at one o'clock at night. It was after one of these services that a highwayman, knife in hand, attacked him on a dark street. But without a tremor Tibbs said, "You've got the wrong man, haven't you?" And the thief left him and ran away. From here he went to evangelizing in the Cumberland mountains of Kentucky, where he did a great work, which endures. He went to Mt. Sterling, Ky., January, 1874, and preached for nine years. Here he married Miss Lucy Cassidy in 1877—making that little city his permanent home. From here he went to St. Louis where he was minister for the First Church, but, his health failing, he returned to Mt. Sterling. The church raised $300 to aid him in a missionary effort at Pomona, Cal. The history of the church he organized there reads like a fairy tale. Returning to Mt. Sterling with broken health he continued to preach from time to time, and was particularly efficient in the Bible class and in the work of the eldership. His wife preceded him home in July, 1902. Brother Tibbs was a man of the strongest faith. His love of the Master was only equaled by his faith in God. His was a faith that knew no fear and never a doubt. To him the statement that "all things work together for good" to God's children was a veritable life-boat. There was no storm of life in which he did not find this a safe and secure refuge. Some of his friends were unable to grasp the full measure of his faith and judged him harshly, but to those who were permitted to enter the inner sanctuary of his great soul and loving heart, it was given to know that he walked with God. No dispensation of God's providence ever brought a doubt—a shadow of doubt—into his mind. His faith was complete—full, unfaltering, vital, loving. He was gifted with the most wonderful descriptive powers. His knowledge was fortified by wisdom, even as his life was dominated by faith and love. It was under his ministry that Bro W. T. Moore held the great meeting at which 103 were added to the church—a remarkable ingathering for the time—and the address of Brother Moore to the converts when he extended the right hand of fellowship on behalf of the church, Brother Tibbs being sick at the time, is one of the classics of the Mt. Sterling church. Cold facts, carefully stated, make history, but love should write the lives of God's saints. I knew Brother Tibbs for thirty-one years intimately. The golden gems of faith and love I gathered from his life have cheered many saints out on the Pacific coast in California and Washington as well as in Kentucky and Missouri. He has entered into that rest which remains for the people of God.

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Chapter I.

"Raymund," said Mrs. Revore in the weak voice that had grown habitual, "do you see anything of Rhoda?"

Raymund stood at the window, looking down into the village street. It was raining and the droning in the waterpipes sounded dismally in their ears. "I don't see anybody," said Raymund, glancing toward the invalid's bed, then resuming his watch. "But she hasn't had time, yet. You know Mr. Walker's store is on the other side of the court house."

"I wish she could be here, now," sighed his mother. "I feel stronger than I have felt for a week. I want to talk to you both awhile."

Mrs. Revore looked fondly at the slight form standing at the window. She was wasted away by a year's confinement to her bed. The relentless grasp of disease had pinched her face and driven the vigorous blood from her limbs. Her eyes were still large and beautiful, but they showed from her pallid face like lights swinging over some scene of wreckage, calling attention to what had been and was no more to be.

Raymund was a boy of twelve. He did not look very strong, but there was something in his attitude and in the shape of his body and limbs that suggested elegance, in spite of the fact that he had always breathed an atmosphere akin to poverty. Perhaps his air of distinction was imparted by the light silken hair which gleamed against the dreary outdoor scene in the light of a shaded lamp. His eyes, still eagerly scanning the dripping street, were of a deep blue, very like those that watched him from the bed.

Not many minutes had elapsed when his keen eyes discerned a form at the other end of the sidewalk, rapidly advancing under the protection of a large green umbrella. The pedestrian was obviously embarrassed by the umbrella on account of several brown paper bundles which interfered with the handle. The awning, out of all proportion to the one who bore it, bobbed this way and that like a balloon tugging at its moorings. "Here she comes, mother!" Raymund exclaimed joyfully. "She got the things too!"

"As soon as she has come into the house, pull down the blind," said Mrs. Revore. "You needn't call her, for you and I know she will come as soon as she can." The invalid smiled at Raymund, then cast another smiling glance toward the door. Presently it opened, and a girl of Raymund's age entered the room. She had paused outside to put away the umbrella and to dispose of her packages. She appeared neat and dry and her face showed a tender solicitude not usual in one so young.

"How have you been, mother?" she asked, going to the bed and smoothing the pillow. "My hand is cold." She held her hands behind her, and, stooping down, kissed the hot, dry brow. Raymund pulled down the blind. He inquired, "Did you get all the things?"

"Yes, everything. Mr. Walker was so nice. He asked how you were, and threw in a little extra surprise. Could you eat anything now, mother? Just as soon as you feel like it, I will go down and make the fire."

"Raymund is hungry, now," said Mrs. Revore intuitively. "But before you go, little cook, I want to have a talk with you and Raymund."

"Do you think you ought to talk, mother? You know Dr. Browast thinks you ought to rest your lungs every minute you can." Rhoda was so small and childlike, with her blue eyes and light hair, her short dress, her two blue-ribboned braids, that her air of grave deliberation amused Mrs. Revore; but the mother gave no sign of that. Instead she said, with answering gravity, "Rhoda, do you realize that you look very much like your brother?"

Rhoda smiled at Raymund and said, "Twins ought to look alike, oughtn't they, mother?"

"Of course they ought, dear. Now, my very darling twins, come and sit near me. I am full of talk, to-night, and I feel stronger than I have felt for at least a week. Something seems to tell me that I may never be quite this strong again. No, you mustn't talk, Rhoda; I am to do that. And you mustn't mind, either of you, if I say that I do not think I will ever get well again, and that I think I may not be alive many more days."

"Oh, mother!" cried Raymund and Rhoda in a breath. Raymund added eagerly, "Let me run for Dr. Browast. He will make you better. You always feel better just to see him come into the room!"

"No, dear. There is nothing that Dr. Browast can do for me. But both of you can help me very much. Do you not want to help your poor, burdensome mother?"

"But you are never burdensome," Rhoda interposed reproachfully. "I didn't think you would have said that, did you, Raymund?"

"No, I didn't!" cried Raymund. "But what can we do to help you?"

"You can listen to every word I say, and that will help me most of all." Mrs. Revore kissed both, then took a hand of each, and held them while she continued. "Of course one never knows when one will die, but if I do leave you in a few days, you must remember that I go to join your dear father whom you can hardly remember."

"But I remember him!" Rhoda declared, nodding to emphasize her words. "He doesn't need you as we do, mother; he is in heaven where he is always happy. We couldn't do without you—could we, Raymund?"

"Raymund will take care of you. He will soon be a man, and he will make his way in the world. You know Raymund means 'Protector,' and Rhoda means a 'Rose.' You are to stay my sweet, pure, fragrant rose."

"And you must stay to wear me on your heart," said Rhoda, throwing her arms about the wasted form.

Raymund spoke up gravely, "Rhoda thinks of such pretty things to say! Maybe she will be a great poet like Longfellow. I know she can be if she wants to. I never think of thoughts like hers. If she's a rose, I guess I'm a potato—something you wouldn't want to keep in a vase, but useful too, isn't it, Rhoda?"

"You are something we couldn't live without," Rhoda said, generously; "but I'll not be calling you a potato."

Mrs. Revore smiled faintly at them—they made a charming picture in the plain bed room; their big blue eyes and their silken hair seemed to suggest that their common, patched clothes were assumed as disguises, and that in reality they were a little prince and princess. She resumed in a lowered tone: "My dear children, there is a secret in the past, and it is a secret that might or might not concern you both. I do not know if it need ever trouble you. I hope not."

"So do I," said Rhoda, "for I do not like secrets. I never liked them—did I, Raymund?"

"I do not like secrets, either," said Mrs. Revore, "but sometimes secrets come into a life and must be hidden. And there is one in mine. I was willing for it to be there. But I want it to pass away with me. I would like to know that it will die when I die."

"What kind of a secret, mother?" Raymund inquired in surprise.

"It is a secret that you need never be ashamed of, or worry about. It is not a secret sin or a secret sorrow. It doesn't mean that anybody did wrong. It just came. But if you ever knew it, it might make you sorrowful. Yes, I know it would make you very unhappy. But it might make you rich."

"Oh, mother!" Raymund exclaimed, "rich?"

"Perhaps."

"Then it couldn't make us unhappy, too, could it?"

"Why, yes, my dear, it could make you not only rich but very unhappy."

"If you do not want us to know it, mother," said Rhoda, "that ends it with us. You mustn't tell us."

"But I can not know—oh, I wish I knew!" Mrs. Revore exclaimed feverishly. "If I only knew! That is the trouble. That is why I dare not die and leave the secret buried forever. Now pay attention to every word that I am about to say. Should the time ever come when some great difference should arise between you to separate you, go to the National Bank here in Crawley, and ask for the tin box they have deposited in their vaults. They will give it to you. Break the box open—you will be unable to use any key—and within, you will find a letter. Read it. But if you are both happy in each other's love, do not call for the tin box, or if you do, destroy the letter without reading it—after you are both married."

"But, mother," Rhoda objected, "how could Raymund and I ever have any great difference?"

"One never knows. I pray no such shadow will ever divide you two. But if it does—if you fail to understand each other, or if one makes the other very, very unhappy, then call for the tin box."

"I am sure we will never call for the tin box!" cried Raymund, throwing an arm about Rhoda. Rhoda nestled to his side and patted his cheek. "Your secret will never trouble us, mother!" she cried brightly.

"I pray it never may," said Mrs. Revore solemnly. "But a great weight is now taken from my heart. I feel I can leave you with a freer spirit. You both understand. We will never speak of the secret again. What I want you to think of, Raymund, is that your mother had faith in you, and leaves you to be the protector of our pretty rose; and that you are to get an education, no matter how hard you find it to get one, no matter if you must work, work, work—that you will educate yourself, that you will be worthy of your father. It will no doubt be hard. But the harder a thing is to get, the more we appreciate it and the better we value it in its use."

"I mean to educate myself, mother," said Raymund. "I have never thought I could grow up any other way!"

"You couldn't!" cried Rhoda, nodding.

"I am going to give you a test of people," said his mother. "If you know what they do with their money, it will tell you what kind of people they are. That is the way to tell—by knowing how they spend their money. I want you to make money, dear, I want you to be a successful man. But remember all the time you are making it, that it is to be used for the good of the world. That will keep you from ever growing hard or selfish. If your father had lived, all would have been different. I did what I could, but I have never been very strong. Now everything is spent and we are in debt. As soon as you can, you will pay off the debts—that comes first. I believe—" Mrs. Devore broke off and added, "I believe I have talked a little too long. Let me lie perfectly quiet for awhile. Rhoda, you may go and get supper, dear; Raymund will watch over me."

A Morning Prayer.

Thou hast again lighted the hours of time, and it is another day, with its cares, irritations and opportunities. Make us to live in sympathy—thyself and me—that I may follow thee in the downward steps of self-denial and may know the nearness of thyself and the beauty of myself forgotten in my thought of thee and those about me. Give to me health of soul, clearness of vision and strength of mind that I may be calm amid vexations, hopeful amid discouragements and faithful however faithless others may be. Help me that I may see the open door although other doors may be closed, that I may never forget the path to the unfailing fountain and that I may practice thy presence in order to be used by thee through the day and to go to my bed undishonored by sin when my body is weary with sleep. Teach me forgiveness, contentment and peace and we shall not have walked the way in vain, for thou still art God and I, a sinner saved by grace. Amen.

To my flock by whose prayers I am helped.—Peter Ainslie.

How the Preacher Won the Boy's Heart.

"Oh, mother, I have had a perfectly splendid time!" said a small boy as he came in from the street.

"Why, where have you been?" his mother asked.

"Oh, I have been to a fire!"

"A fire!" exclaimed mother. "And didn't I tell you you must not go to a fire alone?"

"Yes, but," the little fellow replied, "I didn't go alone. I was standing on the sidewalk when the engine tore by, and I was looking after it, when a man came up and said: 'Little boy, would you like to go to the fire?' And I said: 'Yes, sir, I would.' 'Very well,' he said, 'let's go.' He took my hand, and we went to the fire and had a great time, and saw everything there was to be seen."

"And who was it?" asked the surprised mother.

"Oh, he said he was the preacher at the church down the road!"

So the minister had won another heart—the heart of a little boy. More than that, he had won the hearts of those who loved the little boy. It took a little bit of his time, and it took him out of his way. But his time was not his, but his Master's, for just such uses as winning little boys; and he was never out of his way while he was in the way of serving his Master.

It seemeth such a little way to me
  Across to that strange country—the Beyond;
And yet, not strange, for it has grown to be
  The home of those of whom I am so fond:
They make it seem familiar and most dear,
As journeying friends bring distant regions near.

So close it lies that when my sight is clear
  I think I almost see the gleaming strand.
I know I feel those who have gone from here
  Come near enough sometimes to touch my hand.
I often think but for our veiled eyes
We should find Heaven right above us lies.

I can not make it seem a day to dread,
  When from this dear earth I shall journey out
To that still dearer country of the dead,
  And join the lost ones, so long dreamed about.
I love this world, yet shall I love to go
And meet the friends who wait for me, I know.

I never stand above a bier and see
  The seal of death set on some well-loved face
But that I think, "One more to welcome me
  When I shall cross the intervening space
Between this land and that one 'over there':
One more to make the strange Beyond seem fair."

And so for me there is no sting to death,
  And so the grave has lost its victory.
It is but crossing—with a bated breath,
  And white, set face—a little strip of sea,
To find the loved ones waiting on the shore,
More beautiful, more precious, than before.

Ben Franklin, the Genius.

Boston's Most Distinguished Son.

BY GILBERT PATTEN BROWN.

As we turn back the tides of two hundred years we find it the 17th day of January (January 6 old style), 1706. We enter a small house on Milk street, Boston, where resides a family whose name should need no introduction to the literary world. Here to "Josiah Franklin and Abiah, his wife," a son, Benjamin, the tenth child, is born. His father is a "soap boiler," "a poor man of ye towne," a member of "ye south meeting-house." Genius is the sacred gift of God showing itself in the form of man. It has been scoffed at in all ages. The early life of Franklin shows a type of uniqueness unparalleled in history.

Through his own efforts he became self-educated, the peer of the world's leading scholars. His life was that of a well-balanced Anglo-Saxon—unchanged by admiration or the flattery of the courts of Europe. The twentieth century politician should emulate the life of this great benefactor of mankind. The creed egoist could find a fitting lesson in the philosophy of this man who once wrote poetry and peddled it upon the strets of Boston. The race despot should look at Franklin, first as he mingles among the Quakers of Philadelphia, second as he teaches printing in old London, England, and last as he is received by the Roman Catholics of France as a representative of a republic where all should have equal rights and no state church should exist.

In his autobiography, Franklin says of his father:

"At his table he liked to have, as often as he could, some sensible friend or neighbor to converse with, and always took care to start some ingenious or useful topic for discourse, which might tend to improve the minds of his children. By this means he turned our attention to what was good, just and prudent in the conduct of life, and little or no notice was ever taken of what related to the victuals on the table. . . ."

How He Began to Write.

He thus describes his first attempts at writing for his brother's newspaper:

"Being still a boy, and suspecting that my brother would object to printing anything of mine in his paper, if he knew it was mine, I contrived to disguise my hand, and, writing an anonymous paper, I put it in, at night, under the door of the printing house. It was found in the morning and communicated to his writing friends. . . . I had the exquisite pleasure of finding it met with their approbation. . . . Encouraged by this, I wrote and conveyed in the same way to the press several more papers."

Franklin's brother was a hard taskmaster to the young genius, so he went to New York, and not finding work there, he resolved to go to Philadelphia, and made the journey on foot and by boat. His early life while in the Quaker City soon summoned the attention of all progressive thinkers.

The autobiography says:

"I was in my working dress, my best clothes being to come round by sea. I was dirty from my journey; my pockets were stuffed out with shirts and stockings, and I knew no soul nor where to look for lodging. I was fatigued with traveling, rowing and want of rest; I was very hungry, and my whole stock of cash consisted of a Dutch dollar. . . ."

At a baker's he bought "three great puffy rolls. . . . And having no room in my pockets, I walked off with a roll under each arm and eating the other.

"Thus I went up Market street as far as Fourth street, passing by the door of Mr. Read, my future wife's father; when she, standing at the door, saw me and thought I made, as I certainly did, a most awkward, ridiculous appearance."

He ever remembered the kindness of the Quakers to a son of old New England.

In his early days as a master printer Franklin was a great worker. He says:

His Industry.

"I began now gradually to pay off the debt I was under for the printing house. In order to secure my credit and character as a tradesman, I took care not only to be in reality industrious and frugal, but to avoid all appearances to the contrary. I dressed plainly; I was seen at no places of idle diversion. I never went out fishing or shooting; a book, indeed, sometimes debauched me from my work, but that was seldom, snug and gave no scandal; and, to show that I was not above my business, I sometimes brought home the paper I purchased at the stores through the streets on a wheelbarrow. Thus being esteemed an industrious, thriving young man, and paying duly for what I bought, the merchants who imported stationery solicited my custom; others proposed supplying me with books, and I went on swimmingly."

While in "dear old England" his associates were the "best blood of England." How dear it would be to the student of today if he could turn back the tides of years and look at Franklin while in London.

After his return to Philadelphia he "formed most of my ingenious acquaintances into a club of mutual improvement," which was called "the Junto," which became "the best school of philosophy, morality and politics in the provinces."

An Inventor.

"Franklin proved his right to be deemed more than a student of science by his invention of the Franklin stove," says Ford. In 1743 he made a discovery which, if not as utilitarian as his stove, bespoke a higher order of scientific research, that storms travel in an opposite direction from that of the wind. Many a dear old Christian mother of a well governed American home has blessed the name of Franklin for his inventing the famous stove. He also called to the attention of the world the fact of the existence of the gulf stream, well known to Nantucket whalers, but to few others, and caused it to be first laid down on charts.

How useful have those charts been to the American sailor in the past. Franklin's connection with that time-honored institution whose tenets are friendship, morality and brotherly love, should have more than a passing notice from the writer's pen. While in England his associates had been members of that ancient and mystical society. Shortly after his return there arrived one popular in Masonic cloth—Col. Daniel Coxe, LL.D., with authority from the Grand Lodge of England to establish lodges in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In the following year, however (in 1731), Franklin was made a Master Mason in "due, ancient and ample" form in St. John's Lodge of Philadelphia. Soon the leading men in financial, commercial and religious life of the Quaker City became Masons. But soon the hero of our article shines above them all. He became so popular in the craft that he was later elected Grand Master of Free Masons in Pennsylvania. At the breaking out of the Revolution it was noticed that nearly every patriot was a member of the Ancient Brotherhood. Franklin, with such Masons as Washington, Jefferson, Warren, Clinton, Montgomery, Hancock, Randolph, Greene, Revere, Thornton, Wayne, Sullivan, Whipple, Putnam, Morgan, Stark, Moultrie, Jackson, Sumpter, Hamilton, Wooster, Gist, Dearborn, De Kalb, Lafayette, Pulaski, and Morris, with a host of others, safely led the "thirteen colonies" to American liberty. Nearly all of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were Free Masons. Here Franklin proved to be the man of the hour.

Precepts Not Outworn.

At the age of 22 Franklin drew up for his own guidance a set of precepts, in which he gave prominent place to humility and chastity. The others were:

TEMPERANCE.

Eat not to dullness; drink not to elevation.

SILENCE.

Speak not but what may benefit others or yourself; avoid trifling conversation.

ORDER.

Let all your things have their places; let each part of your business have its time.

RESOLUTION.

Resolve to perform what you ought; perform without fail what you resolve.

FRUGALITY.

Make no expense but to do good to others or yourself; i. e., waste nothing.

INDUSTRY.

Lose no time; be always employed in something useful; cut off all unnecessary actions.

SINCERITY.

Use no hurtful deceit; think innocently and justly; and, if you speak, speak accordingly.

JUSTICE.

Wrong none by doing injuries, or omitting the benefits that are your duties.

MODERATION.

Avoid extremes; forbear resenting injuries so much as you think they deserve.

CLEANLINESS.

Tolerate no uncleanliness in body, clothes or habitation.

TRANQUILLITY.

Be not disturbed at trifles, or at accidents common or unavoidable.

As a boy, Franklin was deeply impressed by his father's reading of the Bible, and one proverb from Solomon appealed especially to him. It was:

> "Seest thou a man diligent in his calling, he shall stand before kings, he shall not stand before mean men."

In his old age, Franklin recalled that verse, and that when he heard it read, in his father's household, "I from thence considered industry as a means of obtaining wealth and distinction, which encouraged me, though I did not think that I should ever literally stand before kings, which, however, has since happened; for I have stood before five, and even had the honor of sitting down with one, the king of Denmark, to dinner."

Franklin embraced no particular creed. He believed Christ to be a servant of God to his distressed people.

At the age of 84 Dr. Franklin was asked by a friend for his religious opinions. He replied:

> "Here is my creed: I believe in one God, the Creator of the Universe. That He governs it by his Providence. That He ought to be worshiped. That the most acceptable service we render to Him is doing good to His other children. That the soul of man is immortal, and will be treated with justice in another life respecting its conduct in this."

These ideas were consistent with the teachings of Free Masonry, whose tenets he had learned to love.

The Famous Epitaph.

This was composed by Franklin at the age of 21, and is not engraved on his tombstone in Philadelphia, but is on a plate attached to the fence beside his grave. It is:

The Body of
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN
Printer
(Like the Cover of an Old Book, Its Contents Torn out, and Stript of Its Lettering and Gilding), Lies here, food for Worms.
But the work shall not be lost,
For it will (as he believed) appear once more in a New, and More Elegant Edition, Revised and Corrected
by
THE AUTHOR.

When the news of Franklin's death was received in the French revolutionary legislature, June 11, 1790, Mirabeau, the elder, delivered a eulogy on him, in which he said:

"Franklin is dead! The genius that freed America and poured a flood of light over Europe has returned to the bosom of the Divinity.

"The sage whom two worlds claim as their own, the man for whom the history of science and the history of empires contended with each other, held, without doubt, a high rank in the human race. . . Antiquity would have raised altars to this mighty genius, who, to the advantage of mankind, compassing in his mind the heavens and the earth, was able to restrain alike thunderbolts and tyrants."

His Views on Women.

Franklin's ideas of mankind are as follows:

"A man without a wife is but a half a man.

"Keep your eyes wide open before marriage, half-shut afterward.

"The proof of gold is fire; the proof of woman, gold; the proof of man, a woman.

"There are three faithful friends, an old wife, an old dog and ready money

"Good wives and good plantations are made by good husbands."

Young ladies wishing husbands often wrote Ben for his opinion on their sad lot.

Ben once in his life took fresh courage in that he married a widow. After his marriage several widows wrote Mrs. Franklin to learn how she had captured her prize. Brother Ben believed that marriage was religion, that the love of husband and wife was ordained of God. He loved the name of Luther, and those peasants of Germany whose lives were given to the service of the only true God. We need among us to-day more men of the religion of this soap boiler's son, the best of whose life went forth to teach the truth to the entire human family. He died in 1784 as the greatest American teacher, one of the god-fathers of the Revolution. The civilized and thinking world loves the name of Franklin, once the bare-foot post-boy of Boston—the American genius, philosopher and deist

The Bishop and the Waffles.

It would indeed be a queer bishop who could not tell a good story on himself. The late Bishop Dudley of Kentucky was wont to relate with much relish an interesting experience which he once had in connection with waffles.

At a fine old Virginia homestead where he was a frequent guest the waffles were always remarkably good.

One morning, as breakfast drew near an end, the tidy little linen-coated black boy who served at table approached Bishop Dudley and asked in a low voice:

"Bishop, won't y' have 'n'er waffle?"

"Yes," said the genial bishop, "I believe I will."

"Dey ain' no mo'," then said the nice little black boy.

"Well," exclaimed the surprised reverend gentleman, "if there aren't any more waffles, what made you ask me if I wanted another one?"

"Bishop," exclaimed the little black boy, "you's done et ten a'ready, an' I t'ought y' wouldn' want no mo'."—Lippincott's.

Frank's Calendar.

Frank liked calendars. There was no doubt about that. Big calendars, little calendars, medium-sized calendars, calendars from insurance companies, from stores, calendars fancy and plain, with and without quotations—he liked them all. The walls of his own little room were covered with them.

When Frank was old enough to choose for himself between right and wrong, his mother was talking with him at the beginning of the new year. As he looked around his room at his new calendars, she pointed out to him, gently but clearly, what chances the new year held for him—what beautiful possibilities were wrapped up in the days represented by those numbers.

Then Frank, of his own accord, suggested that at the close of any day, when he had been really naughty, he should put a black cross over that number. And his mother said that if he was very naughty, he might make the whole space of that date very black.

He chose a large calendar for his conscience calendar, as he called it; for he was to decide for himself, with the aid of his conscience, whether or not a black mark was to be made. There was one leaf for each month; the figures were black, and the white background was marked off in squares. Every night when his mother came in for their little "good-night talk," he decided about the mark for the calendar.

At the close of January, alas! there were many black marks on the leaf; for Frank was honest, and generally admitted his faults. He was almost discouraged over his record, but it taught him a lesson; and as the months went by, there were fewer and fewer of the black days.—Lulu Adams Norton, in Zion's Herald.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
  For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

From every part of our country come expressions of the general belief in The Christian-Evangelist's pre-eminent fitness for literary leadership among the Disciples of Christ during the closing days of our first century and out into the thrilling dawn of the second.

Its sturdily holding to the fundamental elements of our faith and the principles on which was founded this Restoration movement, whose progress across the field of history is compelling the wonder of the religious world, strongly commends it to those questioning Thomases among us whose conservatism is one of the sources of our strength and power for good. Its uncalculating interest in all our benevolent, missionary, and educational organizations, satisfies our Matthews who give particular attention to the business and more militant affairs of the kingdom that the wings of sentiment will not keep it in aerial regions to the exclusion of thought for those practical duties essential to continued success. Its recognition of the tremendous contributions the old-fashioned revival meetings have made to our numerical growth, its evangelistic zeal, its practical encouragement and support of our evangelists in the field, have made it the hope of all those enthusiastic Simon Peters whose dreams are freighted with vast processions of men and women eagerly making their way from the chill regions of sin out into the beautiful vales of Eden and they look to it as to no other source save the Bible for inspiration and guidance. Its patient investigation of the drift of modern scholarship, its careful sifting of new learning, literary, archeological, geographical, and its impartial conveyance to its readers of all it can discover of helpful truth, make it a mine of gold to our Pauline constituency. Its insistence on a pratical application of Gospel teaching to the affairs of daily life, gives heartening to those longing for the time when all Christians will be able to prove themselves such without the necessity of the church clerk's certificate. The Isaiahs and Johns who see visions and dream dreams, find congenial companionship along its sanguine, optimistic columns and on those weekly hill-tops where may be seen, through eyes of faith, a future more glorious than all the past has been, a future in which will be some wilderness-trials and Gethsemane-sorrows it is true, but more transfiguration scenes and Pentecostal triumphs: the Annes and Marys and Simons, those of the trusting, even mystic, faith find inexpressible comfort in its gospel of sweetness and joy. Yes, when all these factors of our church might, the sage and unlettered disciple, the soldiers on the firing line and the priest in gentler temple ministry, the saint past all fear and the new convert troubled with questionings that will not easily down, those contending earnestly for the faith in press and forum, and the mother in Israel rearing her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord about her own fireside, instinctively look for common and helpful leadership, the cynosure of all eyes seems to be The Christian-Evangelist. As this journal has done and been it will continue to do and be, regardless of material considerations, but its management longs for the larger opportunities for instruction in righteousness and inspiration unto all good works that it would enjoy were it a regular visitor in 100,000 homes. It feels there is some justification for the opinion entertained by many that its friends and admirers are not as aggressive as they might be in advancing its material interests and extending the sphere of its usefulness. The kind sentiments cherished by multitudes for this paper are greatly appreciated by the management, but the time has now come when it would like to see proof of the real love of which we hear so much, in the form of long lists of subscribers from our lovers' home communities. There are very few of the hundreds who write us expressions of esteem and love every month but could, by practical attempts, secure for us at least ten new readers. If all with whom The Christian-Evangelist is a prime favorite would enthusiastically enter with us into this campaign for 100,000 subscribers we can record the achievement long before the celebrating hosts assemble in Pittsburg in October of 1909. The Christian-Evangelist now has the largest circulation it has ever enjoyed during its history. Our recent remarkable gains are only prophetic of what can be accomplished in each of the three succeeding years of this propaganda with a united effort by all who believe it to be a great power under God for the upbuilding of the church and the salvation of the world. We are awaiting now with joyous anticipations of great victory the responses of our friends to this overture.

One Hundred Thousand.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

Why should the friends of our plea for the restoration of New Testament Christianity work together to increase the subscription list of The Christian-Evangelist to a hundred thousand?

First, because The Christian-Evangelist is a paper of the highest type, and its reading by a multitude of our families could but minister to their spiritual life in a large degree. It belongs, therefore, to the "whatsoever things" that the Christian religion would sanctify to the uplifting of human character, and would aid in restoring to the world the primary faith and life of the Gospel.

Second, because The Christian-Evangelist is the most powerful advocate among us for Christian unity. Its irenic spirit, its breadth of vision, its charitable attitude toward those who differ from its position, and its unswerving loyalty to the essentials of faith and practice, as these have been recognized among the fathers from the beginning of our movement, give it influence with all those in the Christian world who long for the fulfillment of the Savior's prayer for the oneness of his disciples.

Third, because such a subscription list would largely increase its power for good, and make it possible to serve in fuller measure the needs of the brotherhood, in every forward movement. Ever the friend of all our organized agencies for missionary, educational and benevolent ministries, it has never sought to be their master, but always their servant. Its gratuitous and unselfish help to these various forms of co-operative activity among us can not be exaggerated. For all these reasons we ought to give The Christian-Evangelist a hundred thousand subscribers, and therefore a half million readers, by the time of our Centennial Celebration in 1909. Let's do it.

Mrs. J. V. Atterberry.

—No, I do not want to stop The Christian-Evangelist—the best religious paper "on the market." A. J. Butts.

—You are editing the Evangelist in a most worthy way and making it a great power for good toward evangelizing and enlightening the world. The spirit that is breathed through its pages must ultimately win. It reminds one of the Man of Galilee. W. F. Reynolds.

A Heartfelt Tribute.

Oh, how I wish Brother Garrison would never grow old, that he could live at least 100 years longer to bless our brotherhood and the world! I trust you will be happy in your new relationship to the paper, and even more useful with the passing years.
J. N. Crutcher.

It Sanctifies the Home.

I have returned to Little Rock, and can not get on without The Christian-Evangelist. I am surprised that any one of our people should try to keep spiritual house without it. It certainly grows more helpful all the time. Mrs. F. L. Sutton.

A High Plane.

Allow me to compliment you on the "Educational issue" of The Christian-Evangelist. Was pleased to note the high intellectual and wholesome, spiritual character of the articles. I am convinced that our journalism in the future must be on a highly educated plane, keeping at the same time a religious spirit—a plane above puerility, petty controversy and acrimonious dogmatics, and I am glad to see The Christian-Evangelist establishing a high standard. The English Elections.

We may safely depend upon our London correspondent to give an expert opinion upon the significance of the recent parliamentary election as soon as the trans-Atlantic mails can bring it. For the present it may be observed that the outcome of the elections has been a general victory for the Liberals, with a special increase in the importance of the Labor element. The recently retired premier, Mr. Balfour, failed of re-election to the House of Commons, but will, of course, find "a safe seat" by some lesser light retiring in his favor. Mr. Chamberlain, the standard-bearer of tariff reform along protective lines, was re-elected, as were the other six candidates from Birmingham who stood for the same doctrine. Mr. Chamberlain's immense personal prestige in his home city counts for much, but British protectionists are taking some comfort, in spite of the general defeat of their party, in the reflection that the results of the election were most favorable to them where the tariff issue was most clearly defined. It may reasonably be surmised that the failure of Mr. Balfour's cabinet and his own personal defeat in the subsequent election were the result of his undecisiveness and vacillation quite as much as of any general disapproval of his policies. Nobody could tell just what his policies were. He shrank from the definite approval or disapproval of anything. And so he fell, while Chamberlain, the outspoken advocate of an unpopular measure, goes back to his seat in the House with a majority which can scarcely be altogether accounted for by his personal popularity.

How to Prevent Travel.

It is estimated that American tourists in Europe last year spent $190,000,000. This is a great deal of money to take out of the country. Moved by the patriotic desire to keep it within our borders, and also by the personal desire to get some of it in their own coffers, a number of western railroad officials and business men are to meet in New York this week to devise plans for keeping the tourists and their millions at home. That ought to be easy. Import a couple of thousand years of the history of civilization and localize it on our western plains. Transplant half a dozen great nations and half a dozen other small ones which, together with our own, are making the history of our own time. Bring over and distribute between the Mississippi and the Rockies the cities of London, Paris, Rome, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Florence, Amsterdam, Moscow, Naples, Stockholm, cities which we have read about all our lives in fiction, in history and the newspapers and which we naturally want to see. Other steps of the same sort will, of course, suggest themselves, but even these few trifles would help. While there are a great many fools who rush off to Europe unintelligently to spend there the money which they have made here, because they consider it the swagger thing to do, there are others who, with equal unintelligence, repeat the shallow old cry that a man should see his own country thoroughly before going abroad. How can a man see this country thoroughly in one lifetime? It is too big a country. Seeing New York and Mammoth Cave and California and the Yellowstone and Niagara Falls is not seeing the country. But is it not fair to say that when a man has spent forty years in seeing such phases of American life as lay within his reach, he may properly spend three months in seeing the life of those foreign nations which have made most of the world's history and literature up to date? Still there is a valuable work that this conference in New York may do. If it can turn the stream of mere idle tourists westward instead of eastward; if it will refrain from unkind criticism of those who go over to see the Forum and the Acropolis and the Louvre before they have seen the Big Trees; if they will be content to unfold the real marvels of our own west as positive incentives to travel at home without belittling the attractions of Europe, they will do well.

New French President.

M. Clement A. Fallieres has been elected President of France to succeed Loubet. The election is by joint ballot of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, a method analogous to our election of Senators by the state legislatures. M. Fallieres was president of the Senate and presided over the session at which he was elected. His chief rival was Paul Doumer, president of the Chamber of Deputies. The new president represents the Progressive Republican party. Like his predecessor, he is of plebeian origin, but he has acquired wealth and social standing as well as political prestige during his long service in the Chamber. The presidency of France, it may be remarked, carries with it much greater emoluments and a much more regal state than are allowed to our presidents. The salary is $120,000, with generous extras and allowances covering very large expenditures for what we would call purely personal expenses, and his household is maintained with a dignity and state which would do no discredit to a reigning monarch.

Special Schools for the Bright.

There is much to be said in favor of the suggestion of a German educator (in Literary Digest, Jan. 13) that special schools be established for the education of the exceptionally bright. The ordinary public school system must, as a matter of economy and common sense, adapt its methods and subject matter to the needs and capacities of children who are neither abnormally dull nor abnormally precocious. But those who vary somewhat widely, in either direction, from the average have some rights which the school system may well recognize. The state has already seen the need of establishing schools for the defective, and it would add vastly to the efficiency of the general public schools if they could be relieved of about five per cent of their present pupils who could be cared for in special schools for the "slow." Why not also schools for the exceptionally bright? The pupil who learns very rapidly often passes through school and issues from it an essentially uneducated person. He is conceited by the obvious daily comparison of his own facility with the relative dullness of his fellow-students. He does not learn how to work, because he can get the lessons without working—the lessons being of necessity adapted to the capacity of the average student. He loses the stimulus of association with his intellectual peers. And he fails to learn much that he might easily learn if the curriculum were adjusted to his ability instead of to the ability of the average child. Of course it is not a question of founding schools for geniuses, for the genius is not merely one of a class of extra-bright people. The genius resists classification, and must be dealt with solely as an individual. A curriculum of metaphysics and starvation is perhaps as good training as any for the average genius—if geniuses can be averaged. But for those children (perhaps three or five per cent of the whole) who learn more rapidly than their fellows, the special school seems to offer some real advantages.

Philippine Tariff.

The House of Representatives has passed the long-delayed Philippine Tariff bill. The bill as adopted provides for free trade between the United States and the islands, except that a tariff equal to twenty-five per cent of the Dingley rate shall be imposed upon sugar, tobacco and rice imported from the islands until April 11, 1909, after which complete free trade shall prevail. The opposition to the measure came chiefly from congressmen whose constituents are interested in the three commodities mentioned and who stood out for a higher tariff upon them, but this defection of Republican members (57 on the first roll call) was more than made good by the accessions of Democrats who accepted the bill as the nearest possible approach to free trade.

Christian Union: An Historical Study.

I. THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

2. An Undivided Church.

The fact that stands out in bold significance on the pages of the New Testament is that the Church of the first century was an undivided Church. It had its local assemblies or congregations in different places, as the church at Jerusalem, Antioch, Philippi, Corinth, Ephesus, Rome, etc., but these were regarded as component parts of the one united Church of God in the world. The term Church (ekklesia) was used in two senses only, the one local, the other general. "The church of God, which is at Corinth" (Cor. 1:2), and the "Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3:15), are instances of the local and general uses of the term. The latter use of the word Church may mean either the actual Church, as a whole or the ideal Church.*

The important thing to notice is, that there was no prefix or affix to the term "Church," except to denote its location. There was nothing to indicate different kinds of churches having different creeds and terms of fellowship, for the simple reason that no such churches existed. Whatever may have been their differences of opinion and feeling on many points, and these were very great, as we shall point out later, they regarded themselves, and were so regarded by the apostles, as constituting one Church, or "one body," having "one Spirit" and "one hope," with "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism" (Eph. 4:4,5). A member going from any one of the local churches to another, in the apostolic age, would have been welcomed into its fellowship on giving evidence of his membership elsewhere. So far as the location of these churches and the limited methods of communication and transportation made it possible, they were ready to co-operate with each other in furthering the common interests of a common Church. As we have already seen, the multitude of disciples at Jerusalem were "of one heart and one soul," practicing even a community of goods. The Macedonian churches made offerings to relieve the poor saints in Judea.

When one sits down to study the causes which made possible the marvelous success of the Gospel in the first century, in the face of Jewish narrowness and bigotry and Gentile licentiousness and idolatry, he can not fail to see that without the unity which characterized the Church of that age its victories would have been impossible. The very fact that the new religion possessed a unifying power that could bind together in harmony Jew and Gentile, Greek and barbarian, bond and free, gave it a tremendous moral power and momentum which triumphed over all opposition. Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, and the uttermost parts of the world, felt its quickening touch and owned its transforming power. Antioch, Ephesus, Corinth and Rome were in turn shaken to their foundations by the new dynamic of a divine evangel preached by a united Church. Blending hearts in one, breaking down ancient barriers of hatred and prejudice, it had one supreme passion—the extension of Christ's reign over all the habitable world. Passing through fires of persecution undaunted and undismayed, this Gospel of human brotherhood, under the divine Fatherhood, spread throughout the Roman empire and later mounted to the very throne of the Cesars.

Let it be remembered, too, that the Church began its career at a time when deep-seated prejudices and bitter hostility divided the different races and classes of men. The Jew and the Gentile despised each other, while a feeling of bitter hostility existed between the Samaritans and the Jews. And yet, in spite of all these racial and class prejudices and religious feuds, there were gathered together out of these hostile elements a united Church, whose members were bound together by ties which even death could not sever. What was the secret of its unity? What made the Church of the first century, composed as it was of these diverse elements, a united Church? Its bond of unity was the personal allegiance of its members to the personal Christ as Savior and Lord. Their common faith was faith in him. Their common love was love for him. Their common hope was hope in him. Their common baptism was baptism in his name. Their unity—the unity of the Spirit—was in him. Their union with each other was the direct result of their union with him. He had communicated to them his Spirit. In his life and teaching, in his wonderful works of mercy, in his atoning death and resurrection from the dead, in his ascension to the right hand of God, and coronation as King of kings and Lord of lords, they found all that was necessary to their spiritual life and growth, their triumph over all the forces of evil, and their pledge of immortality. It was no human formulation of doctrines, nor was it any pressure of external authority, that made them one, but the cohesive power of a mutual love for their divine Lord and for all his disciples. So close was this personal tie between the disciples and their Lord that he suffered with all their sufferings, bore their reproaches and they shared in his life and in all his triumphs.

Such was the unity of the Church in the beginning. We shall see further on to what severe tests this unity was put by questions which arose in the apostolic age, and which excited warm discussion and difference of opinion.

*"We may think of the Church as an 'empiric matter of fact,' i. e., as a collection of individuals, the actual Church, or we may cease to think of the Church as a noun of multitude and regard it as a single individual entity, the ideal Church. The second point of view is closely related to the first. If we ask what is in the minds of the writers in this usage we find that ultimately they are thinking not of a single entity, but of a collection of individuals. So when St. Paul says the Church is the 'body' or 'bride' of Christ, he is really expressing, under the figure of a single entity, the Church, the relation in which Christ stands to individual members. There is, however, a real difference between the conception of actual and ideal Church in two respects: (1) The conception of the actual Church regards it as it really is, i. e., a body of individuals of various degrees of imperfection; while the ideal Church is a body whose members represent the ideal of membership, i. e., it is a perfect Church, or at least one free from the negative aspect of evil. (2) The actual Church is composed of the members who are still alive and in the world at time of speaking; while the conception of the ideal Church does not denote a definite number of members at a definite time, but implies a membership independent of time. The latter is in fact an ideal, not an empirical, body."—Hastings Bible Dictionary, Vol. I., p. 425.

"The Real Issue."

We are making substantial progress in our discussion of Church Federation with the "Christian Standard." If our esteemed contemporary keeps up the same pace and is consistent with the position it has now taken there is good reason to hope that it will soon be federated with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in an harmonious effort to promote Christian union.

In an editorial in its issue of January 13, entitled, "An Amended Truism," the editor says:

> "In the outset, it is important that everything that would confuse the main issue be eliminated. So far as the 'Standard' is concerned, nobody connected with it has manifested, or will manifest, any hostility to co-operate as individual believers with all good people for all good ends that do not involve a surrender of Gospel principles. In this matter, we refuse to be limited by evangelical boundaries, but are ready to join Jew and Gentile, Protestant and Romanist, Unitarian and Trinitarian, in doing good to the full extent of our liberty, opportunity and power. More than this, it serves only to darken counsel and obscure the real issue to imply that the 'Standard' and the brethren have not been and are not willing to co-operate with their separated brethren in the evangelical churches in union evangelistic and edifying meetings, and in other things, to the full extent of their privilege under their avowed loyalty to the word of God. In participating in revivals where the mourner-bench theology and methods prevail, we have certainly demonstrated that we are ready to sacrifice all personal preferences and go the full limit of our loyalty to Christ and his church in co-operating with people who preach only a mutilated Gospel."

The "Christian Standard," then, is not opposed to co-operation. In so far as federation and co-operation are identical, our contemporary is in favor of federation. The co-operation, however, is limited to that with "individual believers." Our neighbor is more liberal than we are in expressing his willingness to co-operate with Jews, Romanists, and Unitarians, "for all good ends that do not involve a surrender of Gospel principles" Now, we think the work of converting men to Christ is a "good end," but we would not care to attempt any co-operation in that work with men who do not believe in Christ. Even if we sacrifice no principle, we would sacrifice time in a useless effort.

Another amendment to the "Simple Truism" to which we replied is stated in the following language:

> "One other elimination, and we are ready for the main issue. The Baptist churches and Free Baptist churches are regarded as churches of Christ, notwithstanding they wear unauthorized names and are more or less under the influence of party theology. They are churches of Christ that need to be taught the way of the Lord more perfectly; hence they are to be eliminated in the present discussion. If free Christian congregations could federate, and the question of an alliance with the Baptist churches were up, our discussion would take a range entirely different from the present one. The question now before us is, whether churches of Christ (Baptist churches included) may federate with 'connectional' denominations and religious bodies whose members have never been baptized. Our opponents may just as well make up their minds to face this issue."

This is another step of progress. Our contemporary now eliminates the Baptist and Free Baptist churches from the "simple truism," that our churches can not co-operate with the denominations. There are denominations, it now admits, that it would be willing to be federated with, namely, those that practice immersion. It is not denied that they are "denominations," but in spite of that fact their churches are regarded as "churches of Christ that need to be taught the way of the Lord more perfectly." Then it is not on the ground of denominationalism that the "Christian Standard" would refuse to co-operate with our religious neighbors. The real test is baptism. Just what it means by "connectional" denominations is not quite certain to us, for Baptists and Free Baptists are quite as "connectional" in their organization as are the Congregationalists. So, after all, the "simple truism" simmers itself down to this: Churches of Christ which practice immersion exclusively can not federate with other churches of Christ that practice affusion. "Our opponents may just as well make up their minds to face this issue," says the "Standard." Very well. We are prepared to face it. With Alexander Campbell we agree that we should not make the ordinance of baptism the sole test of Christian character and worthiness. When a sister once accused him of being too broad-gauged in his Christian sympathies, he told her that as between an immersed person whose Christian life was imperfect, and one who had not been baptized in the Scriptural way, but whose life showed a more general conformity to the will of Christ, he would esteem the latter as the better Christian, and that he would be a very sectarian if he did not do so. We do not quote his words, but that is the substance of his statement.

The reader should remember that this is not a question of organic union that we are now discussing, but a question of federation—that is, an agreement to co-operate with each other as far as possible in Christian work. On what ground can we refuse to federate with those Christian bodies that do not practice immersion? Not on the ground that our federation with another religious body carries with it an endorsement of its errors, the "Christian Standard" itself being judge, else it could not agree to be federated with the two denominations it mentions. Would not our opportunities be vastly increased for impressing the Scripturalness of our practices upon such churches by free intermingling and co-operation with them, without surrendering anything that we believe to be Scriptural?

This brings us to what the "Christian Standard" calls "the real issue," and this is exactly what we have been seeking to find. We will let our contemporary state its position in its own way. It says:

"Thirty bodies are named as forming the denominational federation, among them 'The Disciples of Christ.' Does THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST pretend to say that 'the Disciples' could enter into a federation with bodies whose legitimacy or right to exist they deny? Does it contend that a federation can ever be formed among political or religious bodies that deny each other's lawful existence? Here is the real issue, and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will need to dispose of it before making any headway in its federation propaganda. Doubtless the members of the German Empire do not 'fully endorse each other's plan of organization,' yet this does not hinder Prussia from recognizing the free cities of Hamburg and Bremen and the kingdom of Saxony as legitimate members of the Imperial federation. A federation does not require that the members 'fully endorse each other's plan of organization,' but only each other's legitimacy. Will THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST name a single genuine federation in which the sovereign bodies constituting it do not recognize each other's lawful existence?"

The first thing here is to inquire what the 'Christian Standard" means by our admiting or denying "each other's lawful existence"? It can not mean, of course, that other religious bodies have not the same right, under the constitution and laws of our country, to hold their religious convictions and form religious organizations, that we ourselves have. Does it mean, then, that these religious bodies have no Scriptural right to exist? Perhaps that is its meaning. Let us look into it. Do not the Scriptures not only permit but absolutely require that men shall think for themselves on religious problems, and act in harmony with their best judgment as to what the Scriptures teach? Are we to say, then, that no religious organization has a right to exist that is not in perfect harmony with the teaching of the Scriptures in all things? Who of us, then, would feel sure that we are assoicated with a religious organization that has a "right to exist"? Who is to decide this question of the "lawful" or "legitimate" right of any religious body to existence? Does the "Christian Standard" feel authorized to decide such a question as that?

We are prepared, then, to answer the question put to us: "Does THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST pretend to say that 'the Disciples' could enter into federation with bodies whose legitimacy or right to exist they deny?" If by "legitimacy" is meant the right of Christian people to adopt such methods of organization as, in their judgment, seem best fitted for carrying out the will of Christ, we do not deny such right. We claim it for ourselves and we must accord it to all others. If by the "legitimacy or right to exist," is meant exact conformity to a Scriptural model of organization, we answer, the Scriptures give us no such model and lay down no hard and fast rules for forms of church government. Any form of organization that does not violate any general New Testament principle is legitimate if it serve the purpose satisfactorily.

Here we are, then, face to face with the "real issue." We affirm boldly and unequivocally, that we may co-operate, and that we may agree to co-operate—and this is the difference between co-operation and federation—with all evangelical Protestant bodies for the accomplishment of common ends regardless of differences relating to church ordinances or church organization; and that we may not only do this without compromising any truth or practice which we hold to be Scriptural, but that we are compelled, by the Spirit of Christ, and by the very meaning and purpose of our plea, to give such expression to our desire for unity and to let our light so shine before others on the problem of unity, as to hasten the fulfillment of Christ's prayer—"that they all may be one."

Notes and Comments.

The secular press rightly feels an interest in the discussion of Christian unity now going on and is often able to make a very timely suggestion. Here is a comment on the subject from the "Indianapolis News" illustrating the folly of wrangling over outgrown dogmas and forms of church government.

"The issue over which Augustine and Calvin on the one hand, and Wesley on the other hand, differed is not one that looms up very large compared with the issue over which Haeckel and Lodge among scientists dispute. When the view of divine providence itself is under fire, how contemptible warfare between those who still believe in it! When the final authority of the Bible is questioned, within the Church itself, how unstrategetic debate over modes of inspiration! When the ethics of the Sermon on the Mount are declared unworkable, how petty disputes as to Christology seem! When students of Christian institutional origins disagree as to their primitive response to social environment, how foolish to expect that they can do otherwise now! When both episcopacy and independency are seen to have their merits, how absurd to insist that one form or the other must triumph over the other! When Christian character is found existing under many forms of creed formulation of belief and to flourish with comparative fertility under many forms of administrative and institutional rule, how shortsighted to insist on the principle of exclusion rather than inclusion!"

In the article we quoted from Dr. Ball last week, on the Basis of Union betwen Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ, he says:

"We are not entirely agreed in our statements of the relation of baptism to the remission of sins, but we all agree that every person who is born from above and is baptized is also forgiven, and that no one who possesses faith in Christ, which works by love and purifies the heart, will fail of salvation in heaven at last."

True, when we make our independent statements of the relation of baptism to remission of sins they do not exactly agree, but the difference is a great deal less than it has been supposed to be, between representative men of these bodies, and it is gradually growing less. When we agree in denying any magic power to baptism, such as the impartation of life, and any indissoluble connection between the ordinance and salvation, and in holding it as a symbol of vital facts and a declaration of the soul's surrender to Christ, the difference is too small to quarrel about. So far as the Disciples of Christ are concerned they are quite content to accept the New Testament statements on this subject, without amendment or abridgement, as the statement of their position.

Editor's Easy Chair.

A spring day with a warm south wind and April skies in mid-winter! Who can explain this phenomenon? What is more uncertain than the weather? No doubt it is governed by law as all things are in this universe, but we have not yet reached an intelligent understanding of these laws so as to be able to predict with certainty the changes which occur. Meteorology is one of the sciences of which there is far more to be learned than we have yet found out. No one supposes, however, unless he be exceedingly ignorant, that because we do not yet understand the secret of the changes of the weather, nor can trace the currents of air from their couch of rising to the place where they repose, that these things are governed by chance. We simply say, "Here is a class of phenomena the laws of which we do not yet fully understand, but no doubt there are laws that elude our present knowledge which govern these phenomena." When a missionary in the far tropics told the natives that in his country the water became hard, so that people could walk upon it, their credibility was exhausted, and they not only rejected that statement but many other things which he had been telling them in his preaching. They had never seen ice, nor had any experience with freezing weather. Why should they accept that which was contrary to their experience and observation? It was Hume's argument against miracles, unconsciously controlling the minds of these uneducated natives. It requires a higher grade of knowledge for people to understand that there may be laws in operation above the range of our experience or observation, bringing about results which we can not account for by the laws which we understand. If we were as reasonable in matters of religion as we are about the weather, we would find less difficulties in the way of our faith.

Mutual burden-bearing is a Christian principle which we are constantly in danger of forgetting through the innate selfishness of our human nature. "Bear ye one another's burdens," said Paul, "and so fulfill the law of Christ." So, then, it is the law of Christ that we should bear each other's burdens," said Paul, "and so fulfill to point out many infractions of this law. The Easy Chair ran across an illustration of it the other day. In conversation with one of our college presidents in whose school there is a large number of young men whom he is training for the work of the ministry, it came out that he did not receive enough salary the last year to buy a loaf of bread. He feels held to the work because our churches must have preachers, and these preachers must be trained in our colleges. And so he stands at his post, bearing his heavy burden alone, while the rich men of the state in which the college is located do not touch it with one of their little fingers. They know, too, that our churches must have preachers and that these preachers must be educated and trained for their work, but the burden of helping to supply such ministers does not rest upon their hearts. They buy and sell and get gain, and enjoy may of the luxuries of life, but this college president must deny himself these things to supply our churches with preachers. Is this bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ? What is true of this college is true, in a measure, of every college of the brotherhood. No class of men among us is so much overworked and underpaid, in proportion to their ability and education, as our college men. How to bring our churches to feel that this is their burden, and make them put their shoulders under it, is one of the problems which confront us to-day. We are looking to Education Day to help solve this problem. No revival among us is needed more than a revival of interest in our colleges and in Christian education. Until this comes we shall be hampered in all our work for lack of properly-equipped men. And all that is necessary to bring about this revival is to put into practical operation what Paul calls, "the law of Christ," or mutual burden-bearing.

The principle we have mentioned above is of wide application. It applies to the home, where burdens are often unevenly distributed. Who of us has not known homes where the mother was a slave for her children and where the children often took it as a matter of course? The same thing is true in the church. As a rule a few bear the burdens of the church in finances, in keeping up the meetings, and in all the work of the church, and the others are entirely willing that they should do it. It often happens, too, that in the church there are members almost crushed under a burden of sorrow, or of anxiety, or of poverty and the prosperous members of the church know nothing of it and do not take any great pains to find out if there be any members suffering from any cause who need sympathy, encouragement, and help. So close is the bond of sympathy which binds members of the church together that, as Paul expressed it, using the body as an illustration, "When one member suffers all suffer with it." This ought to be as true of the body of Christ as it is of the human body, but as a matter of fact we know this is far from being true in the average church. We bear each other's burdens to a very limited degree. Nothing, we believe, would add more to the power of the church in a community than this mutual burden-bearing. It was this fact that gave the primitive church such marvelous power. We have not restored primitive Christianity until we have restored this principle of bearing each other's burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ. When the church can sing, truly and experimentally, what she sometimes sings theoretically,

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear,
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear,"

the church will have gained a spiritual and evangelistic power hitherto unknown.

The pastor or minister is often the burden-bearer of the congregation. Upon his heart rests a burden of responsibility and care which is often unshared, in any considerable degree, by the members of his flock. Into his ears are poured all the sorrows, disappointments and complaints of the members of his flock. The fault-finder, too, is sure to get in his work. The coldness and indifference of many members, their absence from the prayer meeting and other stated services of the church, their unresponsiveness to his strongest and tenderest appeals, the low moral standard which prevails with certain other members, the repeated rejection of the Gospel on the part of those who attend his ministry—what a burden all this is on the heart of the faithful minister! And yet how few there are that seem to know the burden he is carrying, and strive to make it lighter and easier for him to bear! Little do they dream of the vital force, and of the very life-blood, which he puts into his sermons to stir their lethargic souls, and to give them some glimpses of the spiritual and the eternal. It would be interesting, but perhaps discouraging, to know how few members of the average church remember their pastor in their prayers, and make his welfare and happiness a concern of their lives. What an irresistible power the preacher would possess if he could feel that he was borne up on the prayers of his congregation, and that their hands and hearts were all ready and willing to share his burdens. In behalf of our faithful and consecrated preachers we plead for mutual burden-bearing between them and their respective flocks.

The Editor had the great pleasure of assisting Bro. W. J. Wright, superintendent of evangelism, in an evangelistic institute at Christian University, Canton, Mo., during the past week. It is the purpose of Brother Wright to hold a series of such institutes in connection with our colleges for the special benefit of the younger ministers and of such other preachers as may be in reach. We are impressed with the need and timeliness of such institutes and believe that through the direction of a wise leader like Brother Wright they will accomplish great good. It was a great pleasure to come in contact with the students of Christian University—an earnest and devoted band of mature young men and women—and to renew our fellowship with President Johann, Dean Buxton, of the Bible Department, and other members of the faculty. There are over forty young ministers in the institution who are either preaching or preparing themselves for the ministry, and most of them, we believe, are actually engaged in the work of preaching. Perhaps no institution among us has so large a proportion of ministerial students in its enrollment. The new building surpasses our expectation in its up-to-date equipment and fine adaptation to the purposes of such a school. There is yet some indebtedness on the building which the brethren of Missouri should see is removed very soon, and the endowment should be raised to $100,000. This ought to be accomplished by our centennial. The work which the institution has done and is doing, and the sacrifices of the men who are conducting it, deserve this recognition and aid from the brethren of the state. Bro. J. H. O. Smith, of Valparaiso, came to the assistance of Brother Wright just as we were leaving, and we had the pleasure of hearing one of his strong addresses on the subject of evangelism. Brother Wright is to be at Drake University, Des Moines, in a similar institute during the present week.

Following the Potomac a little southwest, then east, then southeast, and then south for 183 miles altogether one comes to the beginnings of things. Fortress Monroe and Williamsburg, Yorktown and Jamestown, the Capes and Hampton Roads, the region where the English got their first permanent footing in the new world. "Here the old world first met the new. Here the white man first wielded the axe to cut the first tree for the first log cabin. Here the first log cabin was built for the first village. Here the first village rose to be the first state capital." Here also came the first suggestion of a new nation, and the battle which closed its struggle for freedom; and here the first battle of a later war which shook the nation to its foundations and the first conflict of ironclads which transformed the navies of the world. In 1907 the nation will celebrate here the 300 years and the little start of May 13, 1607. It will be an occasion in the history of America.

The Deck of a Modern U. S. Battleship showing the Turrets and 13-inch guns. Four of these Ships Cost More Money than is given by all Protestant Christendom for Missions.

A few score of English adventurers landed in the woods here and called the place Jamestown. These men effected a settlement destined to be permanent. Other attempts had been made by Englishmen to colonize this country, but they had proved abortive, and it is very possible had this party been unsuccessful in their efforts the destiny of the continent would have been entirely changed. The Atlantic Coast soon became dotted with hamlets occupied by the English led by the example of the Jamestown people. Not only was this the first colony to succeed in the struggle for existence, but at Jamestown convened the first legislature in this country, and the United States may be said to date its being from the foundation of the General Assembly of Virginia convened at Jamestown in 1619. And here was made the first suggestion of a continental congress.

Hampton Roads has 160 square miles of protected harbor. It is the finest on the Atlantic Coast. About it are clustered many attractive cities and summer resorts. Congress has decreed the celebration of 1907, and the President has formally proclaimed this tercentennial and invited all the nations of the world to send representative fleets of their navies and regiments of their armies to meet in an international naval and marine rendezvous. It is estimated the money value of fighting craft that will then assemble in Hampton Roads will at no time fall below $250,000,000 and perhaps be double that sum. It will seem appropriate to have these great steel fleets gather where the Merrimac and the Monitor began the era of ironclads.

I remember well that seafight, the thunder of the guns and the stir of the time. I was near by. I have often visited the scene. Newport News is now a city with 30,000 people. Then there was a single house. Yesterday I went over its shipyard which has 7,000 employes, and visited the Louisiana, the biggest of all the monster battleships, of 16,000 tons, and costing four millions of the people's gold. It is a great Leviathan of iron resting twenty-four feet deep in the water with seven or eight decks. She is of the most advanced type of fighting machines, and it is declared of her that she could fight and whip any ship in any navy of the world. In speed, armament, and coal-carrying capacity, the three essentials for a man-of-war, she surpasses the best and latest and strongest battleships in the European navies. She is 450 feet long, 76.10 feet beam, and 24.6 feet draught, with a displacement of 16,000 tons. Her speed on her trial trip averaged 18.8 knots and she can carry 2,300 tons of coal, enabling her to steam 7,000 miles at twelve knots an hour, and her armament is four 12-inch, eight 8-inch and twelve 7-inch guns. She will have 45 officers and 840 men.

The strongest ship in the British navy is the Edward VII, of the same tonnage, but of less speed, less armament, and less coal capacity. In the French navy the greatest ship is the Republique of 15,000 tons and less power in other respects. Germany's greatest sea monster is the Elsass, of 13,200 tons. The United States has six of these 16,000 ton ships now building. The others are the Connecticut, the Kansas, the New Hampshire, the Minnesota, and the Vermont. When finished these six ships will be the finest fleet of fighting machines that was ever built in the world and more formidable than anything that floats.

But after all, in less than two years' time, the Louisiana will be beaten. Right across on the other side of the dock I visited the Virginia, one of the next best ships in our navy, of 14,000 tons. The Louisiana beats her before she is completed; and doubtless by the time next May, when the 16,000 ton vessel shall go into commission, an 18,000 ton ship will be on the ways, and so it will be right along.

England has already the Dreadnought, an 18,000 ton ship. Japan has the Aki and Satsuma, 18,000 ton ships, under construction. Germany and France are talking 18,000 ton vessels. The little brown people of Nippon have designs and appropriations already for four monster battleships of 22,000 tons and twenty knots speed, and armament of fourteen 12-inch and eight 6-inch guns. Where will the thing stop? In five years' time your five million dollar battleship is obsolete. And even 22,000 or 50,000 ton monsters a little torpedo boat may, with its vicious wasp-like sting, send to the bottom in a moment. Why build these costly and dangerous toys? What an expensive game the nations are playing at when they play at war! Our six 16,000 ton fleet will represent not less than $30,000,000. How much better this money spent on merchant marine, or on good roads; and better still, on education or missions! We have only ten colleges and universities in the United States with an endowment equal to the cost of the Louisiana; and the total amount given for missions by all Protestant Christendom would not equal the expenditure for four of these great machines for the butchery of men; and the whole annual income of all the colleges and universities in the United States would not amount to the sum paid by this Christian land for this single fleet of six battleships, which in less than six years will be out of date, and which at best seem to be used for spectacular purposes, and the rest of the time are engaged in running aground, or running into each other. We rank third to-day among the naval powers of the world, only France and Great Britain surpassing us.

"Si vis pacem, para bellum" is as foolish and false a motto as the devil ever invented. It is a foolish inheritance, a damnosa haereditas which is a relic of barbarism. A bad principle is far worse than

Some Early Attempts Toward Union

By B. B. Tyler

It seems to me that the present is a good time, and that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a good place. in which to jot down a few facts in respect to the attempts of Christians toward union with each other for aggressive work, during the last one hundred years.

Barton W. Stone and other persons like-minded organized a congregation of believers in Christ for worship, for mutual edification, and for active service, evangelistic in character, at Cane Ridge, Bourbon county, Kentucky, June 28, 1804—a Christian church without prefix or affix. The name Christian seemed to the parties interested to be a sufficient designation and the Holy Bible appeared to them to be a sufficient guide book; the organization was completed without a formal statement of theological belief, their faith was a simple belief of the universally accepted facts of the Gospel with a simple confidence in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and an all sufficient Savior. The organization of this congregation on this evangelical and catholic basis was one of the results of the great Cane Ridge revival in August, 1801. Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians co-operated in this meeting. But certain self-constituted guardians of orthodoxy, as set forth by the historic Westminster Assembly, complained that "the doctrines of the standards" were neglected in the preaching of the revivalists, members of and representing the Presbyterian denomination, namely, Robert Marshall, John Dunlavy, Richard McNemar, B. W. Stone and John Thompson. McNemar was tried by the Presbytery. The case later came before the Synod in a meeting of this body held in Lexington, Ky. Mr. Stone says, in his autobiography, that "in a short recess of the Synod, we five withdrew to a private garden, where, after prayer for direction, and a free conference, with a perfect unanimity, we drew up a protest against the proceedings in McNemar's case and a declaration of our independence, and our withdrawal from their jurisdiction, but not from their communion." This movement, and the organization of this church at Cane Ridge, were in the interest of peace. Surely, they thought, no one can object to a person who desires to be simply and only a Christian! A monument ought to be erected on the spot, in Lexington, where Barton Stone and his four friends, in a private garden, committed themselves, and their cause, in prayer, to God. Then and there the great Christian union movement began for the promotion of which, in part, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST exists. The place where an event so important in the history of American Christianity took place deserves to be marked by a granite monument. This was the first congregation of believers that can be certainly identified as one of "our churches." Its organization was an important step in the direction of a vital Christian union.

The next step in the same direction was the organization of the Christian Association of Washington, Pa., in the year 1809. Thomas Campbell, at the time a minister in the Presbyterian Church, was the inspiring and controlling spirit in this organization. The aim of Mr. Campbell was to find a basis for co-operation in supplying the destitute people with the Word of life. The purpose of the Christian Association was to give the divine message, in print and orally, to the people of the then thinly settled west "without attempting to inculcate anything of human authority, of private opinion, or inventions of men, as having any place in the constitution, faith or worship of the Christian Church, or anything as matter of faith or duty, for which there can not be expressly produced a 'Thus saith the Lord,' either in express terms, or by approved precedent." A "Declaration and Address" were issued in which the principles and purposes of the association were set forth and explained at length. The following quotations are from the "Declaration": "This society by no means considers itself a church nor does at all assume to itself powers peculiar to such a society." "This society is formed for the sole purpose of promoting simple evangelical Christianity." The "Address" issued with the "Declaration" is a tender and earnest appeal to those who believe in Christ to live in love and unity, and to be satisfied with the religion of the New Testament in its fundamental facts, truths, principles, precepts, promises and appointments. This was a distinctively Christian union movement with a definite program. It is not necessary to tell the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to what the movements here spoken of have grown.

The increasing desire for union is seen in the organization of associations, or societies, for the purpose of printing and distributing the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures without note or comment.

The British and Foreign Bible Society was organized in London, in 1804, and the American Bible Society, in New York, in 1816. Previous to 1804 eight small societies, in Great Britain, had been engaged in publishing and distributing Bibles. The avowed purpose of the British and Foreign Bible Society was the distribution of the Sacred Writings of Christians, first in the English dominions, and then, according to its ability, in other countries—Christian, Mohammedan, and pagan. The constitution of the American Bible Society declares its purpose to be "a wider circulation of the Hoy Scriptures without note or comment." This organization was preceded by probably fifty or sixty similar societies, local in their efforts and influence. In the organization of the American Bible Society representatives were present from the following Churches: Baptist, Congregational, Reformed Dutch, Methodist Episcopal, Protestant Episcopal, Presbyterian, and the Society of Friends. This was, in fact, a most important Christian union movement and it has wrought incalculably in bringing the Disciples of the Great Teacher into a closer fellowship. Christians of various theological creeds, ecclesiastical customs, and names, were brought into partnership for a worthy purpose. When it became known on the other side of the Atlantic that the American Bible Society had been organized the fact brought from the British and Foreign Bible Society expressions of congratulation and the offer of a contribution of five hundred pounds sterling to aid in the good work.

a bad fact. "Upon few maxims of worldly wisdom has God more indelibly impressed the stamp of folly and of falsehood," says John Jay, "than that 'to preserve peace we must prepare for war.'" Preparations for war are provocatives of war. Statistics show the nations having the larger armies have less peace. Had not Napoleon been at the head of 400,000 men he could never have thought of attacking Germany. "Are you ready?" asked General McClellan, of Von Moltke, in Berlin, just before the struggle began. "Never more so," was the reply. "The only difficulty is to get our king to declare war, so as to give us the initiative." In time of peace cultivate the arts of peace is better sense and better religion and better philosophy. If you wish for peace disarm, and peace will be.

THE LITTLE WIDOW

A Mighty Good Sort of Neighbor to Have.

"A little widow, a neighbor of mine, persuaded me to try Grape-Nuts when my stomach was so weak that it would not retain food of any other kind," writes a grateful woman, from San Bernardino Co., Cal.

"I had been ill and confined to my bed with fever and nervous prostration for three long months after the birth of my second boy. We were in despair until the little widow's advice brought relief.

"I liked Grape-Nuts food from the beginning, and in an incredibly short time it gave me such strength that I was able to leave my bed and enjoy my three good meals a day. In 2 months my weight increased from 95 to 113 pounds, my nerves had steadied down and I felt ready for anything. My neighbors were amazed to see me gain so rapidly and still more so when they heard that Grape-Nuts alone had brought the change.

"My 4-year-old boy had eczema, very bad, last spring and lost his appetite entirely, which made him cross and peevish. I put him on a diet of Grape-Nuts, which he relished at once. He improved from the beginning, the eczema disappeared and now he is fat and rosy, with a delightfully soft, clear skin. The Grape-Nuts diet did it. I will willingly answer all inquiries." # The Heathen's Reproach to Christendom

By STEPHEN J. COREY

What a keen arraignment of our neglect to send the Gospel to unevangelized lands is that of the heathen themselves! A. C. Thompson in his book of foreign missions gives us some striking examples.

Sechele, chief of the Bakwains, said to Livingstone: "All my forefathers have passed away into darkness without knowing anything of what was to befall them; how is it that your forefathers, knowing all these things, did not send word to my forefathers sooner?" Pretty hard question, is it not?

At a public gathering of natives in South India, after a missionary had read part of a tract on the Gospel, the men interrupted by asking: "It is now the fourth age of the world and never till the missionaries came here did we hear of this religion. Where has it been all of this time? Who and how many are its followers? Where do they live? If it was intended for us why have we not known it before? Have all our ancestors who have died without it gone to hell?" When told that most of the people in America and Europe were professing Christians, one of them exclaimed: "What! And suffer us to go to hell so many ages without coming to tell us about it? What kind of religion is that?" It does not square very well with Christ's golden rule, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also to them," does it?

A missionary to the Sandwich Islands recounts an incident during a great Sunday school rally in Hilo. Thousands of children were present in holiday dress, decorated with beautiful garlands of flowers. An aged woman was seen in great distress, beating her breast and wailing with grief. When asked why she was so distressed on such a happy occasion, she answered: "Why didn't the missionaries come before? These hands are stained with the blood of twelve children, and not one remains of my flesh to rejoice here to-day! Oh, why did not the missionaries come before?" Ah, what a reproachful interrogation! Will those who neglect to send out the blessing they have so freely received be held guiltless?

A Hottentot on visiting England said to the officers of the London Missionary Society, in her broken English: "What pity 'tis, what sin 'tis, that you have so many years got that heavenly bread and hold it for yourselves, not to give one little bit, one crumb, to poor heathen! There are so many millions of heathen and you have so much bread; and you could depend upon it you should not have less because you gave; but the Lord Jesus would give his blessing, and you should have more." Brethren, do you not hear the cry from hundreds of millions of throats—the cry for bread—the famishing cry of those without God and without hope! And we who have bread, if we keep it but for ourselves, we are monsters of ingratitude. Can we, when out there we hear the bitter cry,

"A voice crying in the night,
A voice crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry," fail to go or send?

The Teachings of the Fathers on the Holy Spirit and Prayer

By J. P. DAVIS

I. Alexander Campbell's Teaching.

The greatest of the fathers of the "current reformation," was Alexander Campbell; he was the Nestor of Sandy Pylos among his brethren; and such Walter Scott called him.

I select some of his utterances from his numerous written works, and first from "The Christian System."

"He now proposes to put his Holy Spirit within us to furnish us for the good fight of faith and to anoint us as the sons and heirs of God."

"It is promised to them that believe in him and obey him. These it actually and powerfully assists in the mighty struggle for eternal life."

"Therefore it is the duty and the work of Christians 'to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord.' This requires aid. Hence assistance is to be prayed for; and it is promised."

"The Holy Spirit is then the author of all our holiness and in the struggle after victory over sin and temptation 'it helps our infirmities,' and comforts us by seasonably bringing to our remembrance the promise of Christ, and 'strengthens us with might in the inner man.' God 'gives his Holy Spirit to them who ask him,' according to his revealed will; and without this gift no one could be saved or ultimately triumph over all opposition.

"He knows but little of the deceitfulness of sin or of the combating of temptation who thinks himself competent to wrestle against the allied forces of the world, the flesh and the devil. Hence the necessity of 'supplication, deprecations, intercessions and thanksgivings,' of praying always with all prayer, and supplications in the Holy Spirit."

"And when through repentance and baptism we have assumed him as our righteous sovereign, by his Holy Spirit, in answer to our prayers, he works in us and by us, and for us, all that is needful to our present spiritual and eternal salvation."

Here is an admonition we should heed when selecting officers. "It is indeed the Holy Spirit and not the congregation which creates Bishops and Deacons. The Spirit gives the qualifications both natural and acquired."

In an address to Christians he says: "And now you find yourselves under the great advocate to intercede for you."

Again he exclaims: "But this pouring out of the influences, this renewing of the Holy Spirit is as necessary as the bath of regeneration to the salvation of the soul. The Holy Spirit is shed on us richly through Jesus Christ our Savior."

In a reply to Andrew Broadus he said: "But that there is a living divine agent, giving life and energy to the Word, and actually operating on the soul, is, in my view, a truth which forms one of the glorious peculiarities of the religion of Jesus."

To S. W. Lynd he said: "It is enough to know that the Holy Spirit has been promised and that we are commanded to ask for it."

To J. W. Peck he wrote: "We ought to teach Christians to pray for the Spirit in all its holy influences, and to lift up their voices to the Lord for all his promised aid."

In the "Christian Baptist" he wrote: "The influences of the Spirit as the Spirit of all goodness were felt and realized by all the primitive saints and are now felt by all true believers."

In the debate with N. L. Rice he said: "In how many other ways the Spirit of God may operate in nature, or in society, in the way of dreams, visions and miracles, comes not within the premises contained in our proposition. To what extent he may operate in suggestions, special providences, or in any other way is neither affirmed nor denied in the proposition before us."

"I have indeed no faith in conversion by the Word without the Spirit, nor by the Spirit without the Word. The Spirit is ever present with the Word in conversion and sanctification."

"The man who represents me as opposed to a spiritual religion and to the operations, converting and sanctifying, of the Holy Spirit, does me the highest injustice, and blackens my good name in a way he must answer for to a higher tribunal."

WORKS WITHOUT FAITH

Faith Came After the Works Had Laid the Foundation.

A Bay State belle talks thus about coffee:

"While a coffee drinker I was a sufferer from indigestion and intensely painful nervous headaches, from childhood.

"Seven years ago my health gave out entirely. I grew so weak that the exertion of walking, if only a few feet, made it necessary for me to lie down. My friends thought I was marked for consumption—weak, thin and pale.

"I realized the danger I was in and tried faithfully to get relief from medicines, till, at last, after having employed all kinds of drugs, the doctor acknowledged that he did not believe it was in his power to cure me.

"While in this condition a friend induced me to quit coffee and try Postum Food Coffee, and I did so without the least hope that it would do me any good. I did not like it at first, but when it was properly made I found it was a most delicious and refreshing beverage, I am especially fond of it served at dinner ice-cold, with cream.

"In a month's time I began to improve, and in a few weeks my indigestion ceased to trouble me, and my headache stopped entirely. I am so perfectly well now that I do not look like the same person, and I have so gained in flesh that I am 15 pounds heavier than ever before.

"This is what Postum has done for me. I still use it and shall always do so." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A Christian College in China

By F. E. Meigs

We are anxious, at this particular time, that our friends in the homeland shall know all about this institution. It is now, and is likely to be for some time, the only college of the church in China. It has done a good work but nothing commensurate with the wide influence and growing popularity of our movement in the United States. It ought to be made the pride of our brotherhood, and we are beginning to believe that our constituency is coming to think the same thing. Within the last three years they have opened their hearts and furnished the means for enlargement, and within the same time two able men, in the persons of C. S. Settlemeyer and Prof. C. T. Paul, have been sent out to engage in work in this institution. I have been led to write this letter as a result of a conversation with Professor Paul at the time of his arrival. He said he came out to the field to work in Christian College, but as a matter of fact he had only a very inadequate knowledge of the history of this institution, and that he had failed to find anybody who really knew much about it. I was astonished at his statement. I had supposed enough had been written, and told from public platform, to give the whole brotherhood a good knowledge of what we are, and of what we expect to be.

Nankin college was founded about sixteen years ago. At that time opening schools in China was quite a different matter from what it is at the present time. There was a great deal of prejudice against foreign schools, and it was difficult to get students to attend them. It could not be done unless special inducements were offered. It was the custom of all missions opening schools in the earlier years, to give free board and tuition. In this way, if we were particular to give students plenty of good food, they could be secured, and with some difficulty retained for a number of years. The times have changed, so that now students seek us instead of our seeking them, and they are willing to pay, up to the limit of their ability, for both board and tuition. China is at last awake to the necessity of having good schools, and as the mission schools are, so far, the best schools, there is no difficulty in filling them to overflowing.

This institution has moved on in face of all of the difficulties, with only a meager support, and in cramped premises, and in the face of it all has done a work which we are by no means ashamed of. We have graduated quite a number of students—15—the large majority of whom are a credit to the church and their own people, most of whom are engaged in religious work. Besides these, it may be said that the school has a widely extended and wholesome influence. Six of our graduates were granted official rank by the present Viceroy of Nankin. This means that those in authority recognize the institution as a wholesome influence among the people. We have ever kept alive the spirit of evangelism among the students, and there is a desire on the part of those who are for any considerable length of time under our influence, to take Christianity to their people.

A great deal of patience has been required to enable us to keep right on in this work in the face of all of the difficulties, but we have done so and now we can rejoice in the bright prospect. This institution is the hope of our work in China, in the way of supplying educated men for the evangelistic work. How often has it been said, and it can not be repeated too often, that China must in the end be evangelized by her own people. It is equally as true in China as anywhere else, that educated, spiritually minded men are a necessity to the most rapid and most substantial building up of the church. For a long time, it was thought by many, and still this is true of some, that school work is not a necessity to the evangelization of China. That chimera has gone forever. There is not a mission in China to-day that has not stopped crying out against schools, and is not now going in for school work. Some people at home still do a little sputtering over what they call the lack of the evangelistic spirit among the missionaries, but this is getting beautifully less each year.

The course in the Nankin Christian College is what may be styled a strong high school course. The mathematical course comprises all of the usual branches as far as trigonometry and plain surveying. In physics and chemistry one and one-half years is employed in the ordinary experiments of these branches and in laboratory work. Besides these branches are taught the usual branches that go with them in our schools at home. Then we have every day work in Bible study and in Chinese. Most of the work is done in the Chinese language. English is taught as an accomplishment, as French and German are taught in the home schools.

What is proposed now is a thorough course in Bible history, Church history, and the other branches that will fit those who desire to preach the Gospel to do efficient work. This course will be open to the graduates from the college. At the present time the school is mainly supported by the mission, but much more is done by the pupils themselves than formerly. We are now collecting $135 Mexican per month from students. The cost per month for board is $2 Mexican. A Mexican dollar is equal to a little less than one half dollar gold at present. Thus you will see that the board bill of 65 students is paid from the receipts. Besides this, an additional sum of about $100 per month is necesary for teachers' salaries and incidentals. The salaries of the missionaries are of course paid by the society. But we are, as we have said, improving in this line, and it is confidently believed that in the near future the receipts on the field will meet the running expenses exclusive of the salaries of missionaries.

I am glad to be able to announce that the spirit of union is in the air, especially in the line of school work. The Presbyterians have approached us proposing to unite their college with ours. A committee was appointed by their annual meeting this year to confer with us on the subject, and as soon as we can get a committee this conference will take place, and there is strong hope that we shall be able to agree upon a basis of union. If this can be accomplished, we shall be able to build up a school here that will be indeed a great institution. It is also within the range of possibility that there may be a union of all of the mission schools in Nankin. If this can be accomplished it will be a wonderful advance in the direction of the evangelization of China. Of course these steps will have to be approved by the church at home before they can be carried into effect, but we are confident that what we do will meet the approval of the home churches. I wish it were possible for us to make you feel the importance of this work as we, who are face to face with the needs of this people, feel it. I have said that they are now awake to the necessity of good schools. This is true, but the statement needs explanation. They, as a people, have not the remotest idea of going in for schools that shall teach the principle of morality as a basis of manhood, much less do they want Christian schools. The politicians have come to see that they can not drive out the hated foreigner, so they wish to head him off from getting control in China. In other words these schools are opened in self-defense. We sympathize with them in their desire to retain China for the Chinese, but we must in some way influence the thought of China in the direction of moral reform as well as educational reform. If we are to do this we must be in the lead with institutions of learning that will impress them with the superiority of Christian thought and civilization. The time is at hand. We can not delay or we shall be left behind. There are many of the leading men of China who believe in our work. We must hold their confidence by going right ahead with our institutions of learning, making them equal in the way of equipment, and superior in teaching force, turning out men who will become leaders among the people. We can do this if we delay not. We may have our great preachers among this people if we will come up to the help of the Lord now in the founding of a great Bible college right here in Nankin. Do not be carried away with the abnormal idea of a rapid spreading out and thus defeat the very end that must be accomplished before our spreading will count much for the upbuilding of the kingdom of our Lord. We must have men full of wisdom and of the Holy Spirit. There is only one way to get them. The Holy Spirit in these days does not give the ability to speak in an unknown tongue. God expects us to use our means to bestow the wisdom and the power within our reach, and then he will do the rest. Ignoramuses can not preach in this or any other country. It is a very nice sentiment to have, that the man who believes may just open his mouth and the Lord will fill it, but it does not work in case the individual has made no effort to fill his own mouth. I have never believed in the policy of "scatteration" at home or anywhere else, when the "scatteration" has not been based upon the principles of common sense. We need to concentrate our thought and our money and our effort on at least one great institution of learning in China, and when it has begun to do its work in a proper way, then we shall be prepared to scatter to some advantage. We must evangelize China. We must have a great institution to train evangelists. We are all interested in this work. We pray for it. Let us believe in it and show our faith by our works.

Our Budget.

—All hands now to the March offering!

—If the storm, or any other cause, prevented the proper observance of Education Day, follow it up at the first favorable time. Often by a little personal work, or the seeing of a few personal friends, a life member, a regular member, could be added to the Educational Association or a liberal offering secured. Leave nothing undone to make this year memorable in large gifts to our colleges.

—Read J. P. Davis' quotations from Alexander Campbell on the subject of the Holy Spirit and Prayer. It is wonderful how fully he agrees with The Christian-Evangelist! It will be seen, when Brother Davis has completed these quotations, who have departed from the fathers of this Reformation—the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist or his critics.

the Christian Church, but some of them with "anti" tendencies. There have been four additions to the organization since Brother Haner went there.

—The welcome of E. P. Wise by the church at Liverpool, O., has been cordial and he reports the outlook there as promising. It will be remembered that he closed his ministry with the Cedar Avenue Church, Cleveland, Ohio, after four years of service, with the going out of the old year.

—A. M. Hootman has been employed by the Lowell, Ind., Christian church as pastor for the coming year, and his wife as associate pastor, both for their full time. Brother Hootman is making a reputation as a lecturer, as well as a preacher. His wife is a valuable assistant in his work.

—In a letter from Professor W. B. Taylor, of Bethany College, he writes: "Our matriculation will easily come over 250 this winter term of school." Good for old Bethany! We are all interested in her success and rejoice at her steady growth under her present able management.

—The meeting at Portsmouth, Ohio, held by W. E. Harlow, has, we believe, broken all records in the number of additions in one day. Lord's day one week ago, 102 were added, 75 of them being by confession. No wonder Brother Harlow exclaims, "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised"!

—J. M. Van Horn writes that the new church building at South Framingham, Mass., has just been dedicated, Brother Van Horn preaching the sermon. He reports that the amount raised was nearly $100 more than was asked for and the little mission church feels assured of future success. H. H. Cushing is the pastor.

—Interest in the cause of home missions grows, we are glad to say. We hear of a personal gift of $100 and a bequest of $1,000 last week, and this week notice of a legacy from an estate in New England. Gifts to this great cause lay sure foundations for all our missionary enterprises and guarantee an increasing interest in every benevolence.

—J. W. Harrison has located with the church at Waterville, Kan. The condition of things at Waterville is not the brightest, but Brother Harrison hopes to improve them by the practice of patience, love and work. We regret that Sister Harrison had pleurisy so that on her recent visit to Columbia, Mo., it was necessary for her to go to the hospital.

—Joplin is gettting ready for the foreign missionary rally which will be held at the First Church, February 6. It is hoped to have a greater meeting than last year, which will make it a great one indeed. Ministers and churches in reach of Joplin are invited and urged to be there at 10 in the morning until 4 in the evening. Luncheon will be served.

—George Ringo, who recently resigned the pastorate at Riverside, Cal., has accepted a call to Ocean Park, which is a small, discouraged, and property-less church. Brother Ringo evidently feels that faith and hard work will lead this congregation into a better building than where it now meets, in an upstairs hall, disturbed from time to time by the noise of a bowling alley or a brass band.

—Clarence E. Wagner sent out a very admirable new year's greeting to the members of his church at Shelbyville, Mo. A text was selected beginning with every letter of the alphabet and these were printed on the leaflet after the pastor's greeting. The last page contains some particulars of the church's work during the past year. Every department seems to be going forward with a vim.

SQUABS

—J. V. Coombs has carried forward his work at San Jose Cal., so successfully that the official board of the church has not only voted to undertake the erection of a new house of worship in the near future, but has increased the salary of Brother Coombs by $250 a year. The statement that one of our brethren had decided to give $6,000 for a special evangelistic campaign, overlooked the fact that Brother Coombs only recently settled in this pastorate where he has proven so successful

—The official board of our church at Jefferson City, Mo., has just been reorganized. New committees were appointed to look after all departments of the work of the congregation, and the outlook for the new year is said to be promising. E. B. Widger, who has had successful pastorates at La Porte and Columbus, Ind., has recently been called and is giving great satisfaction. At the regular Sunday evening service on last Lord's day the church auditorium was filled to its utmost seating capacity.

—Isom Roberts, of Blackwell, Okla., and Miss Katherine Hinde were united in marriage at the residence of Dr. Hinde in Mexico, Mo., January 11. The ceremony was performed by C. C. Caman, of the Methodist church, of which the bride is a member, assisted by A. W. Kokendoffer. Brother Roberts is a Missouri boy, having served the church at Marceline acceptably for several years. His many friends will congratulate him on winning this accomplished young woman, whose mother was a pupil of Winthrop Hopson.

—W. M. Taylor sends us a brief note from Salt Lake City, stating that since taking up his work there in October there were fourteen additions up to December 20. As this is a very hard, yet important, mission field even small gains are the cause of joy and thanksgiving. Brother Taylor writes warmly about the work of the Oliphant sisters who, it will be remembered, were baptized by Charles R. Scoville during his recent meeting in Oakland, Cal. They were with Brother Taylor for a two weeks' service of "Gospel in song and story."

—An evangelistic institute, under the direction of W. J. Wright began at Drake University on Monday and is to conclude January 26. The great revival in progress at the Central Christian Church, in which H. O. Breeden is being assisted by J. V. Updike and H. A. Easton, is proving a school of practical methods in evangelism in connection with the theory set forth in the daily sessions of the institute. Among those taking part, besides those named, are: J. H. O. Smith, C. S. Medbury, B. S. Denny, Sherman Kirk, D. R. Dungan, A. M. Haggard, Walter Stairs, and A. D. Veatch.

—The corner stone of a new Christian church at Walla Walla, Wash., was recently laid, the ceremonies being conducted by the Masons, Brother Gregory, the pastor of the church, being Grand Chaplain of that order. He took occasion to say a brief and pertinent word as to the place occupied by the Disciples of Christ among some three hundred different religious organizations in the United States. The mayor of that city, acting as Grand Orator, made a very admirable address, pointing out some of the beliefs of the Masons that are thoroughly in harmony with those of the Christian Churches, and he expressed the hope that the new building would be the center from which would radiate consolation and blessing.

—John S. Zeran, of Farmington, Mo., was ordained to the ministry, January 10, by Edward Owers, assisted by Evangelist E. B. Barnes, and Clarence E. Dunkleberger, of Flat River, Mo. It is the purpose of Brother Zeran to devote his life to preaching the Gospel, but for some months, in company with Mrs. Zeran, he will enter the field as an evangelistic singer. Both have excellent voices, are trained musicians, and sing the Gospel with power. Their hearts are in the work, so much so that Brother Zeran gave up a profitable business in answer to what he believed to be the call of the Master.

—Referring to our paragraph, "In the Interest of Justice," the "Christian Standard" sees "no occasion for the introduction of any committee." It is, however, "prepared to publish these names on demand"—that is, the names of state board officials and of the publishing company—"and give the parties in question the opportunity to publicly deny the allegation." Very well; if the "Christian Standard" has space in its columns to conduct a discussion of this kind rather than have a committee to sift the facts and report results, let it publish the names of the parties incriminated, and hold itself open for the defense of those whom it has indirectly charged with wrongdoing. We have no space for such an investigation in our columns.

—"Do please stop this quarreling with the 'Christian Standard.' I really think it is making more infidels than all the Ingersolls that ever were or will be. I humbly pray for the union of all God's people, but when we are quarreling within ourselves what must we expect the world to think of us?" So writes a subscriber. But, really, he takes the matter much too seriously. There is no "quarreling." We are simply trying to show our Cincinnati contemporary that it is pursuing a wrong course, and one at will prove very injurious to our cause persisted in, as well as to itself. What etter proof of our love for our neighbor ould we give than this? THE CHRISTIAN-VANGELIST, at least, is writing in a most aternal spirit, and in the interest of peace nd good will among the brotherhood. If e were doing this service for an editor another religious body, no objection ould be raised. Shall we love our own rethren less?

—We are glad to know that Edgar D. ones, of Cleveland, who has been a "shut-" for about a month, hopes to be soon in e harness again. In the "Circle Index," e church's local leaflet, the pastor tenders e thanks of himself and wife for the many indnesses extended to them by the members of the congregation. He says:

"It was the 'bard of Avon' who wrote, Sweet are the uses of adversity,' and we now there are 'tongues in trees, books in unning brooks, sermons in stones and ood in everything.' This was the most erious sickness of the pastor's life and ame at a time when he could ill afford to y aside his work, and yet it hath its ompensations. None but a wooden man ould be unmoved by such expressions of ve and concern as have come from this urch to the pastor and his wife." John . Pounds supplied for Brother Jones three undays. The evangelistic services which e pastor was to conduct during January have, of course, been postponed for everal weeks.

—The letter which we publish elsewhere from Dr. Dye, of Bolengi, Africa, ill be read, we are sure, with sympathetic terest by all our readers. A religious ody that can send out and sustain in the eld missionaries having the spirit of heroism and self-sacrifice manifested by these issionaries in Africa, and elsewhere in the oreign field, gives to the world the best vidence of the reality of its claims and he genuineness of its faith. We hope our ome churches will compare their missionry activities with those of the native Church in Africa, which, having a hundred members, sustains ten missionaries r evangelists to spread the work! Such n example ought to shame our rich and dle churches into vastly greater sacrifices or the promotion of the kingdom. It is ot strange that people who have never eached the conception that Christ demands acrifices now for the triumph of his kinglom should criticise missionaries like Dr Dye and his wife, who are willing to give p for the time home and children, that hey may preach the glorious Gospel of the race of God in "Darkest Africa." They re entitled, however to our love and our rayers, rather than criticism. The Lord will not be unmindful of such faith and eroism in the day when he comes to make p his jewels.

Illinois Seventh District.

The churches in the seventh missionary district of Illinois are beginning to take on renewed life and activity, under the proficient leadership of an able ministry. We are encouraging the four years' campaign movement. There are a few preachers that have not all their time occupied; also, some churches that have no minister and some churches that have not held their meetings. If these will write me I will try to assist them. Six additions since last report.

"A Light unto All Peoples."

BROTHER KINCAID: I have been greatly interested in the church at Hot Springs. It has been the most self-sacrificing and heroically determined little church I ever knew. It deserves the most enthusiastic support of the Disciples everywher . May complete success soon crown its determined devotion. Its success has a significance other than that which belongs to the local field. It is strategically situated. It is truly a "light unto all peoples." It can "speak to the nations at home." There is no better spot in the United States to "sound out" the way of the Lord. Hot Springs is a good place to preach to New Yorkers, to Canadians, to Chicagoans, and even to Europeans. It is a home mission field of wide opportunity. Our people ought not to hesitate a moment to quickly and adequately furnish it with the necessary means with which to do a magnificent work. Every Disciples in the land ought to be interested in it to the extent of at least 50 cents. Some ought to invest $1,000 in it. You deserve every encouragement and success for your personal devotion to the cause there. I hope soon to see your efforts rewarded.

J. N. JESSUP.

A Good Suggestion.

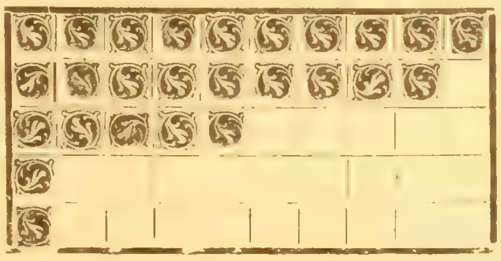
Brother Muckley's suggestion that two hundred send us ten dollars each is a good one. There ought to be two hundred brethren and sisters among the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, after having read the recommendation of the work at Hot Springs made by Brothers Garrison, Breeden, Smith and Muckley, who could give ten dollars each. The problem is how to get two hundred who will each send the ten dollars; and there is but one way, and that is for you to be one of the two hundred. We can not report names and amounts any longer in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, for the want of space. The list has grown out of all proportions. It would take half a page to make the report this week. We are sending a receipt to each one who sends us a remittance. We thank all of our friends who have kindly remembered us, and appeal to those who have not to get in the rally at once. We have reached the half-way mark. We will take up a $500 note this week. We have $250 in good pledges. This leaves us now but $2,250 to raise by April 1. It can be done, and must be done.



Address all remittances to T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark.

Acknowledgment.

I wish to acknowledge the receipt of several hundred letters from my friends scattered over the United States expressing their appreciation of my work and wishing myself and family well in the future.

To all these friends I beg leave to express the thanks of our hearts. We appreciate more than we can tell these words and shall cherish them and read these letters to our children in the coming years.

My plans are not fully formed as yet, but I have several matters under advisement.

The acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society has appointed Bro. W. J. Wright secretary pro tem., and all matters pertaining to home missions should be addressed to the American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

I want to commend this work of home missions to the love and support of every friend who desires to advance the cause of our Lord and King.

With heartfelt thanks for the appreciation of my friends, I am your brother in his service.

Our Centennial Program for Church Extension.

1. To have every minster that believes in organized missionary work enlisted to secure an offering each year from his congregation or congregations during the next four years that the churches may have their part in raising the million dollar church extension fund by October, 1909.

2. To have every Endeavor Society contributing something each year in order to the creation of a large "Y. P. S. C. E. named loan fund for church extension." All Endeavor offerings from societies, as such, will go into this special fund.

3. To increase our annuity fund to at least $300,000 by October, 1909. The annuity fund amounted to $180,000 on January 1, 1906.

4. To increase the number of our named loan funds to at least fifty. We now have fifteen.

5. To secure at least $100,000 from individual gifts aside from annuities.

6. To have every homeless mission housed by October, 1909.

G. W. Muckley.

This is in accordance with the request of our Centennial Committee that our various enterprise fix a definite mark to be reached by our centennial in 1909. The above is entirely reasonable and practicable. It is not expected that an offering will be made now, but the board wants the churches to know what its program is, that they may plan to carry it out.

Old Folks' Home Dedication.

With most beautiful and impressive services the large addition to the Old Folks' Home conducted under the auspices of our National Benevolent Association at Jacksonville, Ill., was dedicated on Monday last.

The principal address was by J. H. Garrison, of The Christian-Evangelist, and consisted of an exposition of Paul's "And now abideth faith, hope, and love, but the greatest of these is love," with special application to the philanthropic ministries of our churches. His message was spoken extempore and will probably never be reproduced, but it lifted the great audience, thronging parlors, halls, corridors and porches, up into the very atmosphere of that heavenly home, that building of God not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

The memory of our hearts' glow, and the visions of an earth life abounding with divine love and of an eternity of the reign of love, will be a priceless possession to all who heard and saw.

Brief addresses were made by the national president, Mrs. T R. Ayars, the corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, and Geo. L. Snively, who was pastor of the church when the original home was dedicated five years ago.

R. F. Thrapp, pastor of the local church, whose remarkable success there is one of the prophecies of a great centennial at Pittsburg, was master of ceremonies and pronounced the dedicatory prayer, C. A. Burton, of Franklin, J. W. Carpenter, of Virginia, and C. E. French, of Ashland, were among the visiting ministers who contributed much to the felicities of the occasion.

The Home itself is a lovely retreat for aged Disciples who have come to fulness of years rich in faith, but poor in this world's wealth. At least thirty can be well cared for at all times. They have individual rooms, well lighted and supplied with all the modern conveniences for health and comfort. Majestic forest trees and in the summer beautiful flowers adorn the spacious lawns The people of the city, regardless of religious affiliations, are lavish in their ministries of love and thoughtfulness upon the beloved guests of our churches there.

Space prevents fitting tributes to the worth and works of the president, Mrs. S. D. Osborne, and her close advisers, Mrs. W. L. Fay, Mrs. F. J. Andrews, the Dinsmores and John R. Loar, who superintended the building, and a multitude of other faithful Disciples of "Him who went about everywhere doing good," and made possible this splendidly equipped $25,000 Home that is one of the glorious achievements of church co-operation. S.

To Be Noted.

In these days of approach to the March offering for foreign missions there are certain things we believe should be especially noted and emphasized:

1. That the offering will amount to little or much according to the time and pains expended in the preparation.

2. That the campaign for a great enlargement in foreign missions is a part of the "Four Years' Campaign" culminating in the centennial in Pittsburg, 1909. And let it not be forgotten for a moment that the returns from the March offering will be a fair measure of the interest we are to take in the general campaign.

3. We believe $300,000 will be raised this year for the work in the regions beyond. The first three months of the current missionary year shows a gain of nearly $11,000. We must gain $44,000 to reach the mark.

4. The cry that comes from India and Africa and the Philippine Islands especially for reinforcements is most urgent and pathetic. The work in these lands is all undermanned. We are suffering for equipment and workers in India. We have no homes for the missionaries in the Philippine Islands. The health and lives of our missionaries are imperiled. School buildings and chapels are most urgently needed. The hands of our eight missionaries in that land are tied for the want of proper facilities. Africa must be reinforced. Mrs. Royal J. Dye is now the only woman we have on the Congo, 700 miles from the coast, and she has been quite sick with fever. All our fields need additional help, but these appeal to us in thunder tones. Their cry is to us the voice of God.

5. Our giving is pitiably small. Only about twenty-five per cent of our people give anything. Last year two-thirds of our churches did not touch this work with the tips of their fingers. We are a rich people and growing rich at a rapid and prodigious rate. We can never be a really great people as long as we give in so small a way. Every church and individual must strive earnestly to lift the standard. Let us join hands in an effort to forge to the front.

6. Our March offering supplies are of an exceptionally high order this year. They are the best we have ever provided. We will send them free of charge. Your order should be sent at once to F. M. Rains, Box 884, Cincinnati, Ohio.

How are you fixed, brother preachers, on doing acceptable pastoral work and holding a pastorate for years and years at a time? If not so well, come to Alexandria, February 6, 7 and 8, where an expert, who has succeeded, will turn the whole secret wrong side outward before your eyes.

How are you fixed, brother preacher, on preparing for, and conducting a revival meeting? Learn at Alexandria.

One topic treated at the institute will be "After the revival is over, After the evangelist is gone." A successful follower of revivals will deal with this topic. Alexandria, February 6, 7 and 8.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

St. Louis City Missions.

The city mission board of St. Louis has just held its all day rally at the Union Avenue Christian Church. The attendance was rather small. The record of the churches shows that Hammett Place had sixty-one additions and raised about $4,000; Union Avenue, 141 additions, raised about $14,000 exclusive of building fund; Maplewood, 91 additions, raised $1,500; Carondelet, 41 additions, raised $1,000; Hamilton Avenue, 70 additions, raised over $2,600, and will dedicate a $35,000 church shortly, free from all debt; Second Church, 166 additions; Fourth, 75 additions, raised about $4,000; Compton Heights, 134 additions.

The treasurer's report shows that some $1,465 had been received from the churches and a few individuals, including a grant of $333 from the American Christian Missionary Society. The expenditure has exceeded this amount by $81. These figures do not include the fund for the purchase of a special lot upon which $473 had been paid, this amount being covered by collection of pledges made for this purpose.

At the evening meeting a call was made for $500 to be raised immediately to apply on the first year's payment on the lot, which is to cost over $2,700, but is purchased on time. The amount was soon raised in pledges of from $5 to $100. A building will be erected upon this lot just as soon as the way is made clear.

J. H. Hardin spoke some words of strong encouragement, and T. A. Abbott urged closer affiliation between the state work and the city work Brother Hardin also urged the establishing of Bible school institutes and the teacher-training department. The address of the president, G. A. Hoffmann, was a forceful presentation of St. Louis as a city mission field. W. J. Wright gave a practical talk and brought out very accurately some of the reasons why city mission work in St. Louis has not advanced more rapidly. He used a Chinaman's phrase to indicate that "talkee, talkee," is not what is needed, but "all doey." He pointed out that it was not until 1849 that our brotherhood seemed to have discovered the "go" part of the great commission, though they had been thirty years at work. He urged that we should not overlook the fact that the beginning was to be at Jerusalem. One reason for our failure in big cities is, he said, the fact that we have been far better advocates of Christian unity than we have been practitioners of the same. The original unity, he pointed out, touched all the body of Disciples in a given city, and if we are to succeed we must make all the Disciples today to feel a unity such as is felt by the firemen or policemen of a city. A solidarity of our own people is essential, and he pointed out how this fact effected the campaign in Pittsburg and western Pennsylvania, where all our churches feel like one great family. The solution of the problem of city missions, he said, is, after all, consecration to the Lord Jesus Christ.

The officers elected for the year were: President, George Snively; vice-president, J. H. Allen; secretary, E. B. Redd; treasurer, G. A. Hoffmann; auditor, W. H. McClain.

It was decided that there must be a closer co operation, and it was recommended that care should be taken to secure places already occupied before an advance is made in new locations.

The city churches have decided to hold a simultaneous evangelistic campaign in November.

Cincinnati Letter.

Welcome to the articles on "Christian union."

The new church at Columbia will be dedicated on Jan. 21, by F. M. Rains. H. C. Bowen, our city missionary, has labored persistently in this new field for more than a year. He has met with many discouragements, and had many obstacles to overcome, but he has always been hopeful, and now is to see the young church well housed. The building is of cement blocks, with audience room, basement and robing rooms. The whole property is worth about $6,000. Brother Bowen has been engaged by the city evangelistic board to continue with this work during 1906, that it may be fully established. Both he and his congregation are to be congratulated on their success during their labors together.

We are expecting greater things this year under the direction of our new district board, which constitutes our city evangelistic board. J. L. Hill is president, Justin N. Green, vice-president, and C. M. Fillmore, secretary and treasurer. Two business men will be added to this committee, and these five, together with the city missionary, will have in charge the aggressive work in the city. We hope a new church may be planted this year, and all our weaker churches strengthened.

A. M. Harvuot started a mission at Evanston last year. A comfortable tabernacle is used for their worship. The Sunday-school is growing, and during the campaign in the fall the church membership was doubled. Under the leadership of Brother Harvuot we no doubt will have a good church there within a few years.

Richmond Street Church is now without a minister, Bro. Howard Cramblet having gone to McKeesport, Pa., to take up the work there. During Brother Cramblet's ministry there a large number were added to the church. The best wishes of the Cincinnati brethren go with him to his new field.

All our churches and ministers are enjoying a splendid outlook and are laboring faithfully to glorify the Master.

W. G. LOUCKS.

A Voice from the Equator.

It has been our great comfort and joy to have THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST regularly this year. We have enjoyed your reports of the convention no little bit. They came just at an opportune time as Mrs. Dye was recovering from a most prostrating fever, and the newsy, descriptive articles and the full reports of addresses were a great cheer and comfort to the convalescent. You may be sure of the gratitude of the missionaries at least for the championing of the cause of allowance while at home. We have not told of our own personal experiences while at home on furlough from Africa. God will surely bless the movement to provide a home and education of our dear children at one of our colleges. It will lift a great burden of anxiety from the hearts of those who are compelled to leave them at home, to know they will have loving care and a good education to fit them for life's responsibilities. The Lord is doing wonders here with the small force on hand. Are there not others who are willing to give themselves for "Darkest Africa"? The joy of service here is great. The harvest is more than abundant. Many villages are calling for us to come to whom we can not go until the force is increased here. A large and dying population is open to us, and depends solely upon us for evangelism, in the nearby tributary of the Congo, the Bosira. The native church of 104 members supports ten of her own picked evangelists in the near and distant villages as teachers and itinerating evangelists. One in ten! Can any church in America show a like proportion? If with so scanty a missionary force such results can be obtained, should we not multiply our force at once? The evangelization of this part of Africa depends on us, as a people. Shall the many dying in degradation and sin continue to die without a knowledge of God's saving grace? It is not a matter of planting the primitive Gospel. They will get that as you send it, but it is a matter of there being no other Gospel.

There is danger to life here. There are what people call hardships. We must leave our children in the homeland and even be criticised for it. But there are souls dying. And the Lord says, "Go." And shall not the soldiers of the cross endure for perishing souls what traders risk for ivory and rubber? I did not intend to write so long as this, but my pen would not stop until I voiced the need of our Congo mission. God grant reinforcements may come ere it be too late. ### Des Moines Notes.

Drake University is opening the winter term very satisfactorily. The new Bible building is receiving the inside finishing and it is hoped to have part of it ready for use in February.

Prof. Clinton Lockhart, on a year's leave of absence from the university, and Pastor W. A. Webster, of the Ninth and Shaw Mission, sailed from New York, Jan. 9, for a tour in Palestine, and C. S. Medbury, of the University Church, will depart Jan. 29, and sail from New York, Feb. 8, on a like journey, in company with B. B. Tyler, F. D. Power, M. M. Davis, L. L. Carpenter, J. K. Hester and others. A rare treat, surely, to travel in such company and to walk together in the earthly footsteps of the Master.

H. O. Breeden and wife were recently treated to an elaborate celebration of the twentieth anniversary of his pastorate at the Central Church. The Central Church began a meeting Jan. 7, led by Updike and Easton; six additions the first Monday evening was not bad.

At the annual meeting of the University Church the actual membership was reported as 1,865, with a "reference" or "non-resident" roll of 700. The attendance at the Sunday school last Lord's day, not a special occasion at all, was 822. But the thought in mind in writing these "notes" is to show that our strength in Des Moines is not confined to the three great churches well known to the brotherhood, or to the great center of world-wide influence at Drake University. We have at the four extremes of the city—north, east, south and west—good congregations, each of which is probably wielding the dominating influence in its community.

In our northern suburb, at the seat of Highland Park College, now said to have 1,400 students enrolled, our mission of a few years' growth has become a stalwart church, with a good house of worship, a parsonage, about 150 members, and, like all the other points, the best preacher in the neighborhood—M. Lee Sorey, who is in his second year. Brother Sorey reports eight additions in the last two weeks.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

At the east end, by the state fair grounds, our Grant Park Church, with R. T. Maxey, also entering his second year, has about 200 members, a good property paid for, and is now putting in and paying for gas lights, a furnace and pews.

At the south, near Fort Des Moines, E. F. Boggess, the hero of "Boggess' ride," has just closed a very fruitful pastorate of three years with a most remarkable closing record. In the past month, aided by peculiar influences in the community, and with only four special services, there have been forty accessions, twenty-nine of them by baptism, including nine married men and the wives of eight of them. Much of the credit belongs to Mrs. Boggess who often fills the pulpit very acceptably. Two hundred were added in the three years, and the present membership is about 225, with all the auxiliaries active and flourishing, a good house and parsonage and a substantial class of people. F. D. Macy succeeds Brother Boggess.

At Valley Junction, a hustling railroad suburb at the west, L. F. McCray and wife have reared a fine monument to three years of self-sacrificing labor—a $10,000 property—and have a very strong influence in the town, and a congregation of about 125.

Brother McCray is trying to arrange for a good meeting this winter. J. M. Hoffman, Iowa's famous money raiser, has just completed the difficult task of clearing our mission properties of debt, which has long been an incubus on the work. Brother Hoffman has gone to California on an important mission for the national C. W. B. M. board.

January 4 witnessed the launching of the "Disciples' Club," after the style of the social union in Chicago and other places, and our people in Chicago will need to look to their laurels in that line. It is hoped that this movement, starting with the clearing up of old debts, will make our forces in Des Moines more effective for the promotion of work at home and abroad.

Kansas.

Kansas is to have a "Jubilee Year." It will be the year 1908, which will be the fiftieth anniversary of the organized mission work in the state. The pressure is to be kept on unceasingly, not only till the celebration of the jubilee, but until the centennial year, 1909. We are in co-operation with Brother Warren, the centennial secretary, so that the two campaigns will be carried on simultaneously and harmoniously.

The C. W. B. M. of Kansas made the best showing on C. W. B. M. day that has ever been made so far in the state. The number of societies reported and the amount of money raised was very gratifying. During the quarter there was a net increase of three in the number of auxiliaries.

Our state evangelists are at work. E. N. Phillips is at Oakland, having begun January 10. The meeting started off with good prospects. Brother Foltz and his workers are hopeful of good results. J. M. Lowe began at Agra January 7. There were five additions during the first five days. The outlook is promising. We are expecting to have the Bible school man at work before long. The board has been carefully scanning the field and hunting for the right man. We believe he is in sight now, but preparations are not complete for the announcement.

The demands upon our resources are steadily increasing with the employment of these three new workers. It is necessary that we urge the delinquent churches to pay their apportionments promptly in order to keep the board from falling behind on current expenses. Letters are now being sent to all churches that have not paid the apportionment for state work, and with these letters is enclosed a statement showing how the departments stand with reference to the state work. This will enable the pastor, or the one receiving the letter, to understand the entire situation, and thus bring the matter before the proper individuals. Soon other enterprises will clamor for attention. Attend to the apportionment for Kansas missions now.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Nebraska.

The state evangelists' meeting at Wymore resulted in 41 accessions. A new organization was effected and the church is in fine working order. An effort is being made to put a man in the field for full time, and if this can be done the church will be one of our active forces in a few years, if not immediately. Brother and Sister Whiston are at Table Rock with good audiences. From there they go to the northwest for several meetings.

The Peru church, under the ministry of J. D. Forsythe and the faithful support of the membership, has made fine progress, having doubled the membership since Oct. 1. The annual meeting was held New Year's day. This, as well as Wymore, is a mission point of the state board.

E. G. Rees reports six additions to the church at Blue Hill. They began a revival meeting with Mrs. Clara Hazelrigg, of Kansas, as preacher, on Dec. 31.

At the annual meeting of the church at Wakefield every department was reported in good shape. The aid society in this church is a most active organization. Thomas Rawlings was elected superintendent.

O. A. Adams is at Litchfield in an effort to establish a church there. A goodly number of additions is reported, and there are about twenty former members. An organization will be effected. Mrs. Floy Hormel is leading the music.

S. A. Kopp, of Magnet, was called back to Kent, Iowa, by the death of his mother at the age of 95 years. Brother Kopp had the pleasure of baptizing his mother when she was 78 years old, she having been a Methodist from early youth.

Raymond G. Aylsworth, son of the beloved chancellor of Cotner University, has resigned his place on the railroad as civil engineer, and will carry out his early intention of becoming a preacher of the Gospel. Brother Aylsworth and his wife have done fine work the last year at Wymore in re-establishing the church there. Their work made possible the victory achieved by the recent meeting. It is refreshing in the midst of these strenuous times of commercial enthusiasm, when we are so often saddened by the defection of preachers from the great work of the Lord into secular pursuits, to find the current going the other way occasionally. Brother Aylsworth has been highly successful in his calling, and his advance was practically certain. He makes great sacrifice in thus choosing the Lord's work.

E. E. Boyd has resigned and closed his work at Eastside Church, Lincoln. Z. O. Doward, of Grand Island, has been called. L. A. Hussong, now in school at the state university, will supply until the regular pastor arrives. Brother Boyd will finish his medical course this spring.

J. E. Cressmer has been called to the pastorate of the Ashland church. Brother Cressmer comes from Manhattan, Kan., well commended.

T. A. Lindenmeyer has closed his work at Pawnee City and accepted a call to the work at Falls City.——B. H. Coonradt's resignation at Edgar has been reconsidered, and he will remain at that place for the present.——The new preacher at David City, Lee Ferguson, will begin a meeting at that place about February 1. The work is going nicely.——F. S. White has returned to his work at Dorchester. He reports two confessions Dec. 24.——N. T. Harmon supplied at Fairfield one Sunday, when four were added by letter.——A. W. Henry's meeting closed at Liberty Ridge. No additions. He is available for meetings. Address him at Nelson.——John T. Smith has been recalled for another year's service at Nebraska City. The work is harmonious and progressive. If Brother Smith were not so biased against appearing in news items, we would say that his last year's work was very effective and that the conditions indicate a great advance in the year to come.——The Havelock mission, under H. G. Wilkinson, weathered the financial storm that threatened them and are now riding safely. This church is somewhat of a marvel.

Oregon.

We have been able to pay off notes against the O. C. M. S. amounting to $763.30 by Jan. 1. Of this amount $558.30 is on the old debt. Before this debt can be further reduced we must have $800 for current expenses, besides what we shall receive from the A. C. M. S.

Brethren, do you want our state work free rom debt? If so, will you not help in a large way to reach that end? We have now fifty five names on the $10 list, and expoct to secure the hundred by the close of the Turner convention, July 1, 1906.

Since last report fifteen churches have sent in their state offering and have received credit, as follows: Salem, $97.40; Eugene, $88.21; La Grande, $57.40; Tillamook, $33.65; Albany, $30.25; Dallas, $26 20; Medford, $18.60; Corvallis, $15.51; Pleasant Hill, $14.69; Central (Albany), $13 25; Antioch, $6.15; Jasper, $6; Bethel, $4.15; Brownsville, $3.75; Canby, $2.50.

Individuals from other churches have paid in their pledges to the work. However, only thirty-eight churches have as yet sent in their offerings. Let the churches not yet reporting, hasten, that their offerings may all be in before foreign mission season. Brethren, let us make this year one of great victories for Christ and the church.

SOME BRIEF FIGURES

The Work of the Year

FROM ANNUAL REPORTS

MEXICO, MO.

The Christian Church at Mexico, Mo., held its annual meeting recently with a large attendance, and the various reports showed that a total of $5,129.95 had been received and disbursed by the different departments of the church during the year. This, in connection with the new church building enterprise, makes a good showing.

FT. WAYNE, IND.

In 1905, at West Jefferson Street Church, the additions were 78. Money raised by church and its missions was $5,000. Of this amount $1,500 were for missions and benevolence.—E. W. Allen.

BOONE, IA.

Substantial progress in all lines of work has been made during the past year. The pastor received 73 members in the home church and in a meeting held in the country close by. With only a small membership and all in moderate circumstances, there was raised for all purposes over $1,900, without asking any contributions outside the congregation. A feature of the work is the boys' class of twenty-five taught by the pastor, which will study the Forbush Travel Lessons during the coming year. The pastor is president of the Christian Endeavor Union of the fifth district.—Edward L. Ely, pastor.

CHAMPAIGN, ILL.

At the Christian Church, University Place, the annual address was delivered by Finis Idleman, pastor of the Paris, Ill., church. "The Modern Church" was the subject, and the address will not soon be forgotten by the men and women who heard it. At the annual business meeting, the reports showed 304 added to the church during the year, and a total of more than $7,000 raised for all purposes. The special work for the year was shown to have been the installation of the new pipe organ, the inauguration of the free monthly lectureship and the living link in state missions at Granite City.—Geo. R. Shawhan, clerk.

KANSAS CITY.

We have had 35 additions to the Hyde Park Church since I came here in October. At a business meeting of the church, reports were read from all departments of the church. Over $2,600 passed through the various organizations of the church last year, although without a pastor for nearly six months. We revised our Bible school roll at the beginning of this year, having now enrolled 229, with about 95 per cent present last Sunday. We hope to reach 300 this year. J. H. Hardin will hold a Bible school institute for us January 25-28.—Louis S. Cupp.

EDINBURG, IND.

The closing service of 1905 was one of victory for Christ and the old Jerusalem plea. The crowds were excellent, and 3 confessions were made. T. H. Adams spent ten months of last year with this congregation; and, assisted by the untiring devotion and consecration of the members of the church, has seen much good accomplished. They have had 41 baptisms and 24 by letter and statement. Every branch of the work progresses. The Sunday school, under the able superintendency of Ed Pritchard, has increased 60 per cent in that time. There is a splendid Endeavor, ladies' aid, and C. W. B. M.

TRENTON, MO.

Our report for 1905 shows that the Bible school contributed for all purposes $291.58. The average attendance for the year was 175. In May an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. was organized. It has raised $57.16 and now has a membership of forty-five. A Junior Endeavor was recently organized. It now has thirty members and has already contributed $5.10. The Y. P. S. C. E. has increased its membership 300 per cent. It has 75 members and is doing good work. The ladies' aid society raised $444.14. In less than two years this society has paid $1,150 on the new church. For all other purposes the church contributed during the year $5,477.82. There were 117 additions to the church. The church is harmonious and hopeful.—S. J. White, minister.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COL.

At the annual meeting reports were read showing the different departments of the church to be in a prosperous condition. C. S. Brooks' report was especially gratifying, showing that 220 new members of the church have been received during the 14 months in which he has been pastor.

NEW ALBANY, IND.

Our reports are most encouraging. In a very brief form they are as follows: Additions for the year, by baptism 117, by letter and otherwise 57, total 174; present membership 375. With an average membership for the year of 340 we have had 252 regular contributors. In making these figures two contributors making joint payments are counted as one. We entered the year $166.54 in debt. We closed the year with all bills paid and a surplus of $218.18. We are preparing to erect a new building, and in seven months the building fund has grown from 0 to $1,927.21. The Sunday school revenue for the year was $525.85. The school entered the new year with an attendance of 212 pupils and an offering of $6.29. The total revenue to the church from all sources was $4,946.08. A more faithful, hard-working, harmonious, self-sacrificing and capable congregation would be hard to find. Only those knowing the conditions past and present in this congregation can appreciate to the full this excellent report.—B. F. Cato, pastor.

ALFALFA, WASH.

The annual business meeting of the church at Zillah, gave E. E. Francis a unanimous call to remain with us indefinitely. All departments of the church work are moving along nicely. The C. E. Society has about doubled its membership and the Sunday school attendance has increased from 65 to 150 since he has been with us. We have just completed a new parsonage at a cost of $800. We are expecting F. Walden to hold a meeting for us, commencing at once.—Amos Bush.

ORANGE, CAL.

At the annual meeting the reports were: 182 resident members, 33 additions (7 baptisms), none of which have before been reported; 103 average attendance in Sunday school, 21 per cent gain; all departments are in good condition; $1,845 raised for all purposes, $379 being for missions; financial obligations promptly met, no debts, church property in fine condition. Our harmony and Christian love so perfect are worthy of emphasis. Bright outlook.—A. N. Glover, minister.

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.

The past year has been the most prosperous in the history of the Central Church. There have been 110 additions, with a net increase of 93; $2,944.58 were expended for current expenses; $2,482 were paid into the building fund. The offerings for missions amounted to $515.41. The total expenditures for the year were $5,941.99, a gain of over $700 over the previous year. The Bible school has had an average attendance of 318, with 785 on rally day. The average attendance at prayer meeting has been 27.6 per cent of the resident membership. The church is very happy over the progress of the past year, and expects an excellent year in 1906.—W. C. Bower, pastor.

WINTERS, CAL.

At the annual meeting, encouraging reports were presented by all the departments. The pastor reported a net gain of ten per cent in the membership. The treasurer's report showed all bills paid, with a comfortable balance. The Sunday school marked a gain of ten per cent in the average attendance during the year, a gain of forty per cent in the weekly receipts, and a like gain in the missionary offerings. The total receipts of the ladies' aid society were $161.21. The C. W. B. M. reported their offerings as $86.47, as against $46.75 last year. The general missionary offerings of the church, including foreign, home, church extension, state and ministerial relief, were $288,91, as against $154.34 last year. The combined missionary offerings of all the departments show a gain of eighty-six per cent over last year. The Sunday school has been graded and has adopted a graded system of lessons, and is planning for real work as a Bible school.—Geo. A. Ragan.

WICHITA, KAN.

The annual report of the Central Christian Church of Wichita, Kan., showed additions during the year 122, less by death and removal 31, net gain 91. For current expenses and missions the church raised $4,563.65 of which amount $544.65 were for missions. In addition to this the church paid into the building fund during the year $8,000, making a total of moneys raised of $12,653.65. Now that we are comfortably settled in our new building we hope to be able to accomplish much more in the future. The present pastor has been with the church fourteen months and has been called to remain indefinitely, with the usual three months' notice provision.—C. F. Stevens.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

The Third Church closed one of the most successful years of work in its history. Reports show a most gratifying gain in all departments. Raised for missions $1,682.71; for home work, $4,657.53; gifts to all causes, total, $6,251.24. There were added during the year by letter 83, by verbal commendation 2, by confession and baptism 59, total 144. Loss 65, net gain 69. We rejoice in our successes, and straightway set out with divine help to surpass them.—Chas. B. Newnan.

LAMONTE, MO.

There were about 40 added during the year. The church is now out of debt and is doing aggressive work. I preach also at a point six miles south of this place. We hope to constitute a good church there in the near future. It is our purpose now to hold a camp meeting in that community some time next summer. We have THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in about 36 homes now. Dr. Snoddy did a good work while he was with us. He now lives in Lamont, Okla. Our Bible school was up to top notch last Sunday. All the work is in good shape. We have a fine C. W. B. M. There is not as much interest taken in the Junior work as I think there should be.—I. H. Fuller.

AUGUSTA, GA.

The First Christian Church reports a year of splendid work under the leadership of its minister, Howard T. Cree. Its membership has been increased by thirty-six, mostly by confession and baptism, making the present membership 291. The total amount of money raised, including the contributions to all our general interests, was $4,009.04, being the best financial record in the history of the church. During the year the individual communion service has been installed, the interior of the church has been refinished, carpeted, and lighted with new gas and electric fixtures at an expense of more than $1,000. A beautiful cathedral glass window has been ordered to commemorate the memory of the late A. D. Phillips. The congregation has supplied itself with the best hymnal among us—"Gloria in Excelsis"—much to the delight of the members. The beloved J. S. Lamar, who is now a member of the congregation, was made pastor emeritus at the annual meeting by unanimous vote. Brother Cree, the pastor, has been made president of the state misionary board and is giving time and energy to these larger interests. He has held three protracted meetings during the year, elsewhere, giving his services gratis to two of them, and expects to do the same thing this year.

OWENSBORO, KY.

During 1905 there were 172 additions; present net membership, 634; $10,769 were raised by the congregation for all purposes. The Sunday school has increased more than 100 per cent. More than 85 per cent of the membership contributes regularly to the expenses of the church. Our watchword is, "One thousand members by 1909." On the honor roll, 293.—R. H. Crossfield.

WHEELING, W. VA.

At the Island Christian Church, C. Manley Rice has just begun his second year as pastor. He reports that during the past year he received fifty-five new members into the church, without outside help. The Bible school reports an increase of over 22 per cent in average attendance above the previous year. The C. W. B. M. gained seventeen members and raised $101 for state and national work. The ladies' aid raised $323.50 on church debt. The Christian Endeavor Society gained 33 1-3 per cent in membership. The church raised over $800 on the church debt. The prayer meetings have been increasing in attendance and interest and spiritual uplift all through the year.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

Here is a Simple, Quick, Effective way and COSTS NOTHING—Send for it and see.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, asthma, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., etc., and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

Midweek Prayer Meeting.

January 31, 1906.

THE CHURCH AND THE SALOON.— 2 Cor. 6:4.

Jesus endured the awful thirst of the cross or the sake of drunkards. Some day they ill become conscious of this marvelous ove, and its power will do far more than latform oratory and "gold cures" to redeem hem and add them to the number working ut their salvation in the churches.

Some temperance bibliography: Noah's hame, Gen. 9:21-29; Belshazzar's downfall, an. 5:1-6; the Nazarite's vow, Num. 6:1-5; aniel a teetotaler, Dan. 1:5-21; indulgence folly, Prov. 20:1; it plunges into grief, rov. 23:29-35; John the Immerser sacrificed Bacchus, Mark 6:14-29; no drunkard can nter heaven, 1 Cor. 6:9, 10; woe to saloon-eepers, Hab. 2:15-17.

We need not urge the Church to patience nd long suffering in dealing with the aloon. The rumsellers themselves are oubtless surprised at the extreme consider-tion shown them and their business inter-sts by church men. There is greater need or the inculcation of that non-militant grace hat prompted the Savior, with a scourge of ords, to drive the sacrilegious traders before im. Some day the Church, in righteous ndignation, will abolish the evil and then e shall all wonder why it, like the lesser rime of African slavery, was so long ndured.

It is laudable to administer antidotes to he snakebitten but it is more praiseworthy destroy the serpents. While the church ust care for the victims of alcoholism, both mmediate and indirect, its strategic point of ttack should be the "worm of the still" it-elf. As old Cato's "Carthage must be de troyed" at the conclusion of every speech ed to the destruction of Rome's great rival, o will the church's unceasing "the saloon ust go" lead to the final abolishment of its reatest foe, when at last our sentiments, ultivated about the communion table and n the prayer meeting, find expression in eroic action.

The children of this world are wiser than the hildren of light. Saloonists recognize that nan has a social nature and promote a socia-ility among the frequenters of these haunts eldom witnessed in our churches; they now we crave entertainment as children do weets and spare neither pains nor expense o provide it. Saloons are made most at-ractive to persons not deterred by con-cientious convictions from entering them. rom their immense patronage let us learn he value of making our churches more at-ractive through social winsomeness and ppeals to all phases of the multiform tem-erament of man.

The church should realize that so long as he heart of man is unregenerate, even if all he barreled rum on earth were poured into he ground and every still destroyed, in ther dens of iniquity than liquor saloons here would be debauchery even if its ex-ression required the invention of new rms of wickedness. The church's ulti-ate victory over its desperate foe, the aloon, will be won, not alone by voting and raying for prohibition legislation, but also y striving to purify the heart of man from e lurking passions for drink and all sin, and making it a sanctuary for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

There is a Congregational church in this city that has lately abolished two saloons in its precinct. Its officers discovered one of them was nearer a public school than the law permitted and instituted successful court proceedings against it. For the overthrow of the other they aroused public sentiment against the establishment of an iniquity so near an orphanage of the Christian Church, most of whose little inmates had been reduced to poverty and other suffering through its destructiveness in other neighborhoods whence they had been rescued by good angels of charity. This church stands much higher in public estimation because of these contests and triumphs for practical Christianity. Would that multitudes of our own churches might thus engage and signally defeat the monster!

Christian Endeavor.

By Geo. L. Snively.

February 4, 1906.

NEW WORK WE MAY DO FOR CHRIST AND THE CHURCH.—Luke 12:48 (last half); Gen. 12:1-3; Gal 3:9.

(Christian Endeavor Day. Consecration Meeting.)

There is an employ in which we each may be most helpful. It may be in holding the throttle; more likely it is in shoveling in the coal or repairing the track. If evidences of great success do not surround last year's work, change. Direct less, serve more, give more, pray more, be more.

Last year our efforts to save were exerted on men collectively, and, perhaps, many were brought a little nearer the church gate. For this we shall not go unrewarded. For the sake of that variety of employ that brings rest into toil, if for no other reason, let us specialize, individualize, this year, trying earnestly and persistently to lead at least one from the world into the church and then from the gateway out into whitening fields of Christian usefulness, and a new note of joy will blend with our songs.

The justification of the student's spending years with mathematics is his going forth and establishing corner stones, surveying gleaming highways, fluming waters from mountain reservoirs to make deserts bloom and sing, and hanging new lamps in the sailor's sky. Studying the Bible, thoroughly organizing our societies and building up large memberships are good works. Their justification is effecting better morals in our community, establishing higher standards of Christian ethics, bringing our friends to their knees at the cross of Christ. To these new works for 1906!

There are those who can play a symphony on a single string, but whose music would be grander if swept from all the chords. So there are Christians of great value through superior development of a single grace, but who would be of vastly greater consequence to the church if they would symmetrically cultivate all the powers of their natures. Let this be one of our "new works." If, heretofore, we have been children of "faith" alone, let us now serve through "hope" and "love" as well. With one facet gleaming the gem may be attractive, but will be more beautiful when its central fire shines through every window.

Churchmen have never valued the press as highly as do successful merchant-men and statesmen. The utilization of the tremendous power of Christian literature for advocating our common faith, instruction in righteousness and provocation unto all good works, should be part of our 1906 program. No other ministry in which Endeavorers can engage will more surely win heaven's approval than making a religious journal like THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST, a weekly visitor to every home in the church, and to others where Christ is unknown, or at least, unhonored. This new work we earnestly recommend to every Good Literature Committee.

Our opportunities are measures of our responsibilities. In earlier days of church history little was committed to youth, little was expected of them; it was an unproductive period of their lives. Now all is changed. It is known that youthful enthusiasm, sanguineness, recuperative powers, and winsomeness, are tremendous aids in the extension of the kingdom. Much is given our Endeavorers to do, and we must give good account of this equipment. Initiative on our part is no longer presumption; what we have done creates expectations of greater achievements; nothing but Satan holds us back; let us of our responsibilities make still nobler opportunities.

Men make new acquisitions of learning not only by studying new sciences, but also by making progress in familiar ones—by adding geometry to algebra and calculus to that, thus doing new work in numbers. So with much of the new work we undertake in 1906 for Christ and the church; the "newness" will consist rather in the amount undertaken and done than in the nature of the enterprises. Michael Angelo wrote "amplius" across the study on an obscure student's canvas and gave Raphael to the world of art. Let us, too, write "larger" across our last year's Christian purposes, and new souls we may save, new inspiration impart to the church and new stars add to our crowns.

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS.—Matt. 4:1-11.

Memory Verse, 4.

GOLDEN TEXT.—In all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.—Heb. 4:15.

Scarcely any incident in the life of Jesus has lent itself more readily to superficial and speculative interpretation than this of the temptation. At the outset, let us put this down as a certainty: the so-called temptation in the wilderness was a real temptation. The details of the narrative offer much that is mysterious, but however we interpret it, we must see that it involved the presentation of evil to Jesus in a form which had some real attraction for him. The presentation of an obviously gross form of evil to a man of highly spiritual nature is not a temptation. The manner in which the tempter appeared to Jesus and the way in which the motives to sin were exhibited to him must have been such that they made a genuine, though ineffective, appeal to him. It was not, any more than baptism, a mere edifying spectacle given as an example for imitation, but a profound spiritual experience.

In his baptism, Jesus had come out boldly on the side of the new order of things which John the Forerunner was proclaiming; and immediately after the baptism came the divine attestation of his unique relation to that messianic program. We are justified in believing that by this time Jesus had come to a consciousness of his divine nature, power and mission. He had been commissioned to be the leader in this new order of things, this spiritual and moral order which might be called the kingdom of God, and with that commission came the consciousness of an extraordinary power based upon his unique relation to God.

So much was doubtless already clear immediately after the baptism of Jesus. But it remained to be seen whether he would be great enough to use his power only for the furtherance of his work and not at all for the satisfaction of his private desires, to keep an unshaken faith in God without recourse to any artificial and manufactured evidence, and to conceive of the messiahship and the kingdom of God as a wholly spiritual matter and therefore as a cause not to be advanced by any concessions whatever, either to the sensational or to the sinful. Granted a consciousness of divine power and of the messiahship, how is that power to be used and what is to be the meaning of that messiahship?—this was the ground at issue in the temptation in the wilderness.

Three specific temptations are recorded by both Matthew and Luke. The two accounts are strikingly similar, even to identities of word and phrase, but the last two temptations are given in different order by the two writers. Matthew's order seems the more impressive and climateric, since it places last the most comprehensive temptation involving the strongest motive and the greatest sin.

The first temptation, to turn stones into bread, was an appeal to the bodily appetite. The implied argument is a subtle one, and to the ordinary man it would be convincing. It was this: A man must eat; there is no harm in satisfying the natural bodily appetites; you can not carry on your work and serve the world unless you take care of yourself; your special powers should therefore be used first of all for the satisfaction of your own needs. But the argument is false. If one is endowed with any gift or power above the measure of other men there is no need to use that gift for private advantage. The common powers must suffice to provide for one's natural wants. It is not on record that Jesus ever performed a miracle to save trouble or work for himself.

The tempter's opening words, "If thou art the Son of God," suggest also a temptation to an idle use of power to confirm Jesus' faith in himself and in his Father.

The second temptation is the temptation of foolish faith and pseudo piety, to take unnecessary risks in order to give opportunity for spectacular displays of the divine power. The grace of God is not to be put under compulsion in any such fashion. The laws of God are to be treated with respect—whether the laws of morality, or of gravitation, or of hygiene. God expects his missionaries to take all reasonable precautions against fevers and his ministers to look after their diet and exercise. If they do not, they die. He expects his children, moreover, to be content with the proofs of his love and care which come in the course of his wise providence, and not to try to force upon him artificial evidences of it either for the confirmation of their own faith or for making an impression on the public.

In the third temptation it was rather the nature of the messianic rule than the method of exercising power, that was in question. A spiritual kingdom can not be bought by any compromises with the forces of evil; it must be won by conquering them. A merely Jewish messiah fulfilling the current expectations of the time, might hav been tempted to make a concession in th means for the sake of the glorious end to b realized—a delivered and vindicated Israe A spiritual end can never be advanced b unworthy means. To gain all the kingdon of the world, so far as they lie in Satan gift, is total failure for any spiritual ente prise. In his triumph over this temptatio Jesus gave assurance of a higher and mo spiritual conception of his calling than w held by his contemporaries.

The Holy Spirit in a Nutshell.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

The Holy Spirit is a life-governing disposition, induced by belief, i. e., faith in Christ. It does not exist as a supernatural, spiritual personality, separate and apart from our own minds and hearts. We have it only in a matter of degree. When true conversion takes place it is implanted within us and as we progress in the Christian virtues we have more and more of this life-governing Spirit. Only when we attain to the perfection of Christ himself can we possess the Holy Spirit in its fullness.

[What Jesus meant, then, by sending the Holy Spirit or the Comforter, to guide the apostles into all truth and to comfort and enlighten Christians and to "take of the things of Christ and show them" to his disciples was not a personality at all, but merely a "life-governing disposition." One must throw away a very large part of the Bible to accept that view, and what is left of it might be put in a "nutshell" along with the writer's conception of the Holy Spirit.—EDITOR.]

The Gift of the Holy Ghost.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

What is it? This is a question every careful student of God's Word meets. Is there a satisfactory answer comes to the mind of the reader as the question is put? Who is the Holy Ghost?

Did you ever try to give a satisfactory answer to that? Let me tell an experience I had when a young preacher. I was calling on families, urging Christian duty as best I could. I called on a lady who had one child, a boy of five or six summers. She had not been to meeting for some time, although a member of the church. She gave as a reason, the difficulty of controlling her boy. She said he was a restless fellow, and was such a bother asking questions.

I called Charley to me and asked him to come to Sunday school, told him what his mother said about asking so many questions, and said, "You come to Sunday school and you may ask me as many questions as you like."

He straightened himself up, and said, "Well, sir, what is the Holy Ghost?" I was up a stump for a while, and I won't stop to tell you how I got down.

Reader, you undertake to tell a child what the Holy Ghost is, and see if you would like to have a seat on that stump. The question is not only a child's question. It comes to every inquiring mind who studies Gospel truths. Says one, it is the Holy Spirit, but the child's inquisitiveness immediately asks, What's that? The student of maturer years asks it. Can we, whose duty it is to expound the Word, tell him?

I have just turned to Acts 2:38, which gives Peter's answer to the multitudes who asked what they must do on the day of Pentecost. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." I have looked at the Revised Version and it says "Holy Ghost." Why that learned body of pious men who gave us the Revised Version held on to the word "ghost" I shall not stop to discuss. What is a ghost? The common use of the word signifies the spirit of a dead person. Does it mean, in the New Testament, the spirit of Jesus who died on the cross? But the words, "Holy Ghost," occur in the New Testament many times before Jesus died. In all such texts they clearly mean Holy Spirit or Spirit of God. Perhaps the reason the translators preferred "Holy Ghost" in Acts 2:38, was because Peter wished to show the identity of the Spirit which came upon Jesus at his baptism by John, which Spirit abode upon him, and by which miracles were wrought, with this one who now was to confer a gift upon these penitent believers who were commanded to be baptized.

Then again, may it not be true that what the common people called the Ghost of Jesus was united with the Holy Spirit in the same mysterious way after the death and resurrection as before, during the time intervening between his baptism at the hands of John and his death on the cross? To my mind this view harmonizes texts referring to our Lord's work in the Church from the day of Pentecost on till he comes again. Thus when he gave the great commission he promised to be with his disciples until the end of the world (Matt. 28:20).

When Æneas was healed, Peter said, "Jesus Christ makes thee whole," as though Jesus were present (Acts 9:34). When Saul of Tarsus was converted Jesus declared himself present (Acts 9:4, 5). Paul in his discussion of the resurrection declares Jesus to be a life-giving Spirit (1 Cor. 15:45).

The power of imparting life before Jesus suffered on the cross, which power sprang from the divine manifest in him, seems to remain in him after his passion. When our Lord was about to leave his disciples, he told them, "I will not leave you comfortless. I will come to you" (John 14:18); thus identifying himself with the Comforter or Paraclete. This union of the divine life with human life, which Paul calls the great mystery of godliness (1 Tim. 3:16), opens the way for life to come to us who believe on Christ. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23). The gift is bestowed to the believer here in this time state. Jesus saith, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me hath eternal life" (John 6:47). Again, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me, and ye will not come to me that ye might have life" (John 5:39, 40). Again, "I am come that ye might have life, and that ye might have it more abundantly" (John 10:10).

These texts show that Jesus was a life-giver, and that the kind of life he gave was eternal life, and that he gave it to those who came to him in faith while here in the body on the earth. Indeed, the whole teaching of our Lord and his apostles shows us that if we don't get it into our souls before we die, it will be too late.

This life in us is the hope of glory. It is the power of the resurrection. Jesus says, "I am the resurrection and the life" (John 11:25). This life in the soul is Christ dwelling in us, and if it abide in us we belong to the number of whom Jesus spake to Martha, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die" (John 11:26). Such a soul is a saved soul, and need not fear death, for he has the power of the resurrection within him.

"If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead to dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you" (Rom. 8:11).

Some people think of this eternal life as something that is to be given after we are raised from the dead; not something to be sought for now, only the promise of it. It is true "it doth not appear what we shall be," because we are but children, and must grow; but the life begins here in the soul in this time state. We are now prepared to answer the question, "What is the gift of the Holy Ghost?" It is this gift of eternal life. The Holy Ghost is Jesus come to us as he promised, "I will not leave you comfortless I will come to you." When he comes he gives this life, called eternal life, because it is superior to the power of death. Every soul that has this life is born again. He is a new creature. He belongs to the new man, or anthropos. He is a member of the body of which Christ is the Head—Christ, the second Adam, who is made a life-giving Spirit. To all such our Lord says, "Because I live ye shall live also." We are, many of us, in the orchard business, out here in California. One day I saw a nursery man hauling a wagonload of nice-looking young trees, which he dumped down in a hollow. I asked him why he did so.

"Oh," said he, "these are trees in which the bud did not take." They were therefore worthless. Those in which the bud took, or grew, were left in the nursery until ready to transplant. As the bud taken from the bell-flower apple tree carried the new life with it into the scion in the nursery, so the gift of the Holy Ghost begins a new life in the soul. If the old, sinful life is pruned away, this new life expands, and in due time is transplanted in the paradise of God.

Irvington, Cal. J. H. MCCOLLOUGH.

[In the American Revised Version Brother McCollough will find that the word "Ghost" in Acts 2:38 is rendered "Spirit," and there is no reason why it should not be so rendered. Concerning the relation of the Holy Spirit to eternal life, it is undoubtedly true that it is only those who possess the Spirit that possess eternal life, but the "gift of the Holy Spirit" we believe is the Holy Spirit himself, who, through faith, quickens the dead soul into life and, dwelling therein, begets and fosters those elements of character which fit one to live forever. As Jesus Christ is God's gift to the world, so the Holy Spirit is God's gift to the Church, and to each individual believer who opens his heart to receive him.—EDITOR.]

BOSLEY.

Mrs. Mollie Bosley, wife of Bro. James M. Bosley, fell gently asleep after a brief illness, Jan. 7, 1906, at Jerusalem, Md., aged 31 years. The large congregation that crowded the old Jerusalem church on the day of her funeral, many with tear-dimmed eyes, testified to the esteem in which she was held by all the community. The vacancy caused by her death in her family and among her friends can never be filled. It is no empty tribute to say that in every relation of life Mollie Bosley was true and faithful. Her daily life was the unselfish way of the cross, and when she awakes in the morning it will be in the glory of the kingdom of God. J. R. GAFF.

BROWN.

Eliza Brown, wife of W. E. Brown, of this place, departed this life, Dec. 25, after a lingering illness. A noble Christian has been called home. Who can take her place? J. W. HIETT.

COUCH.

Died, in Terre Haute, Ind., Dec. 22, 1905, Susan Couch, aged 88 years, five months and eleven days. She was born in Rutherford county, Tenn., July 11, 1817. United in marriage to William Couch in 1834, the young couple moved directly to Alabama, where were born their two eldest children, John and Napoleon. In 1838, there being no railroads, they moved overland to Illinois, settling in Shelbyville, a frontier settlement of two or three hundred, not yet incorporated. Eight children were born to them. Of these, two now survive, Mrs. Ira Flanders, of Yardin, Okla., and Mr. George W. Couch, of Terre Haute, Ind., at whose home his mother passed away after a short illness, she having removed there in 1867. Her companion died in 1853. She was a charter member of the Shelbyville Christian church, organized in 1840. Her family was one of sturdy belief in church matters, coming in turn to her from her forbears, Carolina Huguenots, of very early times. She left the undying heritage of a noble life. She was a lifelong Christian, a devoted mother and a sympathetic friend.

GOOS.

My father died on his farm near Tamaroa, Ill., where he had lived for fifty years, Wednesday, Dec. 27, 1905. He was born in Germany, June 8, 1825, and came to America in 1847. He lived in and near Philadelphia, Pa., until 1855, when he moved to the farm where he died. He united with the Christian Church in 1870. He had been a member of the Baptist Church. ### HOLT.

In Kansas City, in 1893, the writer received the confession of John G. Holt, and administered to him the rite of baptism, and the same year accompanied him to Mexico, Mo., to conduct the funeral services over his first wife. Brothe Holt was the largest contributor to the erection of the Forrest Avenue Christian Church, of Kansas City, and one of the men who made possible such a splendid building in those strenuous times. In 1902, after our removal to Mexico, it was our privilege to officiate at his marriage to Miss Emma O. Morris, the organist of the church here, and who, with a sweet little girl, survives him. His death, from inflammatory rheumatism, occurred in Kansas City, Dec. 21, and services and burial here Dec. 24. So, in joy and sorrow, and again in joy and sorrow, and we trust, by and by, in a joy that shall know no sorrow, will be consummated our relationship to this friend and brother and fellow helper in Christ Jesus. A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

SEAY.

Robert L. Seay, for years prominent in the business and religious life of Chillicothe, died very suddenly on Thursday morning, Dec. 21, 1905. He was faithful in the discharge of his Christian duties, earnest in his contention for better things, and leaves a widow and four children to mourn his departure. JAMES N. CRUTCHER.

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

CHAPTER II.

Not many days after Raymund and Rhoda learned that there was a strange secret in their lives, Mrs. Revore died. Almost up to the last the twins had been able to take care of their mother. But at the very last some of the neighbors came to their assistance. Among these was the next-door neighbor, Miss Glory Aggency. It was to her house that they were driven immediately after the funeral. Raymund and Rhoda were too much overcome by the loss of their mother to understand just how everything happened during the next day or two. It seemed to them that whatever took place could not matter much, because the one intimate companion of their remembrance was not there to share their joys and sorrows. A hundred times during the day there would be the involuntary thought—"I have not heard mother's voice for a good while; how long she is sleeping! I must run up to the room." The thought would come and go as quick as a dart of lightning. It would leave behind it the shock of conscious loss. Ah, it would be a long time before they heard her voice again—a long time! The world was full of voices, but among them all, hers was to be heard no more. At night Rhoda dreamed that she was carrying a freshly cooked dish up to the sick-room, her apron protecting her one decent dress, her face glowing from the heat of the cook-stove, but her eyes glowing brighter from the love of service. She would open the door—perhaps catch sight of the beloved face on the pillow—but then all would fade—all but herself. She was so real to herself; so alive, so strong; but her mother lay in the quiet cemetery beneath the freshly turned earth.

Raymund, too, found his mother's face mingling with his dreams. He was sitting beside the bed, waiting for her to wake, watching the clock that he might not fail to give the medicines at the right time—listening for his sister's step, or for the wheels of Dr. Browast's buggy—but his mother never woke up. If he might have seen her open her eyes, though only in a dream, it would have given him a momentary pleasure. But the face was always pale—and so still—just as he had seen it the last time.

Though Miss Glory Aggency had been their next-door neighbor ever since Mrs. Revore moved to Crawley, some seven years ago, the chidlren felt that she was almost a stranger. They had, of course, seen her very often, but they had never been in the house. Miss Glory did not care very much for people unless they were ill; at such times she visited them and was very kind in her attentions, and most useful when her offers of aid were accepted. Nobody could be more gentle of touch or voice when she chose. But people who were well and strong did not interest the lady—at least that is the impression she produced upon Raymund and Rhoda. They stood in great awe of the tall, exceedingly thin and spectacled lady, with the gray-streaked hair, the invariable black apron and the brass thimble; and even in the midst of Rhoda's poignant grief over the death of her mother, she was conscious of a new and heartrending sorrow, at the thought that, since they were to go to the house next door, she would have to sleep with Miss Glory. The old lady was fearsome enough in the daytime, but when Rhoda conjured up before her mind the long, lean face surmounted by a frilled nightcap, and the spare, towering form shrouded in a nightdress, the little girl's heart felt a cold chill.

Nor were Raymund's prospects much more cheerful. Miss Glory lived all alone save for her brother, Mr. Merlin Aggency, a gentleman who appeared to the children incredibly old and well-preserved. Everybody in Crawley knew about Mr. Merlin Aggency, and there was not a boy of Raymund's age who would have cared to meet him alone on a dark night. He was "curious." Miss Glory kept him indoors as much as possible, and possibilities with Miss Glory extended to an almost infinite length. Raymund could never remember having seen Mr. Merlin Aggency on the streets of Crawley. He had many a time observed the old man taking a turn in the back yard, or garden, but at such times Miss Glory's face was to be seen at some door or window, on the watch.

"You will sleep with Mr. Aggency," Miss Glory told Raymund; and when the youth started up from some dream about his dead mother, it was to become instantly conscious of the little old man at his side who snored so loud and showed such a tendency to extend his short legs crosswise in the bed. Mr. Merlin Aggency insisted upon burning the lamp all night, and when Raymund lay awake, crumpled up to avoid his bedfellow's legs, it seemed that the only object in the room that had power to attract his eyes, was a tall blue mug on the washstand. In the mug were Mr. Aggency's teeth.

On the morning of the second day of their stay at Miss Glory's, the twins met before breakfast in the downstairs hall. It was the first time they had seen each other in the morning since the funeral. They burst into tears and without thinking, each started toward the other, and the next moment they were in each other's arms.

"What shall we do?" sobbed Rhoda. "Oh, what shall we do, Raymund?"

"Never mind, Rhoda," gasped the boy, trying to drive back his tears, "I will take care of you!"

"I know you will," said Rhoda in proud faith. "I am not at all afraid for myself or for you. But, oh, what will we do without mother?"

"I dreamed I saw her last night," said Raymund, swallowing hard, "and she looked so—so sweet—and—"

There was a little silence. Then Rhoda said, "I dreamed of her, too. Wasn't it just awful to wake up—and she wasn't there—nobody but Miss Glory!"

Raymund's voice took on a touch of human interest. "How did you get along Rhoda?" he whispered, squeezing her sympathetically.

"It was just dreadful," Rhoda confided, with a cautious glance toward the dining room where breakfast was nearly ready. "She is so cross!"

"What did she say?"

"It wasn't that she said anything," returned Rhoda, thoughtfully; "she didn't mean to be cross, maybe. It was in just the way she moved and looked. When she shook her dress she did it as if she disliked it. When she struck the match to light the lamp, she seemed mad at the match and at the lamp. When she took out her teeth, it made such a difference—her chin came right up to her nose, nearly! She put them in a glass by the pitcher. Just think! I might have drunk out of that glass!"

"Mr. Aggency keeps his in a blue mug," said Raymund.

Rhoda continued, "And when she took off her hair—"

"Oh, I am glad Mr. Aggency can't take off his!" exclaimed Raymund. Rhoda gave him a squeeze and both laughed softly. Just then a sharp voice came from the next room—"Breakfast!" The voice belonged to Miss Glory Aggency. The children hurried in to breakfast. Mr. Merlin Aggency was already in his seat. His hair was perfectly white. His face was creased by many heavy lines and those about his mouth gave him the appearance of always smiling. When he opened his mouth, the lines changed, and one saw that he had not been smiling at all; the effect was always startling till the mouth closed; then the smile reappeared and one assured oneself that it was a smile, after all.

When they were seated Miss Glory asked the blessing and began to pour the coffee. Her brother drew the dish of steak toward him and said briskly, "Four cuts? Good!" When the meat was served they ate for awhile in silence. Then the old lady spoke, addressing first Raymund and then Rhoda, "Children, have you any plan for the future?"

"We are waiting to hear from uncle William," said Raymund timidly.

"Your mother's half-brother in St. Louis? The man your mother wrote to a year ago?"

"Yes, ma'am," said Rhoda. Mother wrote to him again, about two weeks before she—about two weeks ago."

Miss Glory asked abruptly, "Ever see him?"

"No, ma'am. He has never had anything to do with us. Mother has written to him several times. He never answers. I don't expect he will answer now."

"I expect he won't," said Miss Glory, dryly. "He is all the kinfolks you have, isn't he?"

"The only one," said Raymund, lonesomely.

"They will sell your ma's furniture Saturday," said Miss Glory. "Mr. Jennings has a chattel mortgage on everything, and I doubt if they'll bring as much as the debt. You won't have a thing in the world. This half-uncle of yours is evidently determined to have nothing to do with you. What's to be done? I'm sure I don't know. I've called a meeting here of some of our friends, to advise over it. They'll come to-morrow afternoon. In my opinion, if we can get you two in some orphan home—but I fear you're too old to be accepted."

Rhoda and Raymund both gasped and in the pause Mr. Merlin Aggency said, "The boy has taken another biscuit; five biscuits and four steak-cuts. Would you count the dishes of breakfast food, sister Glory?"

"I do not think I would, brother," said Miss Glory in a voice so gentle that the children could hardly believe their ears. "You will be carrying too many figures in your mind."

"Very well," said Mr. Merlin Aggency, a little disappointed, "but it would make a fuller record. Five and four are nine. We will let it go at that, then."

"Miss Glory," said Raymund, "mother left me to take care of Rhoda, and that is what I will do."

"And how will you do it?" Miss Glory inquired.

"I will work—I will do anything I can," said Raymund vaguely.

"Well, well," returned the old lady, "wait till the ladies meet. You need not bother about it till then. There will be time enough for bother. There's always time for bothering, whatever else gets squeezed out!"

Let Something Good Be Said.

When over the fair fame of friend or foe
The shadow of disgrace shall fall; instead
Of words of blame, or proof of thus and so,
Let something good be said.

Forget not that no fellow-being yet
May fall so low but love may lift his head;
Even the cheek of shame with tears is wet,
If something good be said.

No generous heart may vainly turn aside
In ways of sympathy; no soul so dead
But may awaken strong and glorified,
If something good be said.

And so I charge ye, by the thorny crown,
And by the cross on which the Savior bled,
And by your own soul's hope of fair renown,
Let something good be said!

Father and Mother.

"I have often wondered at the condition of things which sets aside morality in politics and makes possible the election of men whose unfitness is apparent. A mother will teach her boy at her knee to tell the truth, to be kind, to avoid all that is immoral. She will painstakingly guide his thoughts and actions so that he may grow up possessed of all the manly virtues, and the father of that boy will, when it comes time for his son to cast his first vote, take him aside and advise him to vote for a bad man who is on the Democratic ticket because he has always adhered to Democratic principles. Could anything be more absurd?"—Mark Twain.

Child Humorists.

Dr. Macnamara's supply of school-room stories is inexhaustible. He has another batch of them in the Christmas number of the "Schoolmaster" (London). Their humor may be gauged by the following examples:

"Can you take your warm overcoat off?" asked the infants' mistress. "Yes," replied the children. "Can the bear take his warm overcoat off?" "No," replied the children. Asked for a reason, one of the hopefuls replied: "Please, teacher, because only God knows where the buttons are!"

Another little one is told that while the peacock has a beautiful tail "the peahen has no tail to speak of." He reproduces this something on this wise: "The peacock has a beautiful tail; the peahen has a tail too, but it must not be talked about!"

Another story is concerned with a village police constable who is well known throughout the district on account of the zeal with which he follows up any clue that may bring lawbreakers to justice.

His son recently made his first appearance at school. The Bible lesson that morning happened to be the story of Cain and Abel, and the new scholar paid close attention while the assistant mistress unfolded the details of the narrative.

At the close the teacher, who was not aware that the little fellow was taking a professional interest in the matter, was startled to hear him exclaim: "I'll tell our dad about that man!"

There is a touch of pathos in the following town boy's composition on a half-holiday:

"Yesterday we had a half-holiday, and I enjoyed myself very much.

"After dinner I did the knives and forks and cleaned the windows and the boots. Then a boy came round with a football and wanted me to go to the park with him.

"But I could not go because my mother was going out and I had to mind the baby. When she came home we had tea, and then I went to my place and took out orders till nine o'clock. Then I went to bed and came to school this morning. I enjoyed myself very much."

Substantial Handshakings.

It was years since, in the Ozark region, where I was riding a circuit, that I saw a minister enjoy a most substantial handshaking, says a writer in the "Globe-Democrat." Shaking hands was his peculiarity. He believed in the potency of a cordial grasp to win men to the church, but though successful in winning souls he was very unfortunate in the matter of getting dollars. In fact, poverty continually stared him in the face. He owned a little farm and mortgaged it as long as it would yield a dollar. The mortgages were falling due, but there was no prospect of paying them. It did not bother him a bit. He shook hands more heartily than ever.

"I have unbounded faith in handshaking to bring everything out right," he often said, until his penchant came to be the talk of the town. At last came the day when the mortgages must be foreclosed that would deprive him of the little home that sheltered his family.

On the eve of that day a knock at the door of his house, which was a little way from town, called him. When he opened the door a whole crowd rushed in, and without saying a word commenced shaking hands. He felt something cold in the palm of the first man and when the hand was withdrawn it stuck to his own. "That is the most substantial shake I ever experienced," he said, as he held up a $5 gold piece. But the next man stepped up and a silver dollar was left in the preacher's palm. No one would say a word in explanation, but pressed in on him as fast as he could stick the metal and bills into his pockets. The house was not large enough for the visitors, each one of whom deposited from $1 to $10 in the outstretched hand. Each left the moment his little errand was accomplished, and not a word could be had in explanation, except the last one, who, as he turned to go, remarked: "We wanted to play a little joke on you, and we have." The several "jokes" netted just $871. His home was saved and a neat balance was left besides.

An Easy Way to Make Money.

I resolved New Year's, that I would turn over a new leaf and do all in my power to assist others, and write you my experience, hoping many may be benefited as I have been. I have made $380 in 80 days, selling dishwashers. I did my housework at the same time. I do not canvass, people come or send for the dishwashers. They're lovely to sell. The machine washes and dries the dishes perfectly in three minutes, without putting the hands in water. Every lady who sees it wants one, as they only cost $5.00. I think any person can do as well as I have. Write to the Mound City Dishwasher Co., St. Louis, Mo., Box 10, and they will give you instructions and start you in the business. Dishwashers sell to everybody—dishes must be washed three times a day. It will not be long before dishwashers are more numerous than sewing machines, as they are cheaper and used so much more frequently. MRS. W. B.

Beverley's Good Impression.

BY CARROLL WATSON RANKIN.

As far as appearances went, Beverley Minot was a most pleasing young person. She had an apple-blossom complexion, summer-sky eyes, precisely the right amount of tractable, sunshiny hair, and a trim, properly-slended figure hat kept her less willowy classmates divided between envy and utter discouragement.

Her smile was inviting and, with fortunate Beverley, the making of friends was always an instantaneous process. Keeping them, however, seemed to be an entirely different matter. Beverley seemed always to have a sufficient number of warmly-attached acquaintances; but, oddly enough, all her friends were invariably brand-new ones. Indeed, a friend of three months' standing was practically unknown in Beverley's collection. A friendship that endured for a fortnight and then suddenly ceased was much more like the usual run of the girl's record.

Beverley's cousin, Louise, a shy girl of no particular figure, a hopeless complexion, and barely sufficient hair to make a piteously thin pigtail, made friends slowly and laboriously; but once made, Louise's friends stayed made, whlie Beverley's easily-acquired intimates slipped away like stitches in a carelessly knitted stocking.

This state of affairs did not appear to worry cheerful Beverley, but it puzzled and distressed Mrs. Minot.

"Beverley," she would say, "what has become of Rose Miller? Three weeks ago you and Rose were inseparable; now she goes by without a glance toward our windows." Or, "Beverley, what has happened to that nice little Lillian Pease that you were so taken with a month ago? Has she moved out of town?" Or, "Beverley, why did Jennie Pratt look the other way when we passed her, yesterday? Less than a week ago you two were holding hands all day long."

Beverley, however, evaded in each instance a direct reply. Rose and Jennie and Lillian, she supposed, had other friends that they liked better and so—with a proud little toss of her head—had she. Girls' friendships were always like that; they never lasted.

"But," protested Mrs. Minot on such occasions, "look at Louise! Think of the years she has gone with Ruth and Miriam!"

"Oh, Louise!" sniffed Beverley. "She can't risk losing anybody's affection. It takes her almost as long to make a friend as it takes the explorers to discover the North Pole. For my part, I can't see why Ruth and Miriam like her so well—she's like Bridget's bread, always just exactly the same."

"Louise wears well."

"Which means," said light-hearted Beverly, "that I don't. But I don't care—I like new friends best, anyway."

It was true that Beverley's wearing qualities left much to be desired, but at first acquaintance this was a state of affairs that no one could possibly suspect. Her manner was attractive; for a girl of her years she was surprisingly entertaining, and she could say more clever things in half an hour than all the other seniors could laboriously concoct in a week's time. Unfortunately, however, the girl's clever tongue had a way of going just a little too far at times; underlying all its brightness there was a sharp, unkind, unlovely little sting. She was certainly witty, but invariably feelings were hurt by her bright but thoughtless remarks.

It was perfectly true that Rose's father did not pay his bills, that Lillian Pease toed in, that Mary's aunt had lost her mind, and that fat Jennie Pratt was prematurely afflicted with a double chin. When Beverley, surrounded by a group of flatteringly interested boys and girls on the schoolhouse steps, had thoughtlessly mentioned these and other similar things, and had pointed her remarks in a sparkling, caustic way peculiarly her own, her audience had apparently been with her even if her victims had not. But this sympathy on the part of her audience did not prevent some traitorous small portion of it from afterward telling Rose, Lillian, Jennie and Mary precisely what Beverley had said.

Unfortunately, no one was safe from Beverley's reckless tongue—friend and foe suffered alike. To a few thoughtful persons who, however, were not in a position to interfere with what did not, after all, concern them, it seemed a pity that so bright, so pretty a girl should show so little kindliness in her daily speech; but, oddly enough her own adoring people appeared not to notice the blemish. It is probable that they were so carried away (as indeed almost eyery one else was) by her cleverness and her undeniable attractiveness, that the little, unkind stings passed unheeded.

In June quite a marvelous thing happened. The Minots had forgotten that they had ever possessed such a relative as a Granduncle Joseph; but jpst at commencement time a smiling little elderly man, hailing from Oregon, announced that he had traveled to the east that he had not seen since he had left it when a small boy in '49, to hunt up his wife's family or its descendants. His own cordiality was so great that the surprised Minots could do nothing but welcome the unexpected guest with what they hoped looked like equal warmth.

"Well, well," said, Granduncle Joseph beaming genially and with evident approval at the assembled family at dinner that first day, "I just wish Elizabeth could have lived to come, too."

"Why did you never write?" asked Mrs. Minot, pleasantly. "I think I can remember Mr. Minot's mother speaking of an Aunt Elizabeth who went west and was seldom heard from."

"Well," explained Uncle Joseph, whose hands showed unmistakable signs of toil, "we were pioneers in our part of the country. There was no way, sometimes, to send letters, and we had to work too hard at first. Afterward, when things got easier, the family was scattered and we didn't know how to reach it. If I hadn't met a man in Portland who came from here and knew you folks I never would have known where to look for you."

Like all the rest of Beverley's little world, Uncle Joseph was immensely taken with the girl, who, in her graduating gown, appeared even sweeter than usual. As the restless old man stayed only a week, he had no opportunity to discover that Beverley, instead of being the beautiful, sweet-tasting Oregon peach to which he had fancifully likened her was, in reality, just a little, tart Upper Michigan cranberry—fair and rosy-red without, but of a knife-like acidity within.

But Granduncle Joseph stayed only a week. If he had stayed for a month it is probable that worthy Louise and not Beverley would have received quiet, unassuming little Uncle Joseph's astonishing parting gift. As things were, it fell to Beverley.

This gift was just a little white envelope slipped into Mrs. Minot's hand at parting. Inside were two thin slips of paper. On one was written in a stiff, unaccustomed hand: "Beverley says she would like to go to college. Perhaps this will make it possible."

"This" was a check for an amount that certainly made Bevereley's going not only possible but probable.

"And we hadn't even guessed," cried delighted Mrs. Minot, "that Uncle Joseph was not a poor relation!"

"No," returned properly-tailored Mr. Minot, "he told me himself, with the most refreshing ingenuousness, that he had bought the suit he wore Sundays at a Chicago fire sale for nine dollars."

"They cheated him," flashed quick-tongued Beverley. "If Uncle Joseph and all his belongings had been put up at auction I shouldn't have considered it safe to bid more than ten dollars for the lot!"

"Yes," agreed Mrs. Minot, "he spoke so modestly of his 'little place in Oregon' that I supposed, somehow, that it had been a failure. Anyway, it was beautiful of him to do so much for Beverley."

Later in the season when happy Beverley had chosen her college and had made up one or two necessary studies, one of her ephemeral friends wrote that a certain Miss Bay, who was to be one of the girl's future instructors, was to spend a few weeks in Beverley's town.

"It will mean a great deal to you next winter," wrote the enthusiastic correspondent, "if you succeed in making a friend of Miss Bay. She is a person of strong likes and dislikes, and she never can do enough for the girls she takes a fancy to. It's considered a great honor to be one of 'Miss Bay's pets.' See to it that you become a pet. I'm sure you'll have no difficulty in making a good impression—you always make a beautiful impression."

Then the diplomatic, well-meaning friend tucked in, to Beverley's subsequent undoing, a little additional information about Miss Bay's personality, her family, and her fads.

For the next few days both Beverley and Mrs. Minot were occupied with the making of plans for the entertainment of Miss Bay. Both could see that it would mean much for an unknown and possibly homesick girl to begin college life with a powerful friend at court.

It was considered probable that Miss Bay, being a stranger would go to one or another of the three hotels that the town afforded. Accordingly, Mr. Minot industriously searched the hotel registers each day to see if the expected lady had arrived, for Beverley meant to waste no time before making her good impression. The registers, however, proved faithless guides.

At this time Beverley's newest and consequently dearest friend was Maud Powers. Maud's manner, indeed, had been slightly cold for some days past—in fact, Beverley had an uneasy consciousness of having likened Maud's peculiarly springy walk to the gait most natural to a grasshopper. Being of a sanguine disposition, however, Beverley hoped that no one had been unkind enough to repeat what she had said.

That Wednesday evening it occurred to Beverley that she had not had an opportunity to tell Maud about the expected coming of Miss Bay. Maud's home was halfway across the town. It was too late and too dark for Beverley to pay her a visit that evening, but, just across the street lived obliging Mrs. Brown, whose telephone practically belonged to the neighborhood.

"Oh, Mrs. Brown," said Beverley, tripping in after tapping lightly at the open door, "please may I use your 'phone?"

Mrs. Brown, who was entertaining a guest in her sitting-room—not an unusual circumstance, since Mrs. Brown rented her entire upper floor to roomers—consented pleasantly. Beverley, without a second glance at either Mrs. Brown or the other woman, stepped to the telephone which was fastened to the wall of the same room.

"Six-fourteen," she called, in her high, clear voice. "That you, Maud? Where've you been all the week? I've something perfectly lovely to tell you. Yes, about college. One of the instructors—a Miss Millicent Bay—is going to be in town this week and I'm going to do my very best to make a good impression on her.

"What? Oh, yes, I've heard a lot about her from Lucy Clark. There's something queer about her family—her father embezzled or something and her grandfather—or else her uncle went insane. Her lover jilted—

"What? No, I haven't seen her, but Lucy says her taste in clothes is something weird! She has awfully queer eyes, and her mouth is just exactly like a catfish's, but, strangely enough, she's quite popular.

"What's that? Yes, of course, she'd a perfect fright—queer dispositoin, too. She takes strong likes and dislikes—

"Can't help liking me? Oh, thank you, I hope she can't. Good-bye, dear, I'll see you to-morrow."

Beverley turned from the telephone to find Mrs. Brown and the unknown guest visibly a great deal more moved than the occasion seemed to warrant. Mrs. Brown's broad countenance was quite purple from her efforts to suppress her almost uncontrollable mirth. The guest's rather plain face displayed such a variety of conflicting emotions that it would be difficult to say which was uppermost. Both ladies were gazing straight into Beverley's surprised blue eyes.

"What have I said? What have I done?" appealed Beverley, addressing her broadly-smiling neighbor. "What have I done?"

"This," explained Mrs Brown, "is Miss Bay—my friend, Miss Bay.

"Oh!" gasped Beverley, turning pink. "Oh, my goodness!"

"I have heard of you from your friend, Lucy," said Miss Bay, with her eyes still on embarrassed Beverley, "and it seems that you have likewise heard of me."

"I'm too ashamed for words," faltered Beverley, hanging her head. "I feel too foolish to live."

"My dear," said Miss Bay, with a sudden smile that showed distressed Beverley that a countenance might be pleasant in spite of an undeniably large mouth, "one doesn't need to go to college in order to learn to curb an ungenerous tongue. If you had said all these unkind things after knowing me, I'm afraid I couldn't have forgiven you—as it is, I mean to forget all about it."

Perhaps generous Miss Bay did succeed in forgetting, but it is certain that Beverley did not. She found it a little hard to teach a seventeen-year-old tongue new tricks, but the tongue learned them, and, after a time, took to saying pleasant things quite as glibly as it had ever said the other kind and with much better results.—Forward.

"No, he didn't say so. I found it out myself."

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Here's a piece of news that possibly you have not seen in any of the smaller daily papers: Our continued story, "The Bronze Vase," is to be printed in The Christian-Evangelist, a chapter of it every week (you know formerly we ran three weeks of our continued story and then took a week's rest); and besides that, every other week, a page of our Advance Society Letters will appear with the continued story. So our work is growing and enlarging. More continued story, more Av. S. matter! The Christian-Evangelist helps by giving the additional space; I help by giving the extra work; now, you help by writing letters, joining the Av. S., or keeping up your work. Let's hear from you. The Av. S. is booming; don't you want to be in the boom?

You will remember that we started Charlie's Education Fund with a ten dollar bill. I wrote to the one sending the first corner stone, to know if I might print his name, as he had objected to being published. Here is his answer—he is E. E. Herriman, Mooresville, Mo.: "I don't care for publicity in the matter of giving, but it will be all right any way you fix it. I am a farmer and don't have much to give; am paying on the tithe plan" (that is, gives one tenth of his income) "and like these debts paid up." (That is, considers that what he does for orphans and missionaries is not a gift that he can give or not give as he may feel, but a debt he owes God because God has lent him strength and means. I didn't want to print Mr. Herriman's name because he gave this large sum of $10, or to make a stir about him on account of the great amount it is because he proposed the plan of "Charlie's Education Fund." If he had been a little girl sending a dime, I would have been just as anxious to print the name. If a dime is what you can afford, and just a dime, don't let anybody run themselves into embarrassing situations by sending fifteen cents. Now, since the receipt of this $10, I have received a five dollar bill from a person who objects to the name being printed. So there is $15 as a starter on Charlie's Education Fund!)

Grace Winders, Bloomington, Ill.: "I have been writing on the train and that is why this is so crooked. We will stop at Bloomington, and I will mail this there, so I will just head my note from that place. I liked 'The Woodneys.' Maybe some day we will hear more of them(?). I am going to join the Av. S. I am like Lillie Fisher, I don't see how the Av. S. could get along without Felix. I don't think I would ever have joined without him. Ruth Sampsel is a brave girl to keep the rules three years and then fail in them, and begin right away keeping them. She says she makes Whitefoot's fur fly. I expect he is not very tame if that is the way she treats her cat. My cat is named Jonah, and why do you think? Because it is so fond of fish. I feel very sorry for Charlie, but tell him to keep his mind made up to get that business education he talks about. You don't have to have two legs to get an education and make a good living. My papa has only one leg; the other one was shot away in the war when he was a young man and he got along fine, anyway. After the war, maybe he didn't have but one leg, but he married a young lady from Virginia, and that's how I got my mamma. It is nearly time for the train to stop, so good-bye." Harry Buckley, Lawrenceburg, Ky. (Here is one of our old friends, Relly Turner, of DeBarre, Wis., was calling for): "Enclosed find $2 for Charlie boy and for the brave little woman in far away China—may God's richest blessings rest upon them both." (That brings Charlie's Education Fund up to $16.) "If every reader of the Av. S. page would contribute just a little to this worthy cause, I am sure the knowledge of having done something in the Master's name would make them feel happier. I also send my second quarter's report. I hope Felix is getting used to his new home by this time and purrs his contentment in his old-time fashion. Both of you being Missourians, of course you will have to be shown before you can adjust yourselves to your new surroundings; I suspect Felix will suit first." (I am not so sure about that. Felix shows a decided conservatism down here. He stays in the house every moment we will let him, and being off from his kinfolks, of course we don't like to cross him. He sleeps till mealtime, is very much awake until fed, then sleeps. As one result, he is growing very fat. I think if he would stir around more and make acquaintance among the Arkansas cats he would like it better. In Missouri he used to be very lively and sociable. Perhaps being so far south where it never gets cold makes him sluggish.) "Our Sunday school gave a nice entertainment during the holidays, 'The Christ Child in Art, Song and Story,' by home talent, the 'Art' part consisting of splendid stereopticon views. The school owns the machine and we find it a great help in entertaining and instructing the pupils." Clarence and Carl Per Lee, Grand Rapids, Mich. (two more of our faithful friends of the past—a letter came, not long since, asking what had become of them): "Enclosed please find $2 for Charlie's Education Fund. We are interested in both Charlie and Miss Drusie Malott." (Which brings the fund to $18, hurrah! You understand, of course, that we have our regular orphan's fund, which is used for Charlie's support, to pay his expenses on his summer trips, buy him crutch-rubbers, etc.) Here, by the way, is a letter from Charlie himself: "I received your new book some days ago." ("Stork's Nest" was sent Charlie as a Christmas present.) "I finished it this morning and I found it very interesting. I would have liked for it to have a dozen more chapters. I liked Christmas very well. I got a pair of gloves, some handkerchiefs, two neckties, a mouth harp" (Jew's harp?) "all the nuts and candy I could eat, 'Stork's Nest' and a watch. I have never thought about what school I could go to. There are two business schools in this city. I don't know how I could get my board paid unless I could work my way through in some way. We have school here in the house"

He said he could skate to school and back." (That's the slickest way to get an education that I know of.) "There has not been much snow here in St. Louis, yet. We had vacation here all last week. Give Felix a gentle stroke for me, and tell him to continue his pursuit after the Arkansas mice."

Drusie R. Malott, Tai Ming-fu, North China: "Your letter of Sept. 12—less three would have been my birthday—with check for $5, was received. How can I ever thank you, my friend, and the dear ones of the Av. S., who make it possible, for all your interest? It touches my heart to think that God has given me such true friends; really, your untiring interest exceeds them all. May the Lord give you a hundred fold in return." (He will indeed give us far more than a hundredfold if you are the means of converting one Chinaman wholly and permanently to the true religion.) "The language? Yes, I am learning it fairly well. I spend two to four hours daily with the teacher; can make myself understood, but can understand others even better. I help in the office all afternoon—office corresponding, typewriting, etc. Mornings are spent with the teacher, and with my Bible, and in prayer. After supper (we do not have dinner in the evening but at noon) several of us have a Bible reading and prayer. May this be a precious New Year to you all. I trust that at Christmas, God gave you his own Christmas message, for you already have his best gift—Christ in his fulness Praise God." (Drusie's receipts are necessarily tardy. In looking over my Advance Society Account Book, in which every cent ever received from you is entered and accounted for, I find that in 1905, I had nothing to send Drusie in January, May or July. On each of the other nine months it was my pleasure, thanks to your loving gifts, to send her $5 in our money, or more than $10, "Mexican." May it not be that during 1906 we will not have to miss a single month in sending our $5? I sincerely trust so. Now, right while I am still in this parenthesis, I am going to play a sort of joke. I have a letter from Ashley S. Johnson, who conducts a school where young men, hoping to become ministers, may work their way through. It was because Charlie did not think himself moved toward the ministry that Mr. Johnson decided he could not accept our orphan—and very properly, I believe. Mr. Johnson writes that for the past fourteen months he has worked without one dollar for salary or anything else, yet they need $1,800 to feed his pupils during the coming year. He asks for help. Now, I'll tell you what I'll do; I'll send him fifty cents if he sees this item and writes to me that he sees it; and I'll send him a dollar if he writes that he found this offer without somebody telling him it was in this paper. I want to find out if he reads our page. I've noticed that many of our brethren who are working for good causes know very little about the work of other brethren who are working for good causes. I think it a sad thing that of all our leading men, the men who conduct our missionary boards, and write our best articles for our religious papers, and are foremost among the speakers in our Church, only two or three have ever done a thing for the Advance Society. And why is it? I delight in helping our church boards, and it is a privilege to read the gifted papers of our best writers. Why don't they help us a little, if not with money, at least with a word to show they know we're alive? So here's $1, Mr. Johnson, if you read this without help!)

I announced that the continued story would be called the "Secret Bowl," but I grew afraid that some might think it a temperance story. I like temperance stories, but mine is not that kind, and I didn't want a wrong impression made. When I went to change the name, I naturally thought of "Secret Pitcher," but that sounded too much like playing baseball on Sunday, so I decided on "The Bronze Vase." I hope you will forgive me for not knowing my mind better at first. I have some interesting letters left over for two weeks hence.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

Secretary W. R. Warren's Education Day literature is a new demonstration of his fitness to lead in this Centennial Propaganda. Look for the glow of his pen in this department next week.

Our National Benevolent Association has recently dedicated a large addition to the Old Folks' Home at Jacksonville, Ill., and established a new hospital at Valparaiso, Ind. This corps of the Lord's army is all athrill with activity and eager to accomplish the work given it to do by 1909.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, ever alert and responsive to duty's call, and under the leadership of Calla D. Harrison, of Louisville, is making special efforts to at once raise a Centennial Commemorative fund of $100,000 for their beneficent ministries, and will succeed.

President McLean reports the current receipts for Foreign Missions during the first quarter of this fiscal year as nearly $11,000 greater than for the corresponding time last year, and that more churches are preparing for the March offering than ever before in the history of the society.

The prospects for Christian Education are brightening as thoughts of the approaching Centennial remind the brethren that among the mighty achievements of Alexander Campbell none is more conspicuous or enduring than what he undertook for the sake of an educated ministry. Bro. J. C. Mason reports Mrs. Mabel Lea has recently added $10,000 to the endowment of a Christian college at Leaday, Tex., and contributes $2,500 to current expenses, and promises other help. Judge Irwin, of Indiana, offers $100,000 to Butler College, provided others will add $150,000. Under President W. E. Garrison's leadership this quarter-million endowment will doubtless soon be secured.

State Missions are being caught up by the Centennial Propaganda tidal wave of prosperity and lifted to places of greater power and consequent usefulness. R. A. Long has offered $5,000 to the Permanent Fund of the Missouri Board if his brethren of the state will add $15,000 more; and Brother T. A. Abbott says they will. He adds there has never been so much enthusiasm in the rather prosaic work of paying off church debts as now, and that by 1909 our churches will practically be from under that burden. Secretary W. S. Lowe, of Kansas, writes there will soon be reports of trophies won for the Master in that state that will make inspirational reading. Representatives of all our church interests are living in an atmosphere of new and kindling hopefulness.

Significance to the Churches of 100,000 Readers of The Christian-Evangelist.

BY JAMES NORVEL CRUTCHER.

In the first place, The Christian-Evangelist is owned by those it represents. Its officers and owners are men who have been for years faithfully practicing their preaching in private life and in public works. This is a matter of much importance. It is a good thing for "defenders of the faith" to belong to "the household of faith." This is at least consistent and safe. It gives the impression that the faith is the thing, not the counting room. With such an impression, confidence is inspired, consistency is assured, enthusiasm of the better sort is aroused and those on the battle line have their interest enlarged. Greed for gain does not cause The Christian-Evangelist to mix the Lord's prayer with liver advertisements, nor the Great Commission with oil and mining schemes. Its advertising pages are free from graft.

The Christian-Evangelist is carefully edited. I sent an article to The Christian-Evangelist months ago and it has never appeared. I hope it never will. The pages of The Christian-Evangelist breathe a genuinely spiritual life. It contends earnestly, but, as I see it, not in the spirit of bigotry. It is liberally conservative and conservatively liberal. It does not make any pretension to a monopoly of the truth, but is constantly reminding us that we need to reverently and persistently seek the truth. It sometimes acknowledges that there are some problems upon which some things are yet to be learned, and modestly asserts that we have not all reached the heights. It even assures us that we sometimes err, and that we should "reach unto the things that are before, looking unto Jesus."

Like the poet-priest, Brother Garrison is constantly reminding us that:

> "I walked in the world with the worldly;
> I craved what the world never gave;
> And I said: 'In the world each Ideal.
> That shines like a star on life's wave,
> Is wrecked on the shores of the Real,
> And sleeps like a dream in a grave.'"

Who has not felt the helpful uplift from the "Easy Chair"? And is not this spirit through all the pages of this magnificent journal, really religious in tone as well as in name? Souls are made of these things, brethren. The influence of such a spirit, when it finds expression in so many ways on the printed pages of The Christian-Evangelist, can but rest as a benediction upon all its readers. Why enlarge its circulation? Because The Christian-Evangelist possesses the spirit of Christ, without which we are none of his. And the more widespread this spirit, the more secure that faith we should extend and defend.

One hundred thousand readers for The Christian-Evangelist will prove an everlasting benediction upon the whole body known as Disciples of Christ. Every preacher should make it his business to see to this matter. This is as much a part of his business as working up a missionary offering or holding a protracted meeting.

Chillicothe, Mo.

EXPECTATIONS COMPELLING SUCCESS.

I find The Christian-Evangelist indispensable. I wish you the continued and increased favor of the brethren. You should soon have 100,000 subscribers.
Brazil, Ind. E. L. Day

It seems to me The Christian-Evangelist grows better and better. The spirit of the paper is indeed Christlike. I wish every member of our churches could read it. Mrs. A. S. Younkin.

The Christian-Evangelist and the Bible are all I have to go by. For six years I have not seen a Christian minister. Thank you for your help along the heavenly way.
Ellsworth, Wis. Mrs. M. S. Hodges.

The Christian-Evangelist has been a welcome visitor to my home since it bore the name of "Gospel Echo." Long may Brother Garrison and the blessed influence of this pure, clean paper live!
Buffalo, Mo. Mrs. D. M. Rust.

I want to tell you that I heartily believe every word of your editorial in The Christian-Evangelist on the importance of that journal's influence in the future of our work. You shall have my hearty co-operation. J. C. Mason.

From India's Jungles.

The Christian-Evangelist is always a welcome visitor to our lonely outposts here in the jungle. May its mission be abundantly blessed by the Father.
India. Walter G. Menzies.

A Merchant's Opinion.

Enclosed find $1.50 for the paper which I regard as the best in the land. It gets better as it grows older. Yours for Christian union on Christ's and the apostles' platform. James M. Beasley.

Why Not?

Enclosed find $1.50 for one year's subscription to your valuable paper. I am so helped by The Christian-Evangelist, I can not see why more do not drop less valuable papers, if need be, and apply the money to The Christian-Evangelist. Nothing else but the Bible gives me so much encouragement and comfort.
Garfield, Ark. Sarah A. Gardner.

It Will Leap and Bound.

I am glad you have taken hold of your present work, and I look for the circulation to go up by leaps and bounds. I shall help do all I can, for I do think The Christian-Evangelist is the sanest and wisest of all our journals, and best calculated to win friends to our great plea. It makes a rare combination of loyalty and charity, and sounds a high, clear keynote for the music of our marching hosts. E. O. Sharpe.
Winchester, Ill.

Current Events.

Football Again.

The action of the Harvard board of overseers in abolishing intercollegiate football marks another step in the progress of athletic reform. The action is in line with recommendations recently made by President Eliot.

President Hadley, in a speech at an alumni dinner, treated the subject in a manner which, to our mind, lacked his usual profundity. He made three points: First, that football is the least dangerous and most democratic of the "major sports"; second, that unfair play is to be prevented by refusing to play with teams which play unfairly; third, that any needed changes in the rules may be safely left to the rules committee and that Yale is willing to trust Mr. Camp as its representative in that matter. On these three points, we suggest the following comments: First, President Hadley's definition of major sports includes only deep sea sailing, big-game hunting and football. Perhaps automobile-racing and mountain-climbing might be added. Very likely football is less dangerous and more democratic than any of these. But what valid reason is there for classing a college game with these sports which are distinguished by danger and expense? "Major sports" are, by definition, one may say, those which are dangerous and expensive. To include football in the list because it has these characteristics, and to defend it because it has them in a less degree than the other sports of the same class, strikes us as a pretty feeble sort of defense. As to the second point, about fair play, the suggestion to refuse to play with unfair teams would be adequate if there was only an occasional unfair team here and there, but it fails to touch the case if, as is charged, the character of the game is such that it puts a premium on unfairness in every team. The chief problem is not to force your opponent to play fair but to get the spirit of fair play in your own team. President Hadley's suggestion affords no relief on this point. Third, the present rules committee has had American football under its control for years and has shown neither the ability nor the disposition to make such reforms as are now demanded by intelligent public opinion. The committee, and to a large extent Mr. Camp, is responsible for the present system which is now under criticism. Tariff reform by the friends of the tariff may be a possibility, but it is futile to hope for football reform through the rules committee.

A Universal Language.

Not long after the confusion of tongues at the Tower of Babel, some enterprising Mesopotamian who had been struggling for the first time with the irregular verbs of an alien speech, in an effort to regain communication with some of his friends, doubtless suggested that some steps ought to be taken toward a return to a universal language. We have no historical evidence, but on general principles it must have been so. And from that day to this, and more particularly since the development of close relations of trade and diplomacy between nations of different languages, there has been a succession of attempts to create and popularize a universal language. We all remember the rise and fall of Volapuk. Idiom neutral was its lineal descendant. The proposal to use a simplified and modernized Latin has many advocates. Tutonish is an artificial language whose name indicates the guiding principle of its construction. Realizing that it is much easier to construct an ideal language than to get it adopted, one enthusiast has proposed the calling of an international congress of savants to form a universal language, and the establishment of a very elaborate system of bounties to secure its general adoption. The total estimated cost of this scheme is five billion dollars, but what is that in comparison with the magnitude of the anticipated benefits, for, says the zealous advocate, "Ignorance and mental slavery would pass away, and the wars, famines and pestilences would vanish from the globe." At present, Esperanto is the most promising candidate among the international languages. It has attained the dignity of a descriptive article in the "Atlantic Monthly." We are told that this language has already been accepted by many influential persons and societies, that there are large clubs devoted to its cultivation in the principal cities of Europe (3,000 in Paris, for example,) and that there are about twenty-five periodicals published in the language. At a congress of Esperantists held in Boulogne, twelve hundred representatives from twenty-two nationalities were present, and during the session, which lasted a week, the resources of the language for all purposes, from argument to flirtation and from humor to religion, were fully put to the test. The simplicity of the language is indicated by the fact that its complete grammar occupies only four printed pages in the official text-book, and the writer in the "Atlantic" (who is a professor of modern languages and not a devotee of this movement) says that, taking up the text-book for recreation at three o'clock one Sunday afternoon, he could read fluently at four o'clock, and after supper wrote a letter in Esperanto.

The Gaelic Revival.

A movement quite the opposite of that for a universal language, is the Gaelic revival led by Mr. Douglass Hyde and the Gaelic League. The purpose of this is to revive the spirit and customs of the Irish nation, and especially the Irish language. Mr. Hyde, who is now on a lecture tour in this country, pays eloquent tribute to the literature and civilization of ancient Ireland, and urges the preservation of the old Gaelic language as the best means of keeping intact the Irish tradition and nationality and of handing down to posterity these literary treasures. As to the main facts, there can be no doubt. It is a matter of history that early Ireland, before the domination of England, or even of Rome, in England, had an independent civilization and literature and a highly inflected language which is one of the purest of Aryan tongues. History must recognize this, and the Irish should remember it, and the public, whose estimate of the green isle is summed up in the grotesque "stage Irishman," ought to be ashamed of itself and find out the facts. But at the same time the attempt to revive the ancient speech as the vernacular and to print it in medieval black-letter and turn back the hand upon the dial, seems unjustifiable.

The Statehood Bill.

The statehood bill has passed the House, but its real troubles will begin in the Senate. The bill is an administration measure, and just at present the Senate is much less inclined to defer to the President's wishes than is the House. Moreover, the Senate is always conservative about admitting new states, whose senators, in spite of their small constituencies, would share equally in the dignities and privileges of that exclusive body. A bill for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one state could have been passed almost without debate, for the population, wealth and social and intellectual conditions of those territories leave scarcely any basis for opposition to their appeal for statehood. But there is no general demand for the admission of Arizona and New Mexico, either separately or jointly. The prevailing sentiment in both territories is opposed to joint statehood. As an alternative, they would prefer to retain their territorial status, though of course either would accept separate statehood gladly enough. The most urgent reason for their union is that the large Republican majority in New Mexico would more than outweigh the Democratic majority in Arizona and would make the joint state Republican. This political motive is the only thing that stands in the way of the sensible and just course of considering each case on its merits.

Hapgood and "Town Topics."

The libel suit of "Town Topics" against Norman Hapgood, editor of "Collier's Weekly," has been decided in favor of the defendant. Mr. Hapgood editorially made certain severe statements about Town Topics and about Colonel Mann and Judge Deuel in regard to their connection with the famous publication, "Fads and Fancies." This celebrated volume was evidently designed chiefly for the publication of scandalous and unpleasant information about those wealthy New Yorkers who would not pay for the privilege of being left out. Mr. Hapgood accused them of practicing blackmail. His defense in the trial was that the charge was true. The evidence showed that nearly $200,000 had been collected from men socially and financially prominent in New York, in sums varying from five thousand to twenty-five thousand dollars. Sometimes the contributions were made in the form of loans, without security and not intended to be repaid, or the purchase of worthless stock. The evidence put "Town Topics" in a very bad light, and it also sets one to wondering about the private lives of the eminently respectable gentlemen who have been willing to purchase immunity from publicity at such a high rate. It took the jury ten minutes to decide that Mr. Hapgood was not guilty. "Collier's" is doing a real public service in risking a few libel suits to say some things which ought to be said.

Christian Union: An Historical Study.

I. The Apostolic Age.

3. Unity of the Early Church Tested.

It should be stated that the unity which prevailed in the Church immediately following Pentecost, and for a few years later, was of that simple, naive kind which flowed naturally out of their first love for each other and for their common Master, and which had not been tried. This divine impulse was sufficient to overcome, for the time at least, the ancient differences and alienations which existed betwen sects and races, but would the bond of unity be strong enough to hold the Church together when there should spring up within the Church itself serious differences of opinion touching the very nature and scope of the new religion? It was not long before the unity of the Church in the apostolic age was subjected to such a test.

In less than a score of years, after Christianity had passed beyond Jewish limitations, and Gentile converts had been brought into the Church, a fierce controversy arose concerning the reception of Gentile converts, as to whether they should not be required to submit to circumcision and to keep the law of Moses. Paul, the missionary to the Gentiles, championed the cause of Christian liberty, and held firmly to the position that to impose circumcision on these converts was to nullify the Gospel, while to accept circumcision was to become a debtor to do the whole law and to be severed from Christ. (Gal. 5:1-4.) On the other hand we can well understand how radical and revolutionary it must have seemed to certain Jewish brethren to receive on terms of religious equality those who had never submitted to circumcision and the Jewish law. To them it seemed like trampling under feet the religion of their fathers, and therefore not to be tolerated. This man Paul, who was receiving Gentile converts into the Church without circumcision and was teaching them that the law of Moses was superseded by the Gospel of Christ, was, in their estimation, an arch heretic whose mouth should be stopped.

It is easy for us, at this distant age, to underestimate the gravity of that issue. It was a question of far-reaching importance, on the right settlement of which depended the future triumphs of Christianity in the world. It was the beginning of that age-long conflict between Christian liberty and a stolid and narrow conservatism which clings to ideas and customs long after they have ceased to meet the needs of men. The question came to a crisis when "certain men came down [to Antioch] from Judea and taught the brethren, saying, "Except ye be circumcised after the custom of Moses ye can not be saved." Is it too severe to say that these self-appointed regulators of their brethren were not half so much concerned about saving these Antiochians as they were about saving their traditions? We are not surprised to read that "Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and questioning with them." The result was that "the brethren appointed that Paul and Barnabas and certain other of them should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question" (Acts 15:1, 2). There the matter was amicably settled, and settled in favor of Paul's position, with a few concessions to Jewish prejudice which involved no principle, and the observance of certain moral requirements which Paul had not neglected.

Gentile converts need not be circumcised, but they would be asked to "abstain from the pollutions of idols, and from fornication and from what is strangled and from blood." This was the settlement which "seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us"—the apostles and elders.

Thus a great crisis in the Church was safely passed. It was fortunate that the cause of Christian liberty had such an able champion as Paul. It would have been easy to have split the Church in twain on that subject, if the leaders had been less guided by the Holy Spirit, and had been ambitious to be party leaders. It was the spirit of unity, and loyalty to a common Lord, on the part of Paul and Barnabas—the liberal leaders—and Peter and James—the conservative leaders—that brought about this happy settlement and averted a disruption in the Church. It may be questioned whether a single division in the Church to-day is based on a more important question of difference than that which this conference at Jerusalem settled. What were the principles observed in this settlement?

1. Christian liberty prevailed over the narrower interpretation of God's will and purpose.

2. But there was no compromise of truth. The will of Christ, as manifested in his word and in the events of that day, was honored and carried out.

3. Love triumphed over partisan feeling, and catholicity over provincialism.

"Our Pastoral Polity."

We received a letter recently from a reader of The Christian-Evangelist requesting us to write an editorial on the above topic. There was no evidence in the letter that the writer intended his request to be humorous. It seemed to be a sober request for some information on this subject. What our brother wishes, no doubt, is the custom of our better churches in regard to the employment and dismissal of pastors or preachers. The question is well worth asking and considering, for we are constantly seeing illustrations of how not to do it.

First of all, it should be said that our polity is congregational; that is to say, each congregation has the right to select and call to its service its own minister and to perform such other acts as relate to its own internal affairs. The congregation is the source of authority in these practical affairs.

In the next place, it should be stated that well organized congregations perform these congregational functions through their regularly constituted organs, or officers, who take the lead in such matters. The elders and deacons of any given church are appointed to look after its spiritual and material interests. If one or more of these elders possess the qualifications for ministering to the flock, they may be called to this service by the church, devoting their whole time, or so much of it as may be necessary, to that work. But if the elders are unsuitable, or are unwilling, to take upon themselves the work of publicly preaching the Gospel, they should, with the aid and co-operation of the other officers of the church, look out some one whom they deem suitable for such work and recommend him to the church for its approval.

No man should ever be presented to the congregation to be voted upon as minister without the consent and sanction of the officers of the church, who are especially charged with the responsibility of caring for it. The official board should first agree upon some one to be recommended to the church, and no minister should consent to have his name presented to any congregation without the consent of its official board. Nor should the officers present any name to the church about which they themselves are divided. Division in the board means division in the church.

Ordinarily the congregation should and does call the man recommended to it by its board of officers. If, however, it should refuse to do so for reasons it deems good, the officers should seek out some one else, and not insist upon a minister who would be objectionable to even a respectable minority in the church.

There are two extremes here to be avoided: One is, where the board of officers assumes entire responsibility in calling a preacher or in dismissing him, without asking approval of the church. The other is, where the congregation overrides the action of its official board, and acts without its approval. Both these courses lead to confusion and strife.

It is a very unwise and dangerous practice to circulate a petition asking a minister to resign, without the consent or action of the official board, or to petition him to continue after the official board has accepted his resignation or advised it.

As to the selection of a preacher, we would strongly advise against the sampling system. Do not ask a preacher to come and preach a "trial sermon." You are not calling him merely on his ability to preach sermons. It is far more satisfactory to call him upon his record as a minister, or if he be a young man, upon his character and promise of usefulness. If you must sample his preaching send a committee to hear him in his own church.

Again, do not hunt for star preachers, or brilliant pulpit orators If you should have such a one, make the most of him, by all means, and keep him—if you can! But rather seek a godly man, with an education and culture adapted to your field, whose life will be a daily commentary upon his sermons.

When you get such a man keep him as long as you can. Do not employ him for a year, but indefinitely—as long as mutually agreeable. Pay him his salary promptly, and pay him enough salary so that he can pay his debts and hold up his head as a man. Pray for him; speak well of him; overlook slight faults, and while he is making a church, you will be making a preacher.

Whatever you do or do not do, do not quarrel, and divide over a preacher. No preacher worthy of his high calling will allow himself to become a bone of contention. No church, worthy to be called a Christian church, will allow itself to be divided and its influence neutralized in the community, by its petty quarrels about personal preferences. Divisions in a church proceed from carnality. The spiritual church is a united church.

Notes and Comments.

A correspondent who calls in question the personality of the Holy Spirit, writes:

> "But you may possibly have a different idea from what I have as to what constitutes personality; for it is a difficult matter with me to form an idea of personality without associating it with something visible and tangible."

Then, of course, it follows that God is an impersonal being, or influence, and when we pray to him we are praying only to an impersonal principle. Of course this takes all the life out of prayer, and destroys the whole conception of fellowship with God. Such are some of the destructive effects of a false theory. As a matter of fact, neither visibility nor tangibility is an essential feature of personality. Death destroys our visible and tangible bodies, but it does not destroy our personality. Consciousness, character and will constitute personality, and these may exist, and do exist, in God, independent of visible and tangible form.

Many people in Missouri, we think, will be surprised at the following statement taken from advance sheets of State Superintendent Carrington's annual report of public schools:

> "At least two-thirds of the children of the state have no rights or privileges in any public high school, or in any grade of work above the eighth. The fundamental principle of education is disregarded when pupils of any district of the state are denied the privilege enjoyed by the children of another district. If the provision of the constitution which declares that free public schools are to be maintained for the gratuitous instruction of all children between the ages of six and twenty years was carried out, there must be a good high school within easy reach of every boy and girl of the state, a school that each had a right to attend, free of tuition charges."

This being the case, there would seem to be an imperative need for a steady increase in the number of high schools throughout the state, if the state is to have a future citizenship worthy of its great possibilities.

The Standard Oil crowd have only one reply to the testimony Attorney-General Hadley is ferreting out against them, and that is, "Hadley wants to be a second Joseph W. Folk, and become governor of Missouri." We see nothing criminal in this ambition. There is room for several Mr. Folks, and Mr. Hadley may well aspire to walk in the footsteps of so worthy a man.

"The Missouri Issue," the organ of the Anti-Saloon League in Missouri, contains an article in a recent issue on "Paris and Monroe County," in which it says:

> "We have a hard battle in Paris, but we are determined to bring up the strong, stalwart reserve in the country and win the victory, though against great odds. In Paris nine out of fifteen officers of one of the leading churches signed saloon petitions, and one church officer actually rents buildings to saloons. All told, 47 members of one church, 14 of another, 5 of another and 1 of another signed saloon petitions."

It is with no little surprise, and, we may add, disappointment, we read the above statement. We do not pause to ask which one of the "leading churches" it is in which "nine out of fifteen officers signed saloon petitions, and one of the church officers actually rents buildings to saloons." We had hoped that the churches of Missouri, at least, had cleared their skirts of this abominable traffic, in so far, at least, as that no member in good standing would sign a saloon petition or rent his property to a saloon. How can any church expect to wage a successful war with "the world, the flesh, and the devil," while its members, and even its officers, have compromised their influence and standing in the community by such action? We are more sorry for this than words can express. If any church member so incriminated should happen to see this, let us plead with him that he at once break all partnership with this contaminating curse of our time.

The "Herald and Presbyter," of Cincinnati, we usually think of as a staid, sober, matter-of-fact sort of religious journal that jogs along at an orthodox pace, and that wouldn't know a joke if it should meet one in the road. But occasionally our venerable Presbyterian contemporary shows a fine sense of humor, as may be seen from the following recent editorial utterances:

> "The 'Christian Standard,' organ of the more enlightened and progressive section of the Christian (Campbellite) Church, opposes the federation of Churches. . . . If this spirit appears in a paper representing the more progressive, evangelical and fraternal part of the Church, what shall we expect in papers representing old-time Campbellism? . . . It should be generally known that their most progressive and fraternal paper, in this discussion of federation, denies the Christian character of all other Churches."

Let no one say that the "H. & P." is incapable of perpetrating a joke!

Referring to the discussion on the Holy Spirit, a correspondent writes: "I would like a little arc-light on one point. How do Bro.——— and others account for 'the influence of the spirit' of the devil? He has no Bible, no 'word'; or have they gone over to the uncircumcised on this subject and elminate the devil altogether?" That raises a question of demonology into which we will not here enter.

G. W. Jackson, writing from Stella Lodge, Craigie, Perth, Scotland, says:

> "Has it occurred to you that now is the time to evangelize France? It seems to me that you must have some converted Frenchmen amongst American Disciples. And, as France did so much for you, in the long ago, you at least owe it to her to give her what you have learned of apostolic doctrine and church order."

Referring to the subject of baptism, he says:

> "For long I was held back by Rom. 6:3, 4, thinking that burial looked backward to death. And so it does, but it also looks forward and we are 'baptized into' (eis) his death—a death like his='the fellowship of his suffering'—'ceasing from sin,' for he died unto sin once for all and now henceforth liveth unto God; so we also. The former may be thought of as justification, the latter sanctification, the work always going forward as we walk in the Spirit and make to die the deeds of the body."

Yes, indeed, baptism has a forward as well as a backward look, and it definitely commits us to a program, the end of which is our transformation into the image of Christ.

Dr. Madison Peters has just stated in a sermon that he has found that nine out of ten women at fashionable restaurants drink the same stuff as men and in equal quantities. This is one of the deplorable facts of the temperance situation. There was a time when no American woman would care to be seen drinking in public.

A sister writes: "Many of our pastors, announcing in the papers their two sermons on Lord's day, state that the evening sermon will be 'evangelistic.' Now, an ordinary observer can tell no difference between the two services. What do they mean by 'evangelistic'?" It is the practice of many of our ministers to devote the sermon in the morning to the deepening of the spiritual life of the church, and in the evening to address their sermons more especialy to "those without," and to give the whole service an evangelistic turn. The music, the text, the sermon, and the exhortation, are all adapted to win men to a confession of Christ. This is no doubt the meaning of the announcement referred to.

A reader wants to know what reply we would make to one who maintains that Campbell's "Christian System" is the "discipline" of the Christian churches. About the most effective answer, we would say, would be to have the person who makes such a charge interview some of our members and find how little they know about the book! It is very curious and interesting how anxious some of our denominational friends are to make it appear that we have a creed and discipline just as they have. Does it not betray a latent consciousness that a human creed is not a very good thing to have? If we had an authoritative creed, besides that found in the New Testament, we should certainly be anxious for people to know what it is, and would publish it abroad. The charge is a silly one—not to base it on any worse grounds—and betrays a lack of information.

At this season of the year the minds of the brethren turn naturally toward the preparation for the foreign missionary offering in March. The steady growth of this work registers, as fairly as anything can do, the spiritual progess of the brotherhood. There is no better evidence that any people have caught the vision of Christ and have entered into fellowship with his great plans and purposes than their zeal for world-wide evangelization. This coming March offering should, of course, reach the high-water mark thus far in our history. This will require, however, painstaking preparation.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair is immensely interested in the life that now is, with all its signs of promise pointing forward to golden ages yet to be. It finds joy and inspiration in all the processes of growth and development which it sees going on in the world. It is thrilled with delight at all the beauty which the beneficent Creator has spread before us in earth and sea and sky. But, on occasion, it loves to get a glimpse beyond the veil, and to pause long enough, amid the clamor of present duties, to reflect on the nature of that life that is to be when this mortal life shall have ended. It is not wrong, we are sure, to try to form for ourselves, with such light as the Scriptures afford, a picture of that other world that lies beyond death, with all its activity and fellowship and blessed fruition. So close is the connection between the life before and after death that one does not experience any severe break in coming back from such a reverie to take up the thread of daily tasks and duties.

We have just been reading a little book bearing the captivating title, "The Redeemed Life After Death," by Charles Cuthbert Hall. Only a trained hand and a disciplined soul can lead us profitably in the contemplation of such a theme. But such a hand and such a soul are manifest in this precious little volume. Thousands of hearts will be comforted by it, and many a burdened soul will find in it courage to go on bravely with the unfinished tasks of life. The first part of the little book presents in a striking way the universality of this belief and hope of life beyond death. This belief did not originate with Christianity. "Ages before the dawn of Christianity the river of this belief, brimming with the hopes and fears of human hearts, ran, like the four-fold river of Eden, through four ancient channels of the religious experiences of our race, the faiths of Egypt, of Babylonia, of Persia, of India. Two thousand years before the Hebrew exodus, the Egyptian Book of the Dead was penetrating that gentle and poetic civilization with the atmosphere of immortality. One thousand years before the Psalter of Israel, the Accadian hymns of Chaldea were voicing the same elemental belief for the Babylonian progenitors of the Hebrew people. Half a millennium before Christ, in the Asiatic empire, between the Caspian and the Persian Gulf, the Zoroastrian Avesta was proclaiming with singular clearness and decision the Parsi faith of life advancing after death to its judgment and its doom. When the Hindoo Aryans swept through the passes of Afghanistan to the plains of the Indus and the Ganges, they brought with them prehistoric hymns breathing the hope of immortality, and telling of an 'everlasting and imperishable world, where there is eternal light and glory.'"

Such was the conviction of the ages and civilization lying back in the misty past. Of course, it was the revelation of Jesus Christ that confirmed this universal assumption of immortality and gave an interpretation to this universal sense of human destiny. In the light of his teaching, and especially of his triumph over death, life beyond the grave is something more than a vague hope. It is a certainty. The fact itself is as clear and indisputable as the fact of Christ himself. But how much remains unknown about the future life! Only a few bold strokes are given to awaken our hope and aspirations, and kindle the imagination, and for the rest we must wait until we shall enter upon the realization of that life. Yet we love to go to the very borderland of revelation, and turn loose Faith and Imagination, if perchance, by their explorations they may bring back some definite information about that world of mystery. As our author says, "In our quiet hours, it is well to reflect upon the confirming and interpreting of our sense of immortality through the Christian Revelation; to take the Key of Death, as from his hand, and open the door of thought into that blessed life that lies beyond. The moment we open the door we are tempted to draw back and to turn away our eyes, confused if not terrified by the mysteries that envelope the future. As soon as we admit the certainty of life beyond death we open questions that we can not answer; we unfold possibilities that we can not limit. How could it be otherwise with a life which we view from afar and of which we have not yet had experience?"

Sure enough, as the author reasons, if we do not understand the phenomena of this present world, if we are baffled by its mysteries, why should we expect to understand all about that other world into the experiences of which we have not yet entered? It is this uncertain knowledge of the future that makes many people fear death. "We have grown used to the kindly earth and its ways. Is it strange that it frightens us sometimes to think of going away from it all forever—the pine trees and the hills, the firesides and the faces that smile and speak? There are moments when the mystery of it all is overwhelming. But this natural and childlike shrinking from that which we do not understand is not the only influence that makes it hard for us sometimes to see the fair, sweet landscape of immortality that lies beyond the tumultuous clouds of mystery." We have raised and debated so many questions in relation to the future life, concerning which it is beyond the power of man to reach a definite decision, that these very controversies have served to create doubt about the future. It is a good thing to turn away from these dogmatic controversies "and look on that peaceful landscape of the redeemed life after death, which, to the eye of Christian faith and hope, sometimes stands forth in such sunny outline that it seems not like a distant, unsubstantial vision, but like that which really it is, the continuance of the eternity that begins here, in time. This is the very gateway through which the mind of Christian faith moves naturally toward that peaceful consummation of a redeemed life after death. To apprehend the life that is to be we must learn to think more largely and sacredly of the life that is now. We must enlarge the scope and measure of To-day; must identify To-day with what we call Eternity."

Dr. Hall is right. Eternal life begins here, in this world. That is the key that unlocks the future. We have but to project this new life in Christ which we have here, with all its unfolding possibilities, across the chasm which we call death, to know something of what life is to be beyond the grave. As the elements of that life here are joy, peace, love, fellowship, friendship, purity, unselfishness, so we must believe that all these shall enter into the life beyond, only in a much larger degree. "Death is the suspension of relations with the physical universe. Life, which was eternal here, goes on undeterred and undissolved by the suspension of this physical relation. This is a part of an endless and indissoluble life—a life that can not be dissolved. The mode of existence may change; relations may be suspended; mourners may go about the streets; the dust may return to the earth as it was; but the spirit which came out from God, which is akin to God, returns to God who gave it; lives with God." In the days of our childhood we thought little of the life beyond because the present life is full of surprises and mysteries and joys. But after a while "it dawns upon one that a large part of the life is over which once, from the standpoint of childhood, seemed a road without an ending; that the sense of indefinite opportunity has changed into the problem, how to do in the time remaining some definite things that wait to be done." If we can feel that the life that we have been living and the work that we have been doing are so vitally related to the life beyond that there is to be no break, and that what we have done and been in the world, has helped in some small degree to bring it on to that perfection which is yet to be, who of us could not consign our tasks here to other hands, in peace, and pass on to whatever service there may be awaiting us in the life unseen?

Our author gathers three great unities of our faith concerning the blessed life after death: "The continuance of personal identity; the progress of the soul; the resurrection of the body." These, indeed, are the great facts of revelation, and how each one of them appeals to the human heart! How we long for our identity in the life beyond! Each one would be himself and not another. And then how precious is the thought of progress after death! "Does the soul at death plunge into the ocean of immediate perfection to endure eternally without the incentives that come through progress and the widening of knowledge?" This, though apparently believed by many, is against reason, experience, and revelation. No; we shall go on ascending forever the hills of God and forever approximating that perfection which is the goal of all our struggles and aspirations. And this continued existence is not to be as disembodied spirits, but we are to be clothed upon with an immortal body adapted to that spiritual world as our present bodies are adapted to the world in which we live. On these blessed certainties we can place our feet as on the Rock of Ages and face unterrified the approaching dissolution.

Chaplains and Prayers

As Seen From the Dome

By
F. D. POWER

The chaplain saved the ship. It is an answer to prayer. Some have thought his function an unnecessary one, and have even suggested that his office be abolished, but he prays and the Constitution remains. Remembering the appeal of a distinguished American, "Never give up the ship!" he comes to the Throne of grace with the petition: "We thank thee for that sentiment, deep down in the hearts, which at the opportune moment lifts men above the material and makes them heroes; which is moving the hearts of our people to-day in a protest against the ruthless destruction of the good old ship Constitution. God grant that the appeal may be heeded; that the gallant old ship, with its thrilling story, may be preserved as an object lesson to future generations. In the name of Christ, the Lord, Amen."

This was the blind chaplain of the House, Mr. Couden, who is a Universalist. Before the desk was the monster petition from 30,000 citizens of Massachusetts, asking for legislation to save "Old Ironsides," with a painting representing the frigate under full sail and engaged in battle. No sooner was the prayer said than Mr. Sulzer of New York was on his feet demanding that the chaplain's prayer be printed in that revered store house of good things, the "Congressional Record." Sulzer has steadfastly refused to allow the tattered ensign to come down. Uncle Joe said the prayer would be printed. "Mr. Speaker," asked the New York patriot,, "will the prayer be printed in the 'Record' to-morrow?" "It is impossible for the Speaker to prophesy whether there will be any to-morrow or not," was the answer, "but it does not require special action of the House to print the prayer in the 'Record.'" "Then I trust," said Mr. Sulzer, "the prayer will be printed in the 'Record' to-morrow." "Lest we forget," declared the Speaker amid laughter.

Representative McCall, who presented the petition, proceeded to tell how the petition was signed by the governor of the state, and the ex-governors, by seventy mayors and ex-mayors, by thirty survivors of the crew which preserved the Constitution from capture in 1861, by a dozen of Commodore Bainbridge's grandchildren, by descendants of Stewart and Hull, who commanded the ship, by an old lady of ninety years, daughter of a fifer who blew his fife on Old Ironsides in her three battles, etc., but, after all, it was the chaplain's prayer that carried the House. It was like "the most eloquent prayer ever addressed to a Boston audience." How much of it was for the Lord and how much for the House I can't say, but it secured the end sought. Speaker Reed used to say: "Our chaplain always tells the Lord the news," referring to allusions to current events in the prayers of Mr. Milburn. Mr. Couden went a step further by appealing to the House for legislation to save the old war vessel. He will, no doubt, now rank with Oliver Wendell Homes, whose "Old Ironsides," written when he was a boy, saved the ship when before the civil war she was about to go to the junk dealer. He will have the everlasting gratitude of every young American who can tell the story of the Constitution and the Guerriere, of Hull's trousers and Dacres' hat.

It is a mistake that the chaplain's office is an unimportant one. I recall a stormy scene in the forty-seventh Congress. It was a discussion on the report of the committee on elections for the exclusion of a Democratic member. The House was in a turmoil. Speaker Keifer was by no means a favorite with that side of the House, and some of his rulings had stirred up the animals. There were all sorts of bitter words. The House had been sitting for thirty-six hours and a new legislative day was opened and I was called to offer prayer. It seemed fitting to refer to the angry passions which had been aroused, and it was done in no uncertain terms. The House resumed its session with a calm after the storm. The Speaker said: "You beat the gavel and the mace."

There is no question as to the respect of the two Houses for prayer when it is truly prayer. Uncle Joe's bad break when he said, some time ago, "The chaplain will lead us in prayer," instead of the regular form, "The Chaplain will offer prayer," was after all the correct expression. If the petition is brief and earnest and practical, the House is always attentive and even reverent. Only once in my service as chaplain do I remember any appearance of disrespect. A peal of laughter came in a subdued way from one of the coat rooms. Later two members of the House asked to speak with me and one said: "We want to apologize for that interruption during the prayer. If there is anything we respect it is prayer. We did not know the House was being called to order. My friend, Thompson, here, was telling a mule story and I laughed, when a page ran in, and said, 'You are disturbing the chaplain.' We are sorry for it." "Gentlemen," I said, "you are excused, if you will promise hereafter to be present when the prayer is offered."

These men are quick to observe anything like sham or pretense in religion. The injection of politics into the chaplain's prayers is specially offensive to them. A distinguished preacher, somewhat noted for this, and for the length of his petitions—I have heard him pray at the opening of a meeting just twenty-nine minutes by the watch—was many years chaplain of the Senate. One time a noted Senator, whose weakness was an appetite for drink, arose in a boozy state and offered a resolution requesting the chaplain to pray more to Almighty God and less to the Senate! However, these gentlemen are not averse to using the chaplain for political purposes. I have seen the statement in the papers that, when Rabbi Simon, of this city, opened the Senate one day with prayer, about a year ago, which by the way was a good prayer, but a very protracted one, this was the first instance where a Jew rendered this service. That is a mistake. Three prominent Congressmen, Samuel Randall, of Pa., S. S. Cox, of N. Y., and Roger Q. Mills, of Texas, came to me when chaplain of the House and asked if I would invite a Jewish rabbi from Mr. Mills' district in Texas to open the House. Mr. Cox said, "Mr. Power, it will show the sympathy of this nation with the Jews in Russia!" I thought to myself, you gentlemen are vastly more concerned for the Jews in New York, Philadelphia and Corsicana, but I willingly invited the rabbi to offer prayer. Whether the children of Israel in Moscow and Odessa ever heard of it I am not sure, but soon after, when holding a meeting in another city, I mentioned the incident to a Jew and was astonished that evening to see a large number of the descendants of Abraham in my congregation!

The most conspicuous gentleman in this office now in Washington is Edward Everett Hale. If he would get a tonsorial artist after him, and learn to speak distinctly, he would be entirely acceptable. He thinks much of his honorable position and has issued a volume of his prayers. He uses a gown, repeats a verse or two of Scripture, makes a long prayer, and closes with the Lord's prayer. He gets no responses to the Pater Noster. It was reported that none of the Senators knew it. "Can it be possible that such a deplorable condition of affairs exists?" he asked a Senator, and was much relieved when assured the newspaper report was without foundation. "I'd like to see the test made," said Senator Tillman, the man of the pitchfork, when told the story. "I fear they would be like the two men they tell of down in South Carolina. They were in peril of losing their lives by drowning when one asked the other to pray, notwithstanding his companion remonstrated that he did not know how. 'Well, pray anyhow,' said the first, and the poor fellow exclaimed, 'Lord make us thankful for what we are about to receive'!"

The Senate has not always had men of Mr. Hale's caliber. The author of "The Man Without a Country" may need a hair cut, but he has grey matter enough under his bushy cover. A good many years ago a wild man named Dean from the far west filled this office. Somebody brought him out of the sagebrush into the limelight; and when he arrived over the B. & O. he was covered with coal dust, wore a long linen duster, after the style of the times, and appeared just as he was, unwashed and uncombed, before the most august body in the universe, and prayed! My friend, Senator Gorman, is my authority. He was at the time a page in the Senate. One thing about these men, they are in no sense sectarian if they are let alone. Some of my best supporters were Catholics, old General Rosecrans, Kenna, of West Virginia, and Richelieu Robinson, of New York. The last came to me with a resolution, paying me double the salary allowed by law, and I insisted he should not bring it before the House. They have gone—they have all passed by.

John Bull Lowers the Black Flag

By William Durban

In this dear old country of mine it is impossible to separate, as in America, between the considerations of politics and those of religion. In America the discrimination is natural, for there the political world is entirely free from those complications with the spiritual side of life which here in England entangle the two, to our constant embarrassment. With the new year a grave crisis has come upon the United Kingdom. I must in this article deal with the matter, because there are some elements involved which concern the whole world, especially America. I am a aware that some English writers and some American writers are like a certain wonderful Hebrew Prophet. Hosea in his grandiose prophecy cares nothing for any or all the other nations of the world. To him Israel is everything, and he all but ignores other peoples of the earth. Why should an Englishman speak and write as though Providence had given his country the destiny of bossing the solar system? Why should an American regard his glorious republic as appointed to secure a universal monopoly of human interest? China has been giving Uncle Sam a sharp lesson in crimson ink, that red ink being unfortunately the blood of beloved missionaries; while at the same time India has been administering a formidable caution to blundering old John Bull in the shape of the Bengal boycott. Neither nation, however much more powerful yet it may wax, can afford to brandish the "big stick" too contemptuously in the face of other nationalities, and neither must venture to appropriate to itself the prerogatives of terrestrial autocracy.

The Passing of Toryism.

We Britishers have now for twenty years been under the dominion of a party which has, in my own opinion and that of all Progressives, constantly pursued a policy of reaction. The feeling of all genuine Liberals and Radicals is that the ascendency of Toryism, of the Salisbury type, has been founded on the uttermost contempt for the masses and the aggrandizement of the classes. As soon as the late Marquis of Salisbury came into power as prime minister a whole row of black flags went up. And during the whole twenty years the Liberals have been struggling vainly against the forces of reaction toward class privilege, favor for the state church, for the landlords, and for the brewers and distillers and publicans. Only for a brief interval of three years during the two decades did the Liberals occupy office, under the premiership of Lord Rosebery, but he had only a feeble majority and was glad to quit and give place again to his Tory opponents. At last the conservative period is evidently at an end, and in the opinion of many expert observers it will be many years before the Tory party will again take the seals of office. The passing of Toryism into the cold shades of opposition means the lowering of the black flags which have been so arrogantly floating in the wind for nearly a quarter of a century. One of the most obnoxious of these standards of class oppression is the banner of sectarian education. Strange, indeed, have been the transactions wrought under this symbol of religious bigotry. The notorious education act of 1902 was a gross sham as far as popular elementary education was concerned. It was intended entirely to bolster up some of the crumbling foundations and buttresses of the proud and wealthy state church, and to stave off that process of disestablishment and disendowment which is ultimately certain to be achieved. Mr. Balfour is a Scotch Presbyterian, yet as premier he has been the most determined foe of religious liberty. His fall from power is more largely due to his compromising and unscrupulous attitude on this matter than is generally recognized.

Welsh Disestablishment.

When these lines appear we shall have just passed through the excitement of the general election. Probably the result will be to seat the Liberals firmly in power under the premiership of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, a genuine representative of the noblest Gladstonian traditions. During the preliminary days in this new year, the new prime minister, who has already formed his cabinet before appealing to the country, is, like every other prominent politician, stumping the country in various constituencies. The air resounds with oratorical echoes. Great speeches are being poured into the ears of the voters. Rival Liberal and Tory programs inundate us. Each side is venomously vituperating the other. But the majority of people maintain that the time is ripe for a change and for a national forward movement. In the forefront of the Liberal purposes stand two promised measures. One of these will be a new education act, removing religious abuses that have long prevailed, and giving absolute freedom of conscience. The other will be a bill for disestablishing the Anglican church in Wales. If Wales had home rule, that would have long since been accomplished. This is a country of old feudal anachronisms, and must of necesity be so, on account of the many hoary hereditary institutions that can not be eliminated or broadened except by slow degrees. But Wales will ere long be, like Ireland, a country of free churches. Scotland will follow before long, and then England will be alone in the empire as an Erastian country.

The Drinksellers in Dejection.

The biggest of the black flags is that which floats over the devil's chief citadel. The drink traffic is Britain's darkest curse. In the House of Lords some of the richest peers are big brewers and distillers. And the Tory government has at all times put its principles in pawn to these bloated magnates of the beer industry. For many a year our English politics have been stewed in the vat and served up from the mash tun. And John Bull has sat humbly at the feet of John Barleycorn. Now a stupendous metamorphosis has happened, and dismay is spreading in the camp of the Burtons, the Allsopps, the Guinnesses and the Whitbreads. It is being proclaimed aloud that shares have gone down ominously in the great companies which deal in porter, stout, ale, beer and other intoxicants. In the whisky business there is a despairing "slump." The ingredients of grog are not paying as formerly. This country abounds in water, and John Bull has taken to the habit of imbibing it, instead of leaving it for washing pinafores and drowning puppies. The astounding decline in the nation's drink bill, as shown in the revenue returns, is one of the most promising signs of the times. In 1904 the United Kingdom spent in strong drink the sum of £169,000,000, as against £174,000,000 for 1903. That decrease of £5,000,000 can not be misunderstood. It speaks of a sobering of the masses. And yet the Tory government did all that was in its power to help the drinksellers, especially by granting a compensation system for the closing of any public houses that might be compulsorily shut by the authorities.

A very great period of reform is about to be inaugurated. The prospect is indeed a welcome one. But many a hard and bitter fight must be waged. The Tory candidates throughout the land are at this very moment seeking to scare the English people by rasing the old bogey of Irish home rule, instinctively feeling that herein they possess a fine electioneering cry. But the device will fail ignominiously. The new government and the new parliament will have other matters to attend to of more immediate importance, and Ireland will have to await its turn for some improved legislation. The signs of the times are auspicious for all lovers of liberty and progress, but not for the friends of corruption and privilege for the few at the expense of the many.

The Union Movement

By C. E. Randall

It is a long time since I sent you any news form this part of the world. I think that perhaps the time has now come to break the silence, as there is some news that will interest a good number of your readers. I presume it is well understood, by all interested in mission work in this island, that Jamaica is not, and for a number of years has not had to be reckoned among "heathen mission fields." Most of the great missionary societies of England have labored here with a large measure of success; and some, notably the Baptists, have had a large number of what have been nearly self-supporting churches here for a number of years. The Episcopalian, or what is styled "The Church of England in Jamaica," claims the first place. Whilst this church includes the largest number of the high class people, as well as thousands of the natives, it is to be feared that, without violating Christian charity, if judged by the New Testament standard a large proportion of the membership must be regarded as only nominal Christians. The Moravians, who were in the field first after the Church of England, and in fact were the first missionaries in the island, have some large churches, aggregating about 8,000 communicant members. The Church of Scotland has about 2,400 members. The Salvation Army, the last in the field, now bulks rather largely with its parodied military system. There is also a small mission of the Friends in the eastern part of the island. Besides the foregoing the other ecclesiastical bodies are about as follows as to communicant members: Baptists, 35,000; Wesleyans, 25,000; Presbyterians, 12,000; Congregationalists, 4,000; Free Methodists, 4,000; Disciples of Christ, 2,000. The position the Disciples of Christ occupy as last and least is due to the fact that we were late in the field and that we have had few and changing laborers. Of course it has always been our work to proclaim the Gospel of the grace of God. Had this been our only work, however, we might not have been urgently needed. But we have also made it our work to emphasize the importance and need of corporate union among the followers of Jesus. In this I need not say we have not had the expressed sympathy of the various denominations. But there is good reason to believe that the leaven has been silently spreading.

Ten years ago the representative board of the last named churches agreed to organize a united body called "The Jamaica Union of Evangelical Churches," thus creating to some extent a bond of union or federation among all these churches. Quarterly meetings have been held by the executive committee. Some united missions have been conducted, and matters of an educational, social and civil nature have been dealt with. To some extent the spirit of union has been evolved and expressed in this way; and doubtless the churches have been benefited, and public good has resulted. But now has been developed a very delightful and unexpected phase.

At a recent meeting of the Synod of the United Presbyterian Churches, the Rev. Robert Johnston, M. A., B. D., their theological tutor, in an able and convincing speech, introduced the subject of the corporate union of Churches of Christ, and argued that the time had come when it should be seriously and prayerfully considered. The result was that a motion prevailed that the matter should be remitted to the Union of Evangelical Churches. The consequence has been that the same brother has, at the last two meetings of the union, led the discussion which has taken place on the subject, in a most able and prejudice-destroying manner. I beg to forward you portions of the last address, delivered at the annual public meeting of the union, as I feel it will give great satisfaction to our friends, and hope it may not be too much for your space.

The Rev. Robert Johnston, B. D., spoke on the closer union of the churches. There are many churches in our land, he said. They are grouped together under a variety of organization and are distinguished by a variety of designation. They all claim to be within the Church of Christ. The frank and full recognition of that claim is the basis of any effective co-opertaion. Where there is anything of exclusiveness we can not begin to think of union. The Church of Christ has no doubt an exclusive side. She can not open her arms wide enough to take the world in just as it is. She can only give the hand of fellowship to those who love the Lord and seek the honor of his name. At the same time she can not require an identity of thought and view that shall cover the whole range of worship and life. We must be ready to say "God-speed" to the man who is casting out devils in our Lord's name, though he followeth not with us; as we must recognize a bond of brotherhood with the man who makes our Lord his Lord too, though he interprets that lordship in different terms. Out of this recognition of kinship is born the desire for association in privilege and co-operation in work. Jesus set his seal of approval on that desire. Himself the living center, the animating spirit, souls that meet in him must henceforth go hand in hand, meeting at the center of holy love; they can not go forth for mutual recrimination and slaughter. The one Shepherd seeks evermore to gather his sheep into one fold.

The unity of the Church was meant to be a divine revelation, a great missionary force, a world-convincing power. To be this it must be such a unity as the world can see. It must be such a unity as will compel the world to see. The Christian with his powers exercised to discern may be able to detect and rejoice in the unity of life and spirit under diverse and apparently antagonistic forces of organization, but the world will see only the separations and the antagonisms, and be repelled rather than attracted by the sight.

From this point of view we feel the force of Paul's earnest plea, "Endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." We may suppose that Christian people have never wholly lost sight of the prayer of their Lord, or the appeal of his apostle, yet they have often felt themselves constrained to break away from the visible unity of fellowship while strenuously maintaining that they were not breaking away from Christ or his Church, but in the very act of division were endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit.

Mr. Johnston gave a brief and interesting review of the religious history of Britain during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and recounted the factors that have made for a closer union during the twentieth century and asked: In view of all this, is it not time that we in Jamaica who are members of the Lord's divided and undivided Church, should put to ourselves and to one another some questions? Are we satisfied with the presnt religious and ecclesiastical situation? Is it the best attainable? Must the future be simply a continuation of the present? Can any of us regard with equanimity the indefinite continuance of a large number of feeble churches, struggling hard to live, with the danger of internecine strife ever present as the pressure grows more acute?

In saying this, said the speaker, I am not passing a judgment on denominationalism. I am not deprecating what it has done for Jamaica. Christianity came to Jamaica in a state of division. This was inevitable, coming in the way and at the time it did. It has doubtless been a gain to the country that it came so. The Gospel spread more rapidly over its hills and valleys than it otherwise would have done, while the ultimate form the Church of Christ shall assume and the type of Christian piety that shall grow up in this land may be the richer and robuster in consequence. But what helps at one stage may hinder at another. Denominationalism has been a blessing, but the continuance of the blessing may depend on the disappearance of denominationalism.

He would not say that the evils of division have become very pronounced amongst us yet. Hitherto the fields have been wide enough for the reapers to work without jostling each other. But it is getting a little crowded now. Questions of position and boundary are arising. At some points there is considerable pressure on charity and brotherliness and there are many indications that we can not drift much further without getting into straits and shallows, and encountering rocks of controversy. It is right that we should look ahead and take timely action to avoid such a calamity. For calamity in very deed it would be if increasing financial pressure and sectarian rivalry were to turn the minds of this people away from the vital questions of faith and life.

That there would be substantial and immediate gains from the closing up of the Christian ranks can hardly admit of a doubt. For one thing, it would promote economy. Again, it would promote efficiency and it would provide a wholesomer atmosphere for the religious life. But there are many difficulties, and great ones, in the way of such a union, said the speaker, who enumerated the difficulties he thought of. In concluding an able and thoughtful address Mr. Johnston made a powerful plea for unity.

How the Teaching Function is to Be Revived

By J. H. Hardin

Of the many features of the Sunday school needing improvement, none equals its teaching force. After all that we have done by improved lesson systems, helps, conventions, chautauquas, teachers' meetings, normal classes, etc., it remains a lamentable fact that a large proportion of those who teach in the Sunday school are almost utterly unprepared for teaching. This is no reflection upon the small number who are prepared for the work. Not a word of discouragement, but just the opposite, for them. But we must face the fact. We have not the teachers to do the work required in a creditable way. The revival of the teaching function of the church will never come with power and effectiveness till we somehow develop a teaching force in our churches, competent in character, in knowledge, and in training, to do the teaching required.

The teacher must know something. He must know something about the Bible: its history, its geography, its biography, its institutions, its literature, its structure, its doctrines, its evidences, and above all its Christ, his Gospel and his church. He must know something of the human mind and heart, and how to put Christian truth into the soul so it will stay and grow. He must know something of the arts of teaching; he need not be a master in pedagogy, but a few of the elementary arts that belong to the teacher's profession he must know. He must know something of the history of the school as an institution, its place in our Lord's program for his church and Gospel, and how the work it does is to subserve his divine purposes. In order to carry forward the work our people have undertaken, he must know something—the more the better—about the origin, genius and history of our movement. Note that I say the teacher, to do his work effectually, must know something of these matters. Let no one misunderstand me. I do not claim that his knowledge need necessarily be very extended in either of these departments before he begins to teach. He may begin on a very little knowledge of any of these matters. A lifetime will not be too long for one to become anything like thoroughly informed about them. But the trouble is that so many are placed over classes who are nearly absolutely without any knowledge of these things.

Can this knowledge be acquired by those whom we must depend upon for teachers in the Sunday schools? It can. A few books diligently read will supply it. Attendance upon institutes, assemblies, chautauquas, etc., will help. But the way to accomplish this the quickest and best is for our teachers to organize themselves into teachers' training classes and adopt and pursue the course of study prescribed. The International Sunday School Association has a great department of this kind. One denominational superintendent writes me that he has 10,000 of their teachers studying under his direction. As superintendent for our schools in Missouri, I am now organizing a teacher-training department. I am hoping that our teachers will fall readily into line. If they will they can soon be able to do their work in a way that will make effective this important function of teaching in the church.

The Teachings of the Fathers on the Holy Spirit and Prayer

By J. P. Davis

II.—Walter Scott, Thomas Campbell, Barton W. Stone.

The second greatest of the fathers was Walter Scott. In opposition to the Word-alone enthusiast he wrote a discourse on the Holy Spirit. This "discourse" was fully endorsed and commended by Alexander Campbell. In this treatise Walter Scott affirmed that there were three divine missions in Christianity: First, that of Christ to the Jews; second, that of the apostles to the world, and, thirdly, that of the Holy Spirit to the church; the two former temporal, the last permanent; since the Comforter was to dwell with them forever. "There is no member of the body of Christ," said he, "in whom the Holy Spirit dwelleth not; for it will hold as good at the end of the world and in eternity as it did on the day of Pentecost and afterward, that 'if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his.'"

In a larger work called "The Messiahship, or Great Demonstration," he wrote: "The gift of the Holy Spirit to the converted is the great positive element of the Gospel. Remission is negative, but the Spirit is positive. This gift is the true connecting link between the members of the body and the head, Christ. The ministry baptize men in water for the remission of sins by his blood; but Christ reserves to himself the power to baptize them in the Holy Spirit; so that 'if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his.' Therefore, 'in one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, bond or free, and are all made to drink into one Spirit,' because the body is not one member, but many."

Again he says: "As the beautiful exotic called the 'resurrection flower,' which, being put into water, opens its petals and expands into a rare and beautiful flower of variegated radiance, so the believer in Christ, when baptized in water as Christ directs, opens all his heart to the sweet influences of God's Spirit, and expands into a rare and beautiful form of Christianity, the admiration of all who behold it."

Thomas Campbell was the first of the fathers, and set the ball of reformation rolling, yet was forced to retire by infirmity of years when its speed was accelerated. The "Dialogue on the Holy Spirit," by Alexander Campbell, apeared in the first edition of "Christianity Restored." Thomas Campbell thought this dialogue did not fully present the truth on the Scriptural doctrine of the Spirit; that it gave comfort to the "Word-alone" errorists, and an occasion of triumph to the enemies of reform; so, in deference to his views, it was omitted from the "Christian System," the successor of "Christianity Restored." Yet even in that dialogue the ground was taken that the Holy Spirit is a gift to the Christian.

Barton W. Stone was a father who came into the reformation by a different route than the Campbells, and in years and piety ranks with Thomas Campbell. On the contemplated union of his people and the Disciples he said: "Oh, my brethren, let us repent and do the first works; let us seek for more holiness, rather than trouble ourselves and others with schemes and plans of union! The love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, given unto us, will more effectually unite than all the wisdom of the world combined."

There are four other fathers of a second generation whom I could quote in the same tenor as the four preceding. They are Robert Richardson, Robert Milligan, J. S. Lamar and Isaac Errett; and we might add another—W. K. Pendleton.

The fathers were agreed on the following points: That the Holy Spirit operates on the sinner through the Word of truth only; but that he attended the Word of truth, was in it and with it, and that he might greatly assist the Word by removing hindrances or by leading the sinner to the Word of God; that the Holy Spirit as a Comforter is a gift to the Christian; that as such it is something to be sought in prayer and holiness of life. As to the baptism in the Holy Spirit, they held different opinions, but were very tolerant of one another's opinions, and loved and honored one another, according to their own principles, that all who believed on and obeyed the Savior should be received as Christians, notwithstanding differences of opinion.

Robert Richardson was a colaborer with Alexander Campbell in the ministry of the Word, a near neighbor and friend, a professor in his college, an elder in his church, his chosen biographer, and preached at his funeral. Robert Richardson says, in the "Memoirs of Campbell": "He did not deny that 'influences' of various kinds might accompany the Word, but on these he declined to enlarge. He believed in spiritual ministries of various kinds, and that invisible beings, as he had said in his discussion with Mr. Waterman, 'by an acquaintance with our association of ideas, our modes of reasoning, our passions, our propensities, and by approaching us through these avenues, could lead us backward or forward, to the right or to the left, as their designs might require. It is more than possible; it is probable. I might advance farther and say it is certain, for it has been done.'"

Walter Scott

By C. C. Redgrave

Moffat, where Walter Scott was born, October 31, 1796, is a favorite watering place of Scotland, distant some sixty miles from Edinburgh, in the beautiful valley of the Annan and nestled amid the everlasting hills. This little market town is justly celebrated for its mineral springs, but chiefly for its salubrious clime and exquisite surroundings. The population of the town is greatly increased by visitors during the season, for whose accommodation many handsome residences have been erected on the hillsides of the surrounding country.

From the simplicity and quiet of this hamlet, Walter Scott went to Edinburgh and entered the university, where he remained until the completion of his college course. In 1818 we find him in America, acting as assistant teacher in the city of Pittsburg, in association with Mr. George Forrester, a devout and Bible loving Scotchman. The subsequent career of Mr. Scott, and the particulars of his place and power in the current reformation, must be studied in the larger treatises of his life and work by Baxter, Richardson and others. The following brief estimates will answer the purpose of these "pictorial glimpses":

"Next to my father he was the most cordial and indefatigable fellow-laborer in the origin and progress of the present reformation. He was, indeed, truly eloquent, in the whole import of that word. He was a powerful and successful advocate of the Lord Messiah. . . . I knew him well. I knew him long. I loved him much."—A. Campbell, on the death of Walter Scott.

"In view of its sublime and far-reaching revelations, its cogent logic and still more striking analytical divisions and just discriminations, the rest of the literature of the reformation seems to me to grow very pale and dim."—Dr. R. Richardson, on "The Messiahship, or Great Demonstration," by W. Scott.

"I have never come in contact with a man more largely and deeply versed in the holy Scriptures. . . . Some of the most valuable thoughts that have given form, clearness and force to our plea and have become current among us, had their origin with Walter Scott. . . . The very Chevalier Bayard of the reformation, a star of wondrous brightness in our galaxy of great men, was this knightly pioneer herald of the restoration."—Charles Louis Loos.

"It is probably true that to him, more than to any other man, should be ascribed the rescue of the Scriptural foundation of the church from the rubbish which had covered it during the ages of apostasy."—W. T. Moore.

"Walter Scott is the first man in modern times who clearly taught the place and design of baptism for the remission of sins."—F. D. Power.

After a brief illness of seven days, Walter Scott "trustfully and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus" at Mayslick, Ky., April 23, 1861. His last words were concerning the Gospel of Christ and the honor of fellowshiping with the Herald of the cross. "In the village graveyard his remains were laid to rest," but for thirty-six years his resting place was unmarked. The monument seen in the illustration on the first page was erected in November, 1897, and cost $262. This amount was raised by popular subscription, through the columns of the "Christian Guide," and chiefly by the efforts of Walter Scott Smith, then editor of the Indiana department of the paper.

As we look upon the ripening grain in the field adjoining the great man's resting place, and recall his abundant labors and rich harvest of souls, the words of Job are fittingly appropriate: "Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn ascendeth in its season."

Moffat, where Walter Scott was born, is one of the favorite watering places of Scotland.

Interesting Letter From Alexander Paul.

Time seems to fly faster in China than in any other place. There are so many things to be crowded into one day that it seems impossible to keep up with it all. Since writing last we have been kept busy both with the city and country work. We have been repairing our street chapel and have been making some changes which we hope will be beneficial. We are intending to open a library in connection with our street chapel work at the first of the Chinese New Year, about February 1 of our year. We feel that such a place will give us a chance to reach a class of men whom we could not otherwise approach in our street chapel. Even then it will take some time to come into touch with the merchants and student class. It is a very necessary work.

In addition to our city work, we have gone on two itinerating trips, one on foot and the other by boat. We are more convinced than ever that for some years to come, at least, our country work will be the most fruitful. As we went from village to village and from town to town and saw the crowds of people living in heathen darkness, no churches, no observance of Sunday, but slaving day in and day out for the bread which perishes, we realized that ours is the grandest mission on earth. Could you but have been with us as we would take our stand on some street corner to sell our Gospels and tracts and to tell out the message that has brought enlightenment to so many nations, and could you have seen the crowds flocking around us to get a glimpse of the foreigners and to hear what we had to say, you would share the same feeling of enthusiasm that we have. Your hearts would have been saddened as were ours to be compelled to leave place after place in order to make our circuit, knowing that perhaps some of those people would never hear the Gospel again. We can but trust that the thousands of tracts and Gospels sold will go on their silent mission and be the means of bringing light to the hearts of those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death. In one large town as we were passing down the street, one of the merchants told our evangelist that he had a portion of our Bible, but that there were some things in it which he could not understand. Our evangelist was only too glad of a chance to answer his questions and to throw some light upon the man's problems. Who knows how many there may be groping after something higher? We possess this knowledge and ours must be the blame if we withhold it from them. One could easily allow oneself to become pessimistic by dwelling upon the dark side of our work in this great empire. On our two trips we traveled more than two hundred miles and yet did not reach half our territory. Please think of it—two men for all this vast territory. Is it not enough to stagger the bravest of us?

Dr. Butchart continues to be very busy in his hospital work; the medical work is one of the greatest factors in our work here. The ladies in the station carry on a quiet but, we believe, lasting work among the women and as a result of their efforts I had the privilege of baptizing two very intelligent women, the wives of our two evangelists. We hope to be able to make a couple more trips to the country before the bad weather sets in.

The first news we had on our arrival in Shanghai was that Mr. Bentley had just gone home in very poor health. Now more sad news comes to us informing us that Mr. Arnold, of Wuhu, must leave the field at the earliest possible moment, also broken down in health. This cripples our work greatly, but God has some wise purpose in it all. Will you not pray that these gaps may be filled and that our work will not suffer over much?

—John T. Webb has given up the work at Billings, Mont., and removes to Kansas City, Mo., where he will preach for nearby churches while trying to recuperate.

—Cushing, Okla., now has a $3,000 house of worship and a membership more than doubled, all in a little over a year. This is due to the efforts of C. E. Smoots and E. V. Spicer.

—Free hospitality will be offered for the rally at Parkersburg, W. Va., February 5, to those sending their names to G. F. Assiter. Stephen Corey and W. J. Wright will take part.

—The large Bible class, conducted by Mrs. F. P. Grant, at the Union Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, gave, last week, a very successful concert in behalf of the building fund.

—The Foreign Society has received an annuity gift from a friend in Texas. The society will be glad to receive other gifts in the same way and will furnish literature explaining the plan fully.

—W. J. Haywood feels encouraged at the outlook at the Second Church, Houston, Tex., where he has been preaching for some time. He has just organized a systematic study in Coler's "Life of Christ."

—Z. O. Doward, who has been pastor for more than seven years at Grand Island, Neb., has tendered his resignation, and the church, which is now in good condition, desires to engage another pastor.

—P. J. Rice was selected to deliver the address at the union service of the South Bend churches at new year's time and his speech upon the prophecy of the year's progress was reported at length in the city papers.

—The need of a new house of worship is now felt by the brethren at North Yakima, Wash., and the matter is now being considered. Morton L. Rose, the pastor, has just received a call for five years of further service.

—E. G. Merrill, who was recently at Brunswick, Mo., but has now taken charge of the work at Troy, reports the work as starting off satisfactorily, as well as at Elsberry, where he preaches half time. Both churches are in good working order.

—The church at Stanford, Ill., closed a most successful year. J. W. Porter was the minister until September, when S. S. Lappin took charge. As a result of a meeting by the latter in December there were twenty-nine additions to the church.

—We do not suppose many of our readers are not familiar with the fact that John A. Stevens, of Alexandria, is now corresponding secretary of Louisiana, but we notice that the year book retains the name of Claude L. Jones, of Shreveport.

—Bro. C. F. Stevens made a mistake in some figures in his report of "The Work of the Year." The amount raised for the building fund was $9,000, instead of $8,000, while for current expenses, etc., the amount was $1,000 less than the published figures.

—S. A. Fisher, who recently closed his work at Adele, Ia., is at present supplying for the Portland Avenue Church, Minneapolis, but will go to Detroit to enter upon the pastorate of the Woodward Avenue Church as soon as the building is completed.

—G. N. Shishmanian was a visitor to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST office recently on his way home to Lexington, Ky., from a visit to Dallas, Texas. It was there Brother Shishmanian was converted in the years gone by before he became our missionary to Constantinople.

—T. J. Head has been holding a meeting at Herculaneum, Mo., and as a result expects to organize a Bible school, a church, and a Christian Endeavor Society. There was considerable opposition. As a people, we have had neither a church building nor a congregation there.

—One feature of the work of the church at Pasadena, Cal., is the fact that there have recently been formed three midweek Bible classes, two in the Old Testament, and one in the life of Christ, while there is also a missionary class. Sumner T. Martin is still conducting the work there.

—The members of our church at Farmer City, Ill., where A. Immanuel Zeller is pastor, are rejoicing in the fact that they have just raised one-third of their church debt in cash. The congregation has also just been presented with an individual communion set by the Sisters Thayer.

—J. F. Bickell has closed his work at Barnard and Bolckow and has taken charge at Eldon, Mo. He reports the field he has just left as a good one for a man who can move there and work. Northwest Missouri, he says, can support several more strong preachers but they must move to the field.

—We have now twenty-eight churches in Melbourne, Australia, with a membership of more than five thousand. The work is prospering. The city has a population of about half a million. The cause in Tasmania is not very flourishing, though the outlook is more encouraging than it has ever been.

—The church at Beaver City, Neb., has extended to D. S. Domer a call to remain another year, but as he has had to undergo two surgical operations during the year and his strength is so impaired he is not able to accept the work, and will thus rest and recuperate so as not to be compelled to give up the ministry.

—Charles H. DeVoe has just accepted a call to Peru, Ind., and will thus retire for the time being from evangelistic work, in which he has had a very happy year. He commends very highly H. K. Shields, who has been associated with him most of the year as singer and helper. Brother Shields will continue in field work.

—D. D. Boyle is at San Antonio, Tex., for the winter. Homer T. Wilson, who has been pastor of the church there, is doing evangelistic work. Brother Boyle will return to New Mexico for the spring and to Missouri for the summer. It is hoped that a pastor will be located at San Antonio within the next few months.

—February 5 will be kept as Founders' day by the Moody Bible Institute, of Chicago, in memory of the seventeenth birthday of its founder, D. L. Moody, who died December 22, 1899. It is interesting to know that the Moody Bible Institute still continues its work, with the largest number of students now on its rolls which it has ever had.

—It is claimed that twelve great crops during the past year have added the prodigious sum of $3,874,000,000 to the wealth of the country. We are not only the richest nation on earth, but we are the richest per capita. These and other facts ought to prompt us to provide large and liberal things in the approaching March offering for foreign missions.

—A telegram brings the information that G. T. Black, pastor of the Christian church at Quanah, Texas, dropped dead on the street in that city from heart failure last Wednesday. Brother Black was in advanced years. He had not long been in his present pastorate. At one time he resided in Wichita, Kan., and was associated with the work in Indian Territory.

—An interesting item comes from Franklin P. Smith, of the West Park Church, Indianapolis. It is to the effect that Mr. J. J. Bruce, the contractor who laid the foundation of the church, came forward on the second Lord's day after the building was opened and was the first person baptized in the new baptistery which he built. The new edifice is almost ready for dedication.

—Milo Atkinson, who has successfully labored with the church at Newport News, Va., the past fourteen months, has just preached his farewell sermon to that congregation, who regret very much his departure from their midst. Brother Atkinson is a young man of considerable ability, and will no doubt do an excellent work at Marion, Ind., where he is to locate. W. R. Motley has been called to succeed him.

—A paragraph in "Our Budget" recently gave the impression that J. C. Powell is in charge of the work at Norman, Okla. We ought to have remembered, of course, that it is R. E. McCorkle who is leading the church work there and doing it so well. The error was due to the fact that we had just had a communication from Brother Powell, who also lives here, and his name was in our mind when the paragraph was written.

—W. L. Harris, of Grant City, Mo., has resigned, to enter upon regular evangelistic work in which he has been successful. Many calls from the field have led to this decision, Brother Harris feeling he can do more good in the broader work. Brother and Sister Harris were members of The Christian-Evangelist Special party to the convention. We know them to be interested and capable workers. He gives up his pastorate March 15.

—We regret that we have not space in this issue for the account by Brother Tyler of the noteworthy work done by J. K. Hester, in Sterling, Col. A new church has just been dedicated there, where a congregation was organized by J. K. Hester, who was assisted in the meetings by Miss Jessie Falkenburg, of the South Broadway Church, Denver, as soloist. While Brother Hester is on his trip to the Orient with Brother Tyler's party, Jesse B. Haston will supply.

—We regret to learn from the Marion, Ill., "Evening Post" that Bro. John H. Duncan has been compelled by reason of ill health to resign his position as penitentiary commissioner of the southern Illinois penitentiary at Chester. Brother Duncan was universally popular as a public official and enjoyed the confidence of his fellow citizens. He has been in ill health many months, and at last has been compelled to resign all official responsibilities. His wife is one of the prominent workers in the church at Marion, Illinois.

—Our veteran minister, Joseph Lowe, of Kansas City, Mo., writes: "I have read your book on 'The Holy Spirit' through twice, and am now reading it through carefully the third time, with pencil in hand. When I have finished this third reading I will tell you what I think of it." But several of our younger men have felt competent to criticise the book without reading it at all! But there is a vast amount of reading and studying going on now on this subject, the first edition of the book was soon exhausted and the second edition is going rapidly.

—Our work in foreign lands is now of large proportions and is very successful. Probably no society in the world has made a larger growth than our Foreign Society during the past decade. We are doing work in thirteen countries. The whole number of workers is 466. Eighteen hospitals and dispensaries are maintained. More than 400 orphans are educated and housed and clothed and fed. Forty schools and colleges with an attendance of over 2,300 are supported. Our people sustain a different and stronger relation to the work from that of a few years past.

—Bro. B. B. Tyler writes that he and his wife expect to start on their trip to the Orient on Thursday, February 1. They will spend the Lord's day in Cleveland with Bro. J. Z. Tyler, and expect to sail on the steamer Arabia, of the White Star Line, February 8. At the recent annual meeting his church granted him the vacation, with salary continued, and paid it in advance. No wonder he writes, "This is the best church on earth!" Concerning this trip he says: "The prospect of the great trip thrills me. I am more anxious to visit the lands of the Bible in 1906 than I was in 1903. I think I must go again." Perhaps we can arrange to go with our brother another time.

—Frank Oviatt, Hampton, Ia., writes that he has been reading what The Christian-Evangelist and "The Christian Standard" have been saying of Dr. Harper's death. He says: "The Christian Standard pictures Harper as worse than Ingersoll. The Christian-Evangelist would have us believe him a hero of the cross. How do you harmonize these antagonistic views of these two papers that champion the greatest cause of Christendom?" We give it up. They are different and antagonistic statements proceeding from two essentially different points of view, and readers of these papers must judge for themselves in the fear of God and the love of the truth.

—A reader writes: "Then I understand you are not opposed to denominationalism in the Church." Yes, we are, brother, and we still believe in God! We believe in patience, too, and hence we do not get angry with brethren who fail to see the difference between according to others the same rights and privileges we claim for ourselves, together with equal honesty and intelligence, and endorsing what seems to us, at least, their errors. Denominationalism represents to us an imperfect and transient phase of the Church, and must give way to the unity which the New Testament teaches. For that we are pleading; but one of the essential conditions of its realization is the recognition of each other as brethren, striving alike for the growth of the kingdom.

—B. H. Hayden, writing from Buffalo, N. Y., says: "I feel I should not be entirely silent as to the enjoyment your writings and positions on vital subjects through your paper bring me. The paper, so good always grows richer and riper with your own enrichment of life. Your words in the January 11, issue on 'unification and evangelization, reach the heart of the whole great business for the triumph of the Master's cause." The name of Hayden carries with it a mighty influence in this Restoration movement, and we accept with gratitude this tribute of appreciation from the clear head and kind heart of our brother. We should be less than human not to appreciate profoundly the words of encouragement that are pouring in upon us in a steady stream from the best men and women in our brotherhood.

—We regret to learn the cause of the resignation of W. H. Rogers at Swampscott, Mass. It will be remembered that Brother Rogers has given a very hard year's work to raising the money necessary to free the church from a heavy load, and he made a great success, but at the cost of his health. The drain on his nervous system was severe, and some weeks ago he was taken with pneumonia. He has found his strength insufficient to meet the requirements of so exacting a field as Swampscott, and will probably come west and take a country church. J. T. McKissick, of Harvard, has taken up the work at Swampscott. It gives us pleasure to say that a purse of money was presented to Brother Rogers, and that the Congregational minister of Swampscott took a great interest in the raising of it

—E. C. Nicholson, of Redwood Falls, Minn., was a visitor at The Christian-Evangelist office last week. The church, which he has brought to its present standard of efficiency, after it had gone through about thirty-five fights in its history of not many more than thirty-five years, is now harmonious and working together for a great future success. A building enterprise is on foot, and Brother Nicholson's trip to Kansas City, St. Louis, and Chicago was in the interests of this enterprise. When completed, the church will cost some fifteen or sixteen thousand dollars, which would represent, in a big city, a building of considerably greater value. We are glad to see this strengthening of the strong places in a field where our work is much scattered and has, we fear, been somewhat crippled in efforts to maintain causes that can never, in the nature of things, become self-supporting.

—In J. Breckinridge Ellis' letter to the Advance Society in our last issue he pays his respects in a very modest way to brethren who write fine articles for our paper and who lead in many worthy enterprises but who never take time to look over the fence into his little garden to see what he is doing nor to speak a word of encouragement. He says: "I've noticed that many of our brethren who are working for good causes know very little about the work of other brethren who are working for good causes." So have we all noticed that very thing. Brother Ellis, through his Advance Society, is training thousands of children to read the Bible, memorize the best poetry, and to give to benevolent and missionary enterprises. His department is about the most popular department of the paper, with our young readers—and with a large number of older ones as well. If you miss reading his talks with the Advance Society you are out a good deal more than you think.

—Glancing through a volume of the "Millennial Harbinger" for 1838 recently, our eye fell on this item, copied from the "Religious Herald": "The Philadelphia Baptist Association at its last (one hundred and thirty-eighth) anniversary passed the following resolution: 'Resolved that the clerk be instructed to affix the Scriptural designation Bishop to the names of the pastors of the churches in all the official documents of this body, and Deacon to the names of those who have been called by the churches to that office.'" There is an article from the "Herald" defending the action as "wise, timely, dignified and Scriptural." Brother Pendleton, an assistant editor of the "Harbinger," copies the resolution and the article defending it in the "Harbinger," and congratulates the Baptists on their "gradual approximation to the doctrines of the Reformation." He quotes an extract from Mr. Campbell showing that he had taken this ground some time before. And yet the Editor of this paper was recently criticised for an innovation in speaking of "Bishop Power." Read history, brethren!

Evangelistic Institute at Drake University.

A very successful evangelistic institute was held at Drake University, January 22-25, under the efficient leadership of W. J. Wright, the secretary of the Board of Evangelism. Besides the members of our Bible faculty, the pastors of our churches and several of the students, Brother Wright was ably assisted by J. H. O. Smith and J. V. Updike, who, with H. A. Easton, is conducting a protracted meeting at the Central Church, where Brother Breeden has ministered for twenty years. The sessions of the institute were held in the forenoon and afternoon of each day, in the University Place Church, and were attended by increasingly large audiences from the very first. The students of the Bible College and visiting brethren of the ministry were present with pencils and notebooks, eager to add to their stock of knowledge in the things that are helpful in evangelism. The papers, addresses and conferences were of a high order, and increasing audiences from day to day showed a remarkable interest in the things that help in the extension of the kingdom of our Lord. The Bible College of Drake University was represented in the conference by fifteen young men who are successful in evangelistic work. It was very refreshing and helpful to listen to their enthusiastic speeches on the general topic, "What I most desire to know and to do as an evangelist." There has resulted a great quickening of the evangelistic spirit amongst us on account of the institute, and we are ready to welcome another next year. SHERMAN KIRK.

The College of the Bible has rarely enjoyed such a treat. The spiritual uplift has been phenomenal, and the high tide of enthusiasm will make itself felt in years to come. We certainly shall do everything in our power to make this institute an annual affair of more and more importance. A great number of preachers from various points in the state came in to enjoy the work with us. There was not one of them who went back home without feeling doubly repaid for all it had cost him to come. We believe that we have done nothing wiser during the year than carry out this enterprise. ALFRED M. HAGGARD.

Missouri Christian Lectureship.

The program committee, after much effort, finds itself able to make the following preliminary announcement of the leading speakers in the Lectureship to be held at Canton, Mo., Monday, April 9, and Wednesday, April 11, 1906.

Monday night. Lecture by Professor Shailer Mathews, University of Chicago. Subject, "The Method of Jesus."

Tuesday forenoon. Lecture by Professor Mathews. Subject, "The Message of Jesus."

Tuesday afternoon. Lecture by Professor R. G. Sears. Subject, "The Geographic and Historic Setting of the Old Testament."

Tuesday night. (1) Lecture by Professor C. M. Sharpe, Columbia Bible College. Subject, "New Testament Criticism and the Historic Christ."

(2) Lecture by Geo. A. Campbell, pastor Austin Christian Church, Chicago. Subject, "Fiction and Character."

Wednesday forenoon. Lecture by George A. Campbell. Subject, "The Common Man's Religion."

Wednesday afternoon. Lecture by Madison A. Hart, pastor Fulton Christian Church. Subject, "The Training of the Child in the Bible School."

Wednesday night. (1) Lecture by J. H. Garrison, Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis. Subject, "The Present Phase of the Christian Union Problem."

(2) Review by D. R. Dungan, of the Bible College, Drake University.

Brother Dungan was chairman of this committee, but having removed from the state the remaining members, by special request, have placed him on the program as above. It will be noted that the names of reviewers, with this exception, are not yet announced. A part of each day session will be devoted to this most interesting part of the work, so come "loaded" by careful study that the volunteer speeches, as well as the more formal reviews, may be beneficial.

The committee urges a special effort to attend this session. At least 50 student preachers there long for your presence, co-operation and inspiration. President Johann extends the heartiest welcome in the name of the University. A year ago the church extended its welcome and tender of cordial and free entertainment to all who may come, which it now renews through Dr. Buxton, pastor.

The King's Business Requires Haste.

We closed this week's rally with forty-five dollars receipts for our lot. This is a considerable falling off over last week, and just at this time when we are getting along so nicely there ought not to be any delay, on the part of those who are interested, in sending their assistance. We stated last week that we were going to pay off one five hundred dollar note. This we have done. There now remain but twenty-five blocks in the diagram, from which to drive the shadows. Can we not do this at once? Would it not be a reproach to a great, hearty, liberal and generous people, after all of this publicity and effort, for us to fail to whiten the block? We must not fail, and in order to save ourselves from failing, there must be a general response. I am sure that every one knows by this time, after having read what Brethren Garrison, Smith and Muckley have said, that this work is worthy and needs your assistance. Send off your offering to-day, before you neglect or forget it. Address,

EASTER GLORY!

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

Is It Practical and Apostolic?

One year ago about one-twentieth of the church at El Dorado, Kan., adopted the tithe system, the balance holding to regular weekly offerings. For the first year in our history we have paid promptly every week all our running expenses without any special effort, observing all the regular missionary offerings. We raised $1,000 by special offering for additional improvements to our new church building, making a total of $12,000 for building in three years; we have increased our pastor's weekly income as occasion seemed to demand, and will this year establish a church fund for charitable and benevolent work within and without the church in this community.

A New Church in Seven Months.

I am delighted to read of the great results attained by our evangelists in various fields. Perhaps I ought to report the work done in building up the Second Church in Little Rock, Ark.

Last March I held a meeting of two weeks in a part of the city where it seemed there was need of a church. In this I was heartily assisted by Brother Jessup, pastor of our First Church. There were ten additions and the gathering together of material with which I started the Second Church in April, with 32 members. I preached for them regularly, and there was a steady growth and an active membership. Brother Fife, of Kansas City, led us in a meeting in October. I then succeeded in securing Bro. G. D. Weaver, of Greenville, Miss., to come and take charge of the new church, which now has 114 members, a $4,000 lot, and is preparing to erect a good church building. In all my work of building up churches I have had no more satisfactory result than this. I am now ready for another field. I have calls to three churches now, but have not yet decided where I shall work next. D. T. Stanley.

A Great Men's Banquet.

To promote good fellowship and to emphasize brotherhood is the purpose of the annual banquet given by E. L. Powell, of the First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky. That it is an occasion of both pleasure and profit is evidenced by the fact that five hundred business and professional men gathered in the Sunday school room of the church on the evening of January 19, and that the city papers think it sufficiently important to devote almost a whole page to the report of the proceedings. These banquets have been given now for twelve years, having been inaugurated for the purpose of promoting good fellowship among our own church men, and then widening out until the whole city has its life in one way or another represented in the make-up of the banquet. They are most delightful occasions, and Brother Powell believes they have done a world of good. We believe this banquet idea, under the auspices of the church for the purpose of social fellowship, is original with Brother Powell, but the idea has been copied extensively. In describing the last gathering, Brother Powell took occasion to class his guests in couples. After naming artists and journalists, lawyers and financiers, and other professions, he seemed at a loss for words, but only for an instant, "And I might say, politicians and preachers. We seem inseparably connected," was a remark that seemed greatly to please the guests. The speeches were witty, yet practical. In our Home Circle Department will be found an outline of two of these. Brother Powell's banquet is well worth the consideration of preachers in other cities who are interested in men's work. The social side of the man must not be neglected in the church work, and left to the influences of clubs and lodges only.

Ministerial Exchange.

Bowman Hostetler, Dundee, Ohio, would like to correspond with churches wanting preaching for half time or meetings.

Malcomson Pittman, who was formerly pastor in New Orleans, La., desires to resume ministerial work, and would especially like to hear from churches in Missouri and Kansas. He may be addressed at 2967 Camp street, New Orleans.

The Christian church at Grand Island, Neb., desires to engage a pastor by April 1. Grand Island is the third best town in the state. Address F. C. Whittlesey, clerk.

McLean and Rains in Chicago.

The quarterly meeting of the Chicago Christian churches was held in Willard Hall, Lord's day afternoon, January 7. Brethren A. McLean, F. M. Rains and C. C. Drummond were present. The hall, which seats six hundred people, was packed to the doors. Brother McLean gave us his matchless address on "Christian Giving." We have but one A. McLean; more's the pity. No man so fills and thrills us with the missionary spirit as does Brother McLean. He looks at everything through missionary glasses. It is doubtful if there is a passage of Scripture in the Bible upon which he could not preach a good missionary sermon. He reads all that men have to say upon the subject, pro and con, and is able always to give to every man that asketh him a reason for that hope that is in him. Like Paul, he is "willing to spend and be spent for the cause of Christ."

Brother McLean tells us that "the next reformation will be along the line of Christian giving. Martin Luther taught the doctrine of justification by faith; John Calvin, the divine sovereignty of God; John Wesley, the love of God; Alexander Campbell, the union of all God's people. The next great reformer will have as his theme the grace of Christian giving." Let us hope that the advent of such a reformer is not far distant. The Philippian jailer asked, "What must I do to be saved?" J. V. Updike asked, "What must I preach to be saved?" Brother McLean inspires the question, "What must I give to be saved?"

At the close of this session Dr. Drummond made a few remarks after which reports were heard from all the Chicago churches, showing them to be well represented and in good condition. On Monday, January 8, the annual foreign missionary rally was held in the Central Y. M. C. A. Building. Brother McLean presided at the morning session and delivered another splendid address. In the afternoon Brother Rains presided and made one of his characteristic addresses. We have only one F. M. Rains, too; more's the pity. Brother Rains expects to live to see the day when we shall have one man among us who will give $100,000 to foreign missions.

Nearly all the Chicago ministers were present and made admirable addresses upon topics assigned them. The rally was the best we have ever attended. J. H. O. Smith, of Valparaiso, Ind., and A. M. Hootman, of Lowell, Ind., were among the visiting brethren. J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

To Florida Visitors.

We have just formed a church of Christ at this place of 13 resident members, E. G. Laughlin and B. F. Manire, Sr., being chosen as elders, and R. L. Waller, Dr. D. I. Jones and B. F. Manire, Jr., as deacons. There are several other brethren who are spending the winter here, and are meeting and worshiping with us. We hope that some of these, if not all, will conclude to remain and become permanently identified with us. We invite brethren who are seeking a home in the south to come and look at this beautiful Manatee region, especially Palmetto and its vicinity. B. F. MANIRE, SR.

Dedications.

Plainville, Kansas.

The new Christian church at this place was dedicated Jan. 7 by L. L. Carpenter. The building, whose seating capacity is about 650, was tested to its utmost at each service. The people of Plainville are proud of their new house of worship. The value of the property is $7,500. When Elder Carpenter announced to the audience that $3 270.17 must be raised in order to clear the indebtedness, the people responded and before the hour for the dedication had arrived $3,700 had been received. The people of our little city have always been noted for their generosity, but this donation was a glad surprise to all. The ladies' aid society has been one of the leading factors in this donation. They donated $850 in cash and at the dedication pledged $150 more, which they expect to raise in a short time. N. Ferd. Engle is the pastor. The building is, of course, modern in arrangement and substantial in structure.

ALICE M. LAMBERT, clerk.

Woodbine, Iowa.

The Woodbine Church of Christ was dedicated Lord's day, Dec. 31, 1905. The church cost $11,000, which was all provided for before dedication. At least 1,000 people were present. It is a fine building and conveniently arranged for all kinds of Christian work. A new parsonage was also built during the erection of the church. The writer of these lines dedicated the church. This congregation is now ready for progressive work. B. FRANKLIN HALL.

Waterford, Ohio.

On a Lord's day in May, 1833, the church at "North Branch," Knox county, O., was organized with twelve members. Since that day almost every first day of the week they have met to "break bread" and to edify one another in the faith of Christ. All the original twelve have crossed over, but one, Mrs. Ruth Cook Van Cleve, now the only charter member of the Central Church at Des Moines, Ia. But many of the children and grandchildren of the Cooks, Blairs, Manns and Ogles still remain in the vicinity. Four houses of worship have been built; the last one, a fine cement block building, costing over $5,000, was formally opened Dec. 24 1905. It was a great joy for the writer of these lines to be with the church on that day.

Here I spent the first 39 years of my life and here, in my fourteenth year, I confessed Christ, went to school, taught school, practiced medicine and labored several years in the ministry of the word. Many prominent ministers have labored here, among them, C. E. Van Voorhis, John Reed, A Burns, W. H Taylor, and, in later years, Luke and Jacob Findley, E. White, O. W. Kyle, and for the last three years O. L. Cook, of Lexington, Ohio, who has greatly enlarged the work. Many people have gone from here to other fields; among them have been C. M. C. Cook, late of Michigan, L. W. McCreary, now of the Hamilton Avenue Church, St. Louis, Mo. Forty years ago, when I became a member the church, it was the smallest of four churches in the vicinity, now it has a larger membership than all combined. S. M. COOK.

Waynesburg, Pennsylvania.

The church at Waynesburg, Pa., was reopened for services Dec. 19. Bro. Wallace Tharp, of Allegheny, preached the sermons. He won the hearts of the people at once. The ladies' aid society had raised and paid over $300 on the re-decorating and the remodelling. Brother Tharp raised over $2,300 to finish paying for repairs and any deficit that may occur in the building pledges that were made when the church was dedicated four years ago. The church building is now a thing of beauty within and without. The congregation and the minister look forward hopefully to the work of the coming years. F. A. BRIGHT, pastor.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Columbia Notes.

A little less than five years ago the University of Missouri reached an enrollment of 1,000. It is now very close to the 2,000 mark. At the present rate of increase there will be 3,000 students here in less than five years. Of the first 1,700 who enrolled in Columbia this year, 61 per cent enrolled as members of various churches; 27 per cent express preferences; 13 per cent are indifferent. Of the number 225 are members of the Christian Church, 108 prefer it.

The university management is making an effort to reach the whole student body with the best preaching the country affords. The plan is to have some noted preacher every other Sunday night in the university auditorium, and urge the presence of the students. Dr. Graves, who has this effort in charge, is a devout man, and greatly interested in reaching the students.

The Bible College will begin its second semester the first week in February. A number of good and experienced preachers plan to be with us if they can secure work with the churches within reach. These men could help the churches mightily. We shall be glad to correspond with churches in their behalf.

Prof. C. M. Sharpe has been delivering a series of Bible lectures at Lebanon. I am under engagement to conduct an institute in Winfield, Kansas.

We are reaching by actual enrollment in all of our classes far above 300 students. Some, however, are irregular in attendance, and we state our number conservatively at 300. Many of these are preparing for leadership in various lines of life.

Indianapolis Letter.

Reports from thirteen of our churches in this city show that the year just ended was one of prosperity for our work. There were added to these churches, by baptism, 369, otherwise, 399, a total of 768, making the present total number of members 5,896. The Morris Street Church, not here reported, would bring the total enrollment in this city above 6,000. There are not less than 2,000 more who ought to unite by letter at once.

Plans are well perfected for a simultaneous campaign, to begin Oct. 28. C. B. Newnan is chairman of a general advisory committee of forty. The management and execution of the work is in the hands of an executive committee of thirteen, of which the writer is chairman and O. E. Tomes, secretary. Subcommittees will have charge of the various departments of work. A number of churches outside the city have already signified their intention of joining in this campaign. Its influence ought to be felt throughout the state.

This suggests as worth mentioning that state work is at high tide. J. O. Rose, corresponding secretary, reports that 124 churches and several Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday schools have contributed since November 1. The total receipts since that date are $1,886.48. State Evangelist T. J. Legg reports two meetings, with 98 additions, last month, two churches and two Sunday schools organized, and four churches assisted by visitation and counsel.

Does this work pay? One illustration: Two years ago T. J. Legg held a tent meeting at Russellville and organized a church and Sunday school. The Hebron church, united with the new one in building a house costing $12,000, which was recently dedicated by F. M. Rains.

C. E. Underwood, the new pastor at the Fourth Church, is getting the work well in hand and will begin a meeting soon. We welcome him to the Indianapolis fellowship.

The West Park Church is our infant, about eighteen months old. It is the child of the Indianapolis Christian Union. It is growing rapidly under the care of its pastor, F. P. Smith. They have been three weeks in their new building and report its capacity taxed to the utmost.

The Indianapolis Christian Church Union, of which Walter Howe is president and Professor C. B. Coleman, secretary, will probably assume all financial responsibilities for the general expense of the simultaneous campaign and assist two or three of the smaller churches in securing evangelists.

The foreign missionary rally will be held in this city February 12. F. M. NORTON.

Indian Territory.

In my last letter in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST occurs a mistake or two I wish to correct. The first sentence should have read as follows:

"I have been examining the new 'Year Book,' and am gratified to find that the missionary co-operation of the Indian Territory reaped a larger harvest during 1905, for the amount of money expended, than any other state or territory in the United States or Canada."

The fifth sentence should have read thus:

"Ohio raised for state work more than $14,000, Illinois more than $11,000, Kentucky (including South Kentucky) and Texas, $23,000 each."

The North District convention will be held at Tulsa, February 12, 13 and 14. It is important that the preachers and churches north of the Choctaw railroad attend this convention. This is necessary if our Second District convention is to be a success. During last year we had a most satisfactory attendance both of preachers and laymen at all our conventions, but we can do better. Write at once to Randolph Cook and tell him you are coming, and he will see that you are properly cared for while there. In this connection I might state, in answer to a number of inquirers, that our regular annual territorial convention will be held in South McAlester, August 21, 22 and 23. Don't forget these dates, and don't forget to so plan your meetings and other affairs as not to interfere with these important dates.

The South McAlester church, John T. Hawkins minister, held its regular annual rally the first Lord's day in January. It was a "red letter" day. The audience was representative and sympathetic. The writer represented Indian Territory missions in a twenty-five minutes' talk, while the minister in charge spoke in behalf of missions in general, after which pledges were taken amounting to $350. Of this $200 will go to Indian Territory missions; the remainder will be divided between other missionary interests. At this writing I expect to hold a rally at Pryor Creek, where J. S. Hawkins ministers. I am ready to help any church or minister in the territory in this or any other capacity that is within my power. The benefit that comes to the church through an enthusiastic and well-directe missionary rally is of incalculable worth to the church itself. Our rally was equal, I believe, to a three weeks' revival, so far as arousing, enthusing and gladdening the membership is concerned. A successful rally makes a wonderful impression upon the public.

D. M. Harris sends encouraging reports from Wagoner. R. E. Rosenstine is directing the work at Bartlesville, and is making rapid strides.

Any church needing a meeting during February can be placed in touch with a capable evangelist by writing to me.

Remember in prayer the work and the workers in this territory. Our churches as yet are weak in numbers and wealth, and as a consequence our preachers are self-sacrificing men, in nearly every case working for far less remuneration than they are worthy of. If our missionaries in foreign lands enjoy a large measure of our sympathy and are remembered and borne up on wings of prayer, why should not these be likewise loved and remembered? S. R. HAWKINS, Cor. Sec.

W. R. Mains has closed his work at Chestnut Grove, Boyle county, where he has been filling the unexpired term of James C. Ogden, now in Thibet. The congregation will employ a preacher for 1906 without help of board.——The house at Jellico, Tenn., is to be finished by May 6, and F. M. Rains is engaged to dedicate it. Indefinite call extended unanimously to Brother Grinstead. ——S. J. Short, in Big Sandy valley, has added a dozen to the congregations.——Harlan C. Runyan, at Latonia, began 1905 with 98 members, 88 added, raised for all purposes $1,217.63, $491 for improvements, in way of new pews, furnace, chairs, lights and frescoing. Reduced Church Extension debt $100, leaving balance due $197, with interest. Took the different offerings. Brother Runyan gave twelve special addresses, held two meetings away from home and secured 200 subscribers for our religious papers. That is a great report.——H. W. Elliott during December preached at nine different places, raised money in cash and pledges at nearly all these and received for the work $1,561.53. This is the largest amount received in any one month for fourteen years. Some churches made good increase, others have kept up to the standard and others have fallen below. All the friends of the work are earnestly urged to remit every dollar that can be raised for the work as early as possible.

The church at Vesta began moving their house January 17. Earl E. Boyd, of Lincoln, supplied Jan. 21.——E. L. Kechley is helping the state evangelist at Table Rock, and Chancellor Aylsworth supplied for him at Virginia one day.——Kearney reports one added Jan. 7. Sunday school was twenty above highest attendance, being 128. The work will be self-supporting after April. F. D. Hobson is the preacher.——N. T. Harmon at Summit January 21, while the regular pastor, J. L. Lemmon, was attending to some business matters in Kansas.——The Litchfield meeting (Adams and Mrs. Hormel) has reached such a fervor that they can not close. Thirteen confessions on Saturday, Jan. 13. They had 79 new additions to Jan. 16. This with old members on ground will make a good church; $800 subscribed for building; and of course a man needed to take the work right away.——D. C. Kratz will hold a meeting at Gross, in Boyd county, soon.——J. E. Chase's resignation at Valparaiso was not accepted, and he will remain there. J. W. Hilton is now in a meeting with that church. It ought to be a great one.——Brother Youtz is helping O. L. Adams in a meeting at Overton. Fourteen confessions and one otherwise added when meeting was 13 days old.——The Clutter-Knowles meeting, at Florence, still grows in additions and interest, and of course continues.——J. L. Lemmon will hold a meeting at Summit.——E. C. Tuckerman went to Miller on Jan. 18, to help J. W. Walker in a meeting, whether at Miller or at Fairview is not known.——The colored church in Lincoln is in a revival with William Alphin, of Texas, as preacher. Brother Alphin is a preacher of power, and a man of integrity. It is hoped by this effort to greatly stimulate the work that has been so long maintained here. W. H. Vanderzee is the pastor. With their own house on their own ground this church ought to succeed.——H. A. Lemon is preaching at Wilber.——The foreign missionary rally, held at Cotner on Jan. 19, had a strong program. A word needs to be said here regarding the educational offering that is due in January. It is the custom of many churches to give attention to the home and state and foreign mission work, and feel that their duty is done. It is coming to be more and more the positive conviction of the leading workers among us that our educational institutions must be greatly strengthened and increased in number, or we shall not be able to keep up the present rate of growth. We have the brains and the money and the truth and the people, why should we not do our part? Remember Cotner University generously. W. A. BALDWIN.

Washington.

Your correspondent has not spoken through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for some time. This, however, does not imply that he has been idle nor that the work in this state is languishing.

We are in an era of church building in this state. Puyallup church, J. T. Eshelman minister, is enjoying its new home. Prosser, the county seat of the new county of Benton, where N. A. Thompson ministers, will soon occupy their comfortable new building. Waitsburg, W. T. Adams minister, recently opened its elegant edifice, and Ellensburg, where C. H. Hilton has ministered so effectively for the past two years that the membership has been doubled, has adopted plans for a building to cost $4,000 or more.

A. C. Vail goes this week from Selah, where he has been in a meeting, to Hoquiam to raise money for a building and to hold a meeting. E. E. Francis is doing good work at Zillah. B. E. Utz has done a great work in Spokane. Reports say that he is compelled to take a rest and that the church grants him a year in which to build up. He will go on a farm and his pulpit will be supplied until he shall sufficiently regain his health to resume his duties there. W. A. Moore is having good success in the First Church, Tacoma, and they are proposing to build in the spring.

This letter is written from Wapato, a new town on the Yakima Indian reservation, where I am in a short meeting; we have had 18 confessions and more are "almost persuaded." There is no church in the town, but we expect to organize while I am here and thus be first to organize in at least one of the new towns springing up in this country. MORTON L. ROSE.

SOME BRIEF FIGURES

The Work of the Year

AKRON, O.

The Wabash Avenue Church enjoyed its most prosperous year. The old debts were paid, $2,800 in all being raised; 45 additions; the Bible school has an enrollment of over 300. The church voted to improve and enlarge the building, and to observe all missionary days. The apportionment plan in giving will be used for local support.—A. F. Stahl, minister.

BOGARD, MO.

For the year 1905, 16 additions at Mt. Carmel, 11 at Bogard, 27 at Hale, 27 at Norborne; total, 81. I am employed at these places for another year.—C. C. Taylor.

HENDERSON, IA.

All current expenses were met, and $121.77 given to missions, an average of nearly $2 per member. I received a call for the second year and accepted it. —Roy H. Polly.

PARIS, TEX.

I have just closed the first year's work here; 66 additions to the Paris church and 25 elsewhere; total, 91; the church gave for all local purposes, $2,301.56; for missions and benevolences, $356.02; total for all purposes, $2,657.58. This does not include payment on parsonage. Have inaugurated a "four years' campaign"; the church is united and hopeful.—J. T. Ogle.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

The West Side Christian Church has had its best year, wiped all debts from the slate, had eighty-two additions, by home forces, repaired the church inside and out, paid all running expenses, and began the new year owing no man a dollar; this condition the church enjoys for the first time.—W. O. Thomas, pastor.

UHRICHSVILLE, O.

The year has marked distinct progress in the work. Seventy-six have been added—55 by baptism; present membership 580. Over $5,000 was collected for all purposes from the membership of the church, with no suppers, bazars, etc. Of this over $600 was for missions, and almost $2,000 was paid on the building debt. Of the remaining debt of $2,500, it is hoped that all may be paid in 1906. The Sunday school averaged 297, a gain of 63 over 1904.—Charles Darsie.

TOLEDO, O.

We have closed the most successful year in the history of the Central Christian Church. We raised for all purposes $5,800; of this amount over $2,000 was paid on the church debt. Every department in the church made new records and established new standards. There were added to the church at this place and at two other meetings conducted by the pastor 312 persons; one of these meetings was at Bowling Green, while the other was in the Pittsburg simultaneous campaign.—J. O. Shelburne.

WARREN, O.

The reports given at the annual meeting of the Central Church, where J. E. Lynn ministers, show it to be in many ways the best year in the history of the church. The total receipts for current expenses of the church and its societies were $5,330; for missions and benevolences, $2,267, making a grand total of $7,597. Three living link missionaries are supported, one in the foreign, one in the home, and one in the state society. Not a dollar of this money was raised by suppers or entertainments. All was given. One hundred and eighteen were added to the membership of the church, making total membership, 1,044.

DALLAS, TEX.

January 1, I closed my first year's work with the East Dallas Church and I feel that the year has been of much good both to pastor and people. The financial report shows that over $6,000 have been received in cash and pledges, the larger part of which has been for missionary and benevolent purposes. During the year 175 have been added to the church, 57 at regular services. We begin the new year by pledging $1,300 to Texas Christian University at Waco, the amount to be paid within four years. At present we are entering heartily into the preparation for the great union meeting in March under the direction of J. Wilbur Chapman, and immediately following that we will hold a meeting with Wilson and Lintt. Not many more months will pass before we will begin work on our new church.—H. R. Ford.

DANVILLE, ILL.

The annual report showed all debts paid and a small surplus to begin the new year.—Andrew Scott.

FLORA, IND.

Last year was the best in the history of the church. There were 58 additions and offerings were taken for all recognized benevolences.—A. B. Houze.

CENTRALIA, ILL.

Our annual report shows substantial gain in all departments, especially missions and benevolent work. Forty-seven were added during the year.—J. F. Rosborough.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

At the First Church in 1905 for all purposes about $7,500 were raised. Of this amount about $2,000 were given for our various missionary enterprises. Our church joined the living link congregations and now supports J. C. Ogden in Tibet. The additions were 184, giving a net gain of more than 100 to our membership. Thus far there have been 1,699 persons added to the membership of the First Church during my ministry for this splendia church.—A. C. Smither.

FT. WORTH, TEX.

The First Church has the following report: Cash raised for local expenses, missions and benevolences, $4,100; the ladies' aid society, $250.15; C. W. B. M., $385.24; additions to the church, 73; besides this our pastor, R. R. Hamlin, held six protracted meetings, two of them mission meetings in the city, with a total of 275 additions, making 348 additions as a result of his year's work. He built and organized one mission church, raised $1,000 in cash for it, and it is now in a flourishing condition.—Hal. Sellers, church clerk.

EVERETT, MASS.

My first year with the Everett church has just closed. We have prospered as a pastor and people, having had 28 confessions, 31 baptisms and 40 additions. Our Sunday school is growing all the time and we are now completing our basement to accommodate classes. The Junior and Intermediate Endeavor Society attendance has gone up as high as 70 and the children are one of our most important factors in the church work. I have been called to be pastor indefinitely and we are looking forward to much greater things this year. The entire church is in splendid working condition.—A. T. June.

COVINGTON, KY.

At the Fourth Street Church the report of the past year's work showed the aggregate receipts from all departments to have been something over $4,600. Contributed to missions $450, exclusive of more than $150 given by individuals to some mission churches, and $75 given to benevolences; additions, 63, loss by death, one. While, strictly speaking, it is no part of this report, yet because we rejoice in her magnanimity, we mention Sister Kennedy's gift, in 1905, of $500 to Kentucky University, which is the first of four equal payments which she has pledged that institution. The annual service produced a deeper interest and inspired us with hope.—Joseph Willis Hagin.

NORTH YAKIMA, WASH.

We have had one of the most prosperous years in the twenty-four years of our history. The annual report showed 178 additions, removals by letter 52, by death 1, net gain 125 recent enrollment 594. Two congregations were organized in the country—one in Selah valley and one at Ahtanum, by L. D. Green, who was supported by this church one-half of the year. More than $4,200 were raised, a new piano installed, and all debts paid. The largest offerings in the history of the church for missions and benevolences were taken. All departments made good growth during the year. The congregation, by unanimous vote, asked me to continue my ministry for five years, from January 1, 1906.—Morton L. Rose.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.

The First Church has members of 424 different familes, or nominally 1,000 names, upon its roll. The active, paying membership, however, does not differ in per cent from other good churches. I took up this work October 1, following Joseph L. Garvin, who is now at Union Seminary, New York, and who did a great work here. Since that time a fine, strong men's club has been organized. The average attendance at Sunday school increased by 60. All expenses more than met; $115 given to Ohio missions; 24 received into the church, 17 of them by baptism. We have a choir of 32 voices, the best in the city. Our audiences vary from 300 to 750, with probably an average of 550, at a conservative estimate. The church is composed of wide-awake, progressive people, with a large number of fine young men and women. They demand the modern point of view in theology, and are certainly prospering. The whole emphasis is laid upon the "Supreme Life of Jesus." No church has a more beautiful or more impressive order of worship.—John Ray Ewers.

RAVENNA, O.

We report a most successful year. The church and its various societies have raised a total of $2,680, of which amount $500 were for missionary and other benevolent work. Seventy-three were added to its membership—60 by confession. The Sunday school taxes the capacity of our building, having increased substantially in numbers during the past year. It contributed $100 on children's day.—M. E. Chatley, pastor.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

The Central Church of Indianapolis, Alan B. Philputt pastor, has just closed a very successful year. The church raised for all purposes $10,510.73, of which $2,513.41 were for missions. There were 106 aditions during the year, 39 of which were by confession. The present membership of the church is 1,355. The Sunday school has an enrollment of 568, or, including home department and cradle roll, of 643. The Sunday school gave for missions last year over $400, the Christian Endeavor, $127, and the Young Ladies' Mission Circle, $80. The church is a living link in the C. W. B. M., the Foreign Society and the American Christian Missionary Society. It has also increased its giving to all the benevolences of the church. We crossed the line with no debts and a balance in the treasury.

MONTGOMERY, MO.

At Montgomery City, Mo., where I preached twice a month until September 1, and since then three-fourths of my time, we had last year 28 added by baptism and 14 by letter and otherwise; total, 42; loss, 5 by letter and 1 by death; total increase, 36. All bills are paid except for a few dollars. I have begun my third year with this people; all happy and contented. During the year I preached one-half of my time at Elsberry, Mo., until September 1. We had 38 added by baptism, 14 otherwise; total, 52. In a short meeting at Highpoint, near here, we had 2 baptisms; and at Newcomer, in Chariton county, 2 baptisms. Total for the year by baptism, 71.—W. A. Meloan.

PARIS, ILL.

At the annual meeting the address was given by Chas. Reign Scoville. There were about 700 members present. Reports were made from all departments, and plans were announced for the new year. It was fitting that Brother Scoville, whose efforts made possible the splendid year's work, should be present. His message was significantly appropriate. He emphasized the fundamental need of all Christian service, self-surrender. The reports from the various departments showed a total ot $10,290.15 raised. The Sunday school, with a membership of 364, contributed $798, the C. W. B. M., with a membership of 148, raised $374; the ladies' aid, $228; the two Christian Endeavor Societies, $345, and the King's Daughters, $208. Nearly $1,200 were raised for missions and benevolences, while $1,000 went to C. R. Scoville's church, $1,244 were paid on the Second Church, and $897 for evangelistic services. There were 605 added by confession and 216 by letter and statement during the year. There were 161 added in evangelistic efforts by the pastor in other churches during the year. The church voted to engage a pastoral helper; she will begin her services February 1. The church is preparing to entertain the state convention this year. In all departments there is redoubled activity for the new year.—Finis Idleman.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

FAIRBURY, Neb., Jan. 28.—Two hundred and three in 13 days; greatest meeting ever held in Nebraska. It makes this the largest church in the state. Town population 5,000; 1,000 at service and 500 turned away.—WILSON, LINTT AND HOLMES.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

PETERSBURG, ILL., Jan. 29.—Sixty-seven additions; 34 men and boys; overcrowded house; meeting continues. — WILLIAM GROVES, pastor, MONSER AND MCVAY, evangelists.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

HARTFORD, KAN., Jan 26.—Closed with 50 additions in three weeks—38 baptisms; 46 net gain; Bible school doubled. This is a small, young congregation. I never held a better meeting considering the surroundings. The church gave a reception to new members and the evangelist. Church and pastor happy. I begin at Independence, Kan., Sunday.—ROGER H. FIFE, evangelist.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

HERCULANEUM, MO., Jan. 29.—Meeting 12 days old; 30 additions; end not yet.—T. J. HEAD.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

PORTSMOUTH, O., Jan. 29.—Three hundred and sixty-six added in three weeks in the Harlow-Saxton meeting; 66 to-day; 37 at one invitation; 90 per cent are adults. The simple Gospel never had better hearing in this city. Fifteen hundred at women's meeting to-day; great meeting with 1,800 crowded into church to-night and hundreds turned away; not less than 5,000 at day's services. This is Harlow's second meeting here within two years, and 301 were added in last meeting. No evangelist is more loyal to the Gospel in denouncing sin in every form and insisting upon reformation. Saxton is a fine soloist.—GEORGE P. TAUBMAN.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

SHAWNEE, OKLA., Jan. 29.—We are taking a few weeks' recess in our campaign; will open again about the middle of February; 231 additions to date. Have quadrupled the Sunday school. Will commence laying the foundation of the new building about March 1. Have the most prominent location in the city at a cost of $4,500. Have raised over $5,000 of the new building fund in the past two weeks. We feel the permanent work is just commencing in Shawnee.—B. J. WAUGH.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

NILES, O., Jan. 29.—Herbert Yeuell's meeting a month old with 202 to date—180 confessions, a large proportion of them adults, men and young men; and among them several prominent citizens. Thirty-two confessions yesterday. Brother Yeuell attacked our debt of $3,000, and quickly raised it yesterday morning by collections alone; we are ahead on the meeting finances. Scores could not get in to hear Yeuell's lecture on Ben Hur. He continues over next Sunday. Miss Hall has given great satisfaction as soloist. Herbert Yeuell will be at Syracuse, N. Y., February 11.—D. D. BURT, minister.

ARIZONA.

Bisbee, January 22.—Three additions—2 on January 7 and one on Jan. 14. Work moving along nicely.—DANIEL TRUNDLE.

ARKANSAS.

Bentonville. — Three additions recently, one by confession.—J. W. ELLIS.

CALIFORNIA.

Pasadena, January 19 —We began a protracted meeting January 4, in South Pasadena, a separate municipality, between Pasadena and Los Angeles, with about 2,500 inhabitants. Prof. J. Walter Wilson is with us as singer. The hope is that the meeting will result in a new church. We know of about 40 Disciples in the town, most of them members of the Pasadena church.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Stuart), 2 by confession and baptism and 5 by letter or statement; Ninth Street (E. B. Bagby, Peter Ainslie and W. E. M. Hackleman), 47 confessions and 10 by letter or statement. Total, 70—55 by confession and 15 by letter or statement. — CLAUDE C. JONES, secretary.

Washington. — I was associated with Brother Ainslie, of Baltimore, in assisting E. B. Bagby in a meeting at Ninth Street Church, which is a remarkably strong church. Brother Bagby is doing a fine work. If every congregation were as loyal to its pastor, there would be fewer preacherless churches. There were over 50 additions and the meeting had to close all too soon on account of Brother Ainslie being called home to Baltimore.—W. E. M. HACKLEMAN.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Jan. 10.—Four confessions at the First Church last Sunday. We have just organized a new Bible school in the suburbs.—J. T. BOONE.

Camp Point, Jan. 23.—Our meeting closed Sunday with 46 additions—29 by primary obedience and 17 otherwise. It is the best meeting that has been held here in years. W. F. Shearer was the evangelist.—H. J. REYNOLDS.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., Has Hit on a New Idea.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Dr. J. W. Blosser, of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package, and an illustrated book.

New Albany, Jan. 26.—The Park Christian Church has enjoyed a glorious revival. We began Dec. 31 with A. L. Crim as evangelist, and closed Jan. 24, receiving 39 by confession and 16 from various churches and newcomers to our city. Brother Crim received the finest attention of a full house. The meeting leaves us strengthened and zealous for future work. Max Wilson, of Howard Park, was leader of song.—F. T. Porter, minister.

KENTUCKY.

Lexington.—I recently closed a two weeks' meeting at Ashland, resulting in 61 additions—29 by confession and baptism, 32 by letter, by statement, restored, or from the denominations. I began here with O. G. Blackwell Jan. 23. I have an open date for May.—J. J. Taylor, evangelist.

THE CHURCH AND OUTCASTS. —Matt. 9:10-13; 11:19; Luke 7:36-50; 15:12.

As was the ancient temple, so is the church sanctified to day, not so much by inventories of the virtues of the good as by the penitential tears of outcasts who enter in and beat their breasts saying, "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner."

Significant Scriptures: Topic texts; of them consisted the church at Corinth 1 Cor. 1:26 31; Paul converts Philemon into being brother to Onesimus instead of master, Phile. 1; the prisoner an ambassador of the King, Matt. 25:31-46; from social and political ostracism Jesus called an apostle, Matt. 9:9; restored domestic outcasts to families, Luke 17:11-18; conversed with and pleaded for them, John 4:1-26, 8:1-11; commended the Samaritan's humaneness, Luke 10:25 36.

---

The Pharisaic accusation, "He receiveth sinners," is his highest eulogium, the hope of the world to-day. Heaven's gate never opens but Christ receiveth a sinner—a sinner who within the church was washed in the blood of the Lamb and arrayed in wedding garments. And that is the justification of the church, not merely to adoringly contemplate the goodness of God and sing of the sweet by and by, but in Jesus' name to receive outcasts and fit them for the skies.

---

Jesus' pathway was thronged with the outcasts of Israel, not because he was like them, but loved them, and they instinctively felt he would die for them. The church today is cursed by men who love the name of Jesus; it is shunned by outcasts whom he died to save and who would strive to hear his words of life should he come again. Oh, Lord, so fill thy church with the spirit of the Lamb of God that the lost sheep of the house of Israel may be attracted into the fold and be saved!

---

If the goodman's house in the story of the Prodigal Son represent the church, we see in that house not one outcast, but two. That elder son was as far from being en rapport with the father's spirit, sentiments, and ideals as was his scapegrace brother. The mission of the church is to reclaim both of these different orders of sinners—to inspire that respectable sinner through negations to deeds of positive virtue no less than to restrain the more impulsive and uncalculating from the commission of wild excesses. The church must melt human icebergs as well as extinguish mortal firebrands.

---

Scripturally considered, all not enjoying the privileges of the Lord's house, are religious outcasts. A line of cleavage divides this element of society, that unfortunately includes so many, into two great classes. On one side are the rich and respectable residents of "quality hill," and on the other the denizens of the slums. The church, at least in our day, is making earnest efforts to reach the latter through missions and salvation army methods, but is doing little indeed to reclaim his rich brother whose spiritual estate is fully as desperate. Do we need more courage to approach the austere worldly great? Let us pray for it, for the Lord will as surely require at our hands the soul of the man in velvet as of the one in fustian.

One purpose of the Advent, men apparently will not comprehend is that Jesus came to earth not to regale himself with the righteous, but to save sinners. None admired the lilies more than he, but he came rather to nurture bulbs whose flowers would be next summer's glory than to rejoice in their present beauty; his was not to stroll among the sculpture groves of his day so much as out of depths of degradation to quarry marble in which reposed those angels whose liberation by apostles and preachers of succeeding ages would demonstrate the wisdom of his mission and the divinity of his love. It was not to felicitate the immaculate, but to lift the evil to the levels of goodness, and inspire them to scale the heights of holiness. To continue that sacred ministry he founded his church and sanctified it.

HOW TO CONQUER TEMPTATION.—Matt. 26:41; 1 Cor. 10:12, 13; Jas. 4:7; Heb. 2:18; 4:14-16; 12:1-4.

With some temptations we rather cultivate intimacy than seek to avoid, and we fondly consider them divine testings; but really they are Satan's investigations and scouts that will finally lay us helpless at his cloven feet.

As was his folly who warmed in his bosom the half frozen serpent that afterward stung him to death, so is his who cherishes in his heart any temptation to sin. The time to destroy it is when it is weakest and you are strongest—that is to-day.

---

Sturdy self-reliance must not be discounted, but we rejoice that the same Book that says, "Every man shall bear his own burden," also contains, "Cast thy burden on the Lord and he will sustain thee." Experience teaches that most of our temptations must be overcome as David did Goliath—in the name of the Lord and the power of his might.

---

The better medical science is not so engaged in treating special diseases as in building up rugged constitutions impervious to attacks of the countless infirmities eager to prey upon us. So with the soul; rather than study specifics against a single threatened ill, let us build up strong spiritual natures that are themselves invulnerable to the attacks of intemperance, impatience, infidelity and all the perils of spiritual weaklings.

---

Some of the most adroit and successful temptations are addressed to pride. Because Adam and Eve would be as the gods, they were driven outside the gates of Paradise; Haman's ambition to have every knee bow to him was why he hung on Mordecai's gallows; Nebuchanezzar's accepting divine homage sent him to the pastures grazing as an ox; and Satan offered Jesus all nations of earth and their glory for a single obeisance—not that he would give the glory, but would, through gratified pride, have dethroned him from the holy triumvirate. Beloved, when we are weak then we are strong. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth—and the heavens.

For the temptations that come to the conscientious priest serving in the great temple of humanity, and those suggestions of evil that Satan breathes upon us, even in the prayer meeting and other places of religious duty and sacred privilege, we have a divine egis of protection, but there is absolutely no celestial armor for the reformed drunkard who wantonly walks amidst scenes of former revels; or one rescued from society's meaningless rounds to a life of usefulness; or any one who, having started Zionward, wilfully turns back, even for temporary dalliance, into forbidden places. In less than a moment can Beelzebub's archers speed the fatal arrow into the hearts of those lingering about the wicket gate.

Lacedæmonian fathers made their slaves drunken that their children might be warned against intemperance. Look around and see the end of those indulging in that sin that doth so easily beset you. Is gold their tempter—where is the money lord who hath made gold his trust that is satisfied with gold? Where the social queen who at last believes her throne a stepping stone up into the society of the angels? Consider the end of those avenues of sin that seem so pleasant. As we approach their further terminals, we shall find only remorse and at last a hopeless grave. Serious consideration of the last days of those degenerates we see around us on every side helps us to vanquish temptations at their first insidious approach. Temptation's flowers always turn to dust, her apples to ashes.

Variation in Diet

The unprecedented call from intelligent classes for really hygienic foods is sufficient evidence of the careful attention being bestowed upon the purity and wholesomeness of the foods we eat. Heretofore, the word "diet" has carried with it the idea of abstaining from foods and delicacies most enjoyed, but since the introduction of the Criss-Cross Cereals people have come to understand that they can diet and at the same time eat food that is not only a builder of bone and sinew, but a palatable and delicious food as well. The cereal products of Farwell & Rhines of Watertown, N. Y., are responsible for this change of opinion—their Gluten Flour for Dyspeptics—their Special Diabetic Flour for Diabetics, and their K. C. Whole Wheat Flour for those suffering from constipation being highly esteemed and endorsed by those who have benefited from their use. Farwell & Rhines are also the manufacturers of two of the most famous of breakfast cereals—Gluten Grits and Barley Crystals, both of which are not only highly nutritious, but are especially adapted to those persons with whom ordinary cereals disagree. The name Criss-Cross Cereals was given to these cereals because of the distinguishing double criss-cross marks on every label—the criss-cross lines being a part of the registered trademark. Those who suffer from indigestion, diabetes, constipation, or diseases of the kidneys are invited to send for a valuable booklet, which treats of the proper foods for different disorders—the booklet, together with samples will be sent free to anyone on request by simply addressing Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y.

JESUS CALLING FISHERMEN.—Luke 5:1-11.

Memory Verses 5, 6.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children.—Eph. 5:1.

The baptism and temptation of Jesus evidently left him with a fully matured consciousness of his messianic mission and of the spiritual character of the kingdom. But between those two events and the beginning of the active ministry as recorded by the synoptic writers, there intervened several months, possibly as much as a year, the events of which are recorded by John (Chapters 1-4).

This intervening time was spent partly in Judea and partly in Nazareth. It does not appear that it was all devoted to continuous public ministry. Confronted by the greatest task that any man ever faced and with a consciousness that the time for the accomplishment of it would be brief, Jesus, nevertheless, approached his task with the deliberation characteristic of a great soul, wholly devoid of feverish haste.

Almost immediately after the baptism and temptation, Jesus began to attract to himself certain men, some of whom had been followers of John the Baptist. Encouraged by John the Baptist's testimony (John 1:19-34) Andrew and John made the acquaintance of Jesus and spent a day with him, and Peter was brought into the group by his brother Andrew. The next day Philip and Nathanael (probably the same who was afterward called Bartholomew) were added to the company. It is clear that their following Jesus at this time did not involve any complete identification with his cause or any permanent abandonment of their secular pursuits. But as these five men were Galileans and Jesus was on the point of starting on the journey from Judea to Galilee, doubtless they traveled together, and a few days later, when they had reached Galilee and were attending the wedding at Cana, they were still with him. Through the succeeding months Jesus had, at least part of the time, a little group of followers, probably including some of these five and possibly others. But this discipleship was of an informal and desultory sort, as is indicated by the second call of the same men (as narrated in the present lesson) and still later by the formal setting apart of the twelve (Luke 6:12 ff. and Mark 3:13 ff.).

The events of this intervening period after the temptation, which is covered by John's account, but not by the Synoptists, included the following:

1. Opening Events in Judea:
   (a) John's testimony (John 1:19 34).
   (b) The first five disciples (John 1:35-51).
2. Return to Galilee:
   (a) First miracle at Cana (John 2:1-11).
   (b) Sojourn in Capernaum (John 2:12).
3. Early Judean Ministry:
   (a) First cleansing of temple (Jn 2:13-22).
   (b) Nicodemus (John 2:23; 3-21).
   (c) Preaching and baptizing in Judea (John 3:22-36).
4. Second Return to Galilee:
   (a) Departure from Judea (John 4:1-3 and also Matt. 4:12 and Mark 1:1-4).
   (b) Woman of Samaria (John 4:4 26).
   (c) Discourse at Sychar (John 4:27-42).

With the second arrival in Galilee and the beginning of what may be called the first period of the Galilean ministry, we are again on ground common to the Synoptics. There was the first rejection at Nazareth and the consequent removal to Capernaum, and then the call of the four disciples.

For three of these four, it was, as we have seen, a re-calling. We may assume that John was the unnamed disciple of John 1:35-40, so that his brother James was the only one of the four who had not already known some degree of companionship with Jesus. The others had already hailed him as Messiah and had already seen his miracles and heard his discourses. They were not following him now solely upon the evidence of the wonderful draught of fishes.

Jesus had already become a widely known and popular teacher. His trouble was not to get an audience, but to get rid of the wrong sort of followers. Standing by the Sea of Galilee he was preaching "the word of God." What was the burden of that discourse? No word of it is preserved for us, but we may well imagine that it consisted of such precepts and principles as Matthew collected in what we call the Sermon on the Mount.

The following suggestions for meditation or for teaching, may be drawn from this incident:

1. Simon freely gave the Master the use of his boat. It was a humble service, but richly rewarded. When the Lord needs a boat, it is the hour of glorious opportunity for one who has a boat. The Lord's work is always needing humble and ordinary instruments and services, and the lowest of us will find that he has a use for our offering.

2. The exhibition of power in the miracle of the fishes, indicated to Peter at once the presence of a divine personality. Divinity meant holiness, and his first words were, "I am a sinful man." He was brought to penitence and humility, not by any criticism of his shortcomings, but by the revelation of divine purity.

3. The higher task was given to those who were willing to follow Jesus. They could have had no idea of either the work or the honor which lay before them. But they had heard the voice and they heeded the call. It led to splendid service and immortal glory.

In studying the text of this lesson, note that the accounts of the incident in Matthew and Mark are almost verbally identical, while Luke varies somewhat widely from these two. The following arrangement of parallel columns, indicates the variations between the two narratives:

| Simon and Andrew casting net. | Simon, James and John mending nets.Entered boat.Taught multitude.Draught of fishes.James and John summoned to help. |

Some Queer Logic.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of December 28 there is an open letter to J. H. Garrison on the Holy Spirit question by S. R. Hawkins. In the Editor's reply I find this statement: "Jesus prayed for the Holy Spirit at his baptism (Luke 3:21,22), and as we quote his example in baptism, why not follow his example in praying for the Holy Spirit?" It is always a good and safe thing to have a little New Testament in the pocket, and to prove all Scripture reference by the reading. I have been confirmed in this practice more and more in the last five years. Here is the reading of Luke 3:21,22: "Now it came to pass, when all the people were baptized, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened, and the Holy Spirit descended in a bodily form as a dove, upon him, and a voice came out of the heaven, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased." Now, from this reading, who can properly assert anything about the substance of Jesus' prayer? Let us try the same logic on some other things that followed that baptismal prayer. Jesus prayed; the heavens opened, the Spirit came in the form of a dove, and a voice came from heaven; therefore Jesus prayed explicitly for these things. We quote Jesus' example in baptism; why not follow his example and pray for "the heavens to open, the Spirit to come in the form of a dove, and, for a voice to come out of the heaven" to acknowledge our sonship? Q. e. d. I am not yet satisfied that I know all about this Holy Spirit question, and I am still trying to gather the grain from the chaff: but one thing is certain, for thinking people that kind of logic is sufficient to discredit either the cause or the advocate, if not both. Give me that kind of logic, and I am willing to meet even Brother McGarvey and prove to him, beyond a doubt, that the moon is made of green cheese. R. A. GILCREST.

Fulton, Mo.

[Our reasons for believing that Jesus' prayer at his baptism included, as its chief feature, the petition for the Holy Spirit, have been given, in answer to a question, and need not be repeated here. We are satisfied with them, notwithstanding our brother's "q. e. d." We believe the more Brother Gilcrest studies the vital relation between the Holy Spirit and Christ's ministry, the less "queer" will the logic of our statement seem to him. There is not in our mind the shadow of a doubt as to "the substance of Jesus' prayer," which should not be confused with the incidents associated with it. The word "explicitly" was added to complete the "q. e. d."—EDITOR.

CARTER.

On Dec. 14, 1905, at the home of her daughter in Stanford, Ky., Mrs. Elizabeth Logan Carter, widow of the late Edward Carter, after a long and painful illness, from nervous trouble, entered into eternal rest. She leaves one daughter, Mrs. James H. Baughman, and a half brother, Mr. Hume Logan, of Louisville, Ky. Sister Carter was 59 years old, and had been from her girlhood a consecrated Christian. Like Dorcas, it could be said of her, "This woman was full of good works and alms-deeds which she did." She and her husband were faithful members of the congregation at McCormick's during their married life, and their home was always the preacher's home. Many a tired, discouraged minister has been cheered and brightened by her gracious hospitality and loving ministry. On the afternoon of Dec. 15, a short service was conducted by the writer, after which the body was laid to rest in Buffalo cemetery to await the coming of our Lord. May the God of all grace comfort the bereaved ones. L. M. OMER.

HARDING.

Benjamin Harding was born in Somersetshire, England, March 4, 1844, and died Jan. 17, 1906, at his home in Kent, O. He was a good man, "full of the Holy Spirit and of faith." The church in Kent and his family are left almost inconsolable.

Akron, Ohio. F. M. GREEN.

SHIVELY.

Sarah E. Adamson, wife of J. W. Shively, departed this life at her home in Nelson, Neb., Jan. 14, 1906, aged 58 years. She left her husband, to whom she was married in 1882, two children, Esther and Carl, her father, 89 years old, and eight brothers. All these were at her bedside the week preceding her death. She was sick many weeks. I, who had known and loved her for thirty-five years, officiated at her funeral, assisted by her pastor, A. W. Henry. She was universally loved by all who knew her, on account of the gentleness, purity and loyalty of her life. Hers was both a cultured heart and intellect. She loved THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and was deeply interested in world-wide missions. Indeed, there is not an earthly interest with which she had to do, that will not feel keenly her loss. She became a Christian in 1863 and united with the Christian Church. It is needless to say that "she was ready"—such a character is always ready to meet God. H. S. GILLIAM.

Studies in the Life of the Christian, His Faith and His Service, by Henry T. Sell, D. D. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Price, 50 cents net.

This little book is quite up to the standard set by Dr. Sell's earlier and well known books on Bible study. It seeks to apply to modern life, domestic, social, and civic, the fundamental principles of Christianity. The work is systematic and suggestive, concise and constructive. Every chapter is full of that which should be of interest to every Christian, both to teacher and taught.

Life and Matter, by Sir Oliver Lodge. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Price $1, net.

In this work, which is especially intended to act as an antidote against the speculative and destructive portions of Professor Haeckel's "Riddle of the Universe," the author renders a positive service both to science and philosophy. By a critical analysis he shows, while at the same time he elaborates, what in Haeckel is science, clearly differentiating it from much in him that is pure speculation and dogmatism. The author's position is that life is not a function of matter or energy, that the two belong to different categories. While life depends upon matter for its phenomenal manifestations, which are discontinuous and temporary, yet it has an independent, permanent, noumenal existence.

The Teaching of Jesus concerning the Holy Spirit, by Louis Burton Crane, A. M. American Tract Society, 150 Nassau Street, New York City. Price, 75 cents.

This little volume is one of a series of books under the general title of "The Teaching of Jesus," which is being issued by the American Tract Society. It is a very sane and satisfactory treatment of a confessedly difficult subject. Chapter I treats of "The Spirit of God in the Old Testament," which relates to his work in the cosmos, in the theocracy and in the prophets. The teaching in relation to the Spirit in the Old Testament is summed up as chiefly this: "That the Spirit is God active in the world. That he is especially the divine principle working for the redemption of men." As the redemptive agent he was active in the work of the prophets of Judah and of Israel, and in preparation for the Messiah. Other chapters deal with "The Equipment of the Messiah"; "The Spirit and the Kingdom"; "The Sin Against the Holy Spirit"; "The Father's Chief Gift"; "The Promise of the Paraclete in His Relation to the Mission of the Twelve"; "The Christian Life"; "The Conviction of the World" and "To the Father and to the Son." Then follows a chapter on "The Great Commission," and the book closes with a "Summary." The book is well indexed. Considerable prominence is given to the teaching of Jesus concerning the Holy Spirit, as is proper, but his relation to the individual believer is brought out more especially by the apostles. We have seen no book of equal size that gives a more satisfactory treatment of this subject than this little volume, and as such we commend it to our readers who may wish to make further investigation of this subject.

Successful Men of To-day and What They Say of Success, by Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph.D. Funk and Wagnalls Company, New York. 297 pages. Price, $1.

This is one of the most practical and useful books in the way of character helps for young folks that has been issued. It is now in its forty-fifth thousand, having recently been revised and enlarged. We published an extract from it in our Home Department pages, January 11. Mr. Crafts has for many years been a careful student of sociology and a leader in all efforts to bring public and private life into harmony with the high ideals of Christianity. Of course it is this spirit that inspires and permeates this book. Around all this are grouped facts, thoughts, and sayings of the successful men of to-day in such a way as to form a study of what leads toward the best success and what is the cause of so many failures in a man's life. Incidentally the book shows that the world's leaders have never been atheists, but the men of faith. The book is not only a useful one but an exceedingly interesting one, abounding in good stories and watchwords new and old.

The Parting of the Ways.

By J. M. Lowe.

When in introspective silence
  Tho'ts of final parting come,
Tho'ts of leaving all my dear ones,
  Of my being left alone,
Left alone without the solace
  Of a wife or child's caress,
All the thoughts within my being
  Melt to sweetest tenderness.

Somewhere in the unknown future
  Sleeps a sad and solemn day,
When each life within this earth home
  Silently shall slip away.
And the prospect of that parting
  Fills my heart with bitter pain.
Tell me, tell me, you that love me,
  Will you not come back again?

Somewhere on some fair to-morrow
  Shall I see your loving face?
Shall we meet beyond the sorrow
  In some old familiar place?
Yes, the best shall perish never,
  Hope is anchored to the sky,
Life goes on, it must forever,
  Love is far too sweet to die.

Perish every unkind action!
  Perish every selfish thought!
Let me find no satisfaction
  Save in being what I ought.
Standing thus so near the gateway
  Of a land of endless bliss,
Let me not once mar the picture,
  By a weak mistake in this.

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of First Two Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either one of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. A consultation of the kind-hearted people of the town is to be held to decide upon what to do with the two children.]

Chapter III.

When breakfast was over, Miss Glory went to the shelf, and took down a pipe and a sack of tobacco, which she held out to Mr. Merlin Aggency. "Here, brother," she said, "you must take your smoke out in the yard this morning, I have a splitting headache. We will not be ready for you for several moments."

The dining-room had an outside door. It was a glass door, and through it they could see the aged gentleman seat himself in an old split-bottom chair under a hard maple.

"Miss Glory," said Raymund, his voice quivering, " you don't think we will have to go to an orphan home, do you?"

"I think you are too old to be taken into one," said the old lady, abruptly. "You are twelve years old. They have places for children of your age—homes of the friendless or something like that. But there's no place for you in Crawley that I know of except the—" Miss Glory had a very bad headache, but she did not say "poor house"—she only looked it.

"Oh, Raymund!" cried Rhoda appealingly. "What can we do?"

"Never mind," said the boy, clenching his little fists, "Raymund means 'Protector,' remember that!"

"When the ladies come to-morrow afternoon, we will settle on something, I hope," said Miss Glory. "Maybe when the preacher comes he can tell us what to do. The new preacher will move in some time this week."

"Maybe," said Rhoda, "we can make ourselves so useful to somebody that they will let us stay with them. Oh, Miss Glory! Let us be useful to you!"

"Very well," said the other, promptly. "These dishes must be scraped up. Whatever else in the world is coming upon us, the first things are these dishes. There's no use considering anything till they are out of the way."

"And let me get dinner for you!" cried Rhoda. "I have cooked ever since mother got so sick. You have a bad headache—go and lie down all day, and let me manage things. I would like that—wouldn't I, Raymund?"

"And let me do things," said Raymund. "Do you want wood cut, or water brought?"

"I would like to darken up my room and lie still for hours," said Miss Glory. "I believe we'll try it. After the dishes are cleaned, I'll leave the house to you, Rhoda. And, Raymund, your duty will be to keep an eye on Mr. Aggency. Mr. Aggency longs to go to town, but it would not be good for him. If you see him getting ready to leave the place, you must send for me instantly, and keep him at home by all means." When the dishes were scraped and ready to be washed, Miss Glory sent Raymund for Mr. Aggency. The old gentleman entered the kitchen with great alacrity, and taking down a large clothbound ledger-book, seated himself at a little desk. Rhoda wiped the dishes, and Mr. Aggency watched each article as it was placed away. When all was done, the inspector dipped his pen into the ink, and, having counted the plates, said, "Four plates," and entered "4" on his plate-page. "Now the cups," he said, hunting up his index. "Cups. Yes, under C. Good! How many cups have we this morning? Ah, yes! Six knives? Why, very good! There are usually only two. Forks? not so good a showing; only five forks; but six knives." Thus conversing with himself, and extremely busy and cheerful, Mr. Aggency made an inventory of the entire stock. Then he returned to his chair under the hard maple in the side yard. Presently Raymund and Rhoda went out to sit near him on the grass. Just on the other side of the picket fence was what, for seven years, had been for them home. They gazed at the familiar house, the well-known walks, the beloved trees, till the tears blinded their eyes. A man was whitewashing the fence on Miss Glory's side. He was a workman who had done odd jobs about Crawley for several years, yet to the children he now seemed strange and remote. Indeed, everything they looked at had a curiously strange appearance—since their mother was dead.

The man worked slowly at the fence with deliberate motions, as if he had plenty of time, and, what was more to the point, plenty of other people's time. His name was Wizzen. The children did not know if it were a surname or a given name. Raymund concluded to ask him. The workman had a dry, but pleasant, face, and, though his clothes were too small for him, and there really seemed not enough room when he stooped over, his roving gray eyes suggested that his heart had enough room for friendliness.

"If you wouldn't mind," said Raymund, "I would like to know if you are Wizzen Something, or Something Wizzen, Wizzen."

"And I would like to know, too," said Rhoda. Old Mr. Aggency smoked his pipe and mentally added up a column of figures.

"Goodness knows," said Wizzen. "And how are you children getting along?"

"Oh, it is so lonesome," said Rhoda impulsively.

"I expect it is," said Wizzen, rubbing some white on his blue trowsers, to free his finger sufficiently to rub the side of his nose. "Well, I used to be lonesome—my, my, but I was lonesome, oncet!"

"What did you do?" Raymund asked with the air of a man ready to try another's medicine, if well recommended.

"Moved," said Wizzen, slowly running, or rather, walking, his brush up one of the palings, and then stopping to examine the result. "You've got to keep a-moving."

"How do you move, Wizzen?" Raymund asked. It occurred to him that, however it was, the rate of speed must have been slight.

"Covered wagons is the best of all," said Wizzen, thoughtfully. "Oncet I went down to New Orleens from St. Louis on a house-boat. That was hunky!"

"My uncle lives in St. Louis," said Rhoda.

"Lots of people," said Wizzen, "lives in St. Louis." He dipped his brush in the bucket and almost lifted it to the next paling. Then he put it back and rested.

"I always wanted to go somewhere in a covered wagon, said Raymund longingly. "What fun it must be! Of course mother couldn't go; she wasn't well enough. Besides we never owned a horse."

"I got two horses," said Wizzen, slowly, "Ever oncet-awhile I drive over to Kansas City, takes two days and a night. I load up old iron and sell it, and come back here, and go to work. I must get this here fence done." He reached for the brush languidly.

"How much do you make off of a load of iron?" inquired Raymund, eager to seize upon any way of earning a livelihood. "You get the iron for nothing so there aren't any expenses."

"So," said Wizzen. "Well, three or four dollars, I reckon."

"It isn't much," said Raymund, disappointed.

"Nope. But it ain't money I'm after. It's the moving—the moving about from place to place—the continual change and variety of moving."

"It must be like an adventure!" said Rhoda sympathetically.

"It's hunky," said Wizzen conclusively. He got the brush to the paling. Although Wizzen was not very tidy as to his linen, or particular as to his hair and whiskers, or over nice as to his blue, many-patched garments, the children felt at home with him, and found his conversation delightful. When the time came for Rhoda to get dinner, their talk was not half done, and neither was the fence. Old Mr. Aggency had fallen asleep in his chair. Raymund, watching the short form, wondered that such slight legs could stretch so far. If he had not slept with those legs he could not have believed it.

"Miss Glory," said Rhoda timidly opening the door of the dark room, "dinner is ready. Shall I bring in yours?"

"No, I will come to the table," said the old lady, who lay propped upon pillows, gaunt and suffering from her headache. "Did you cook the rest of the steak?" They went into the dining-room.

"Yes, ma'am," said Rhoda, brightly.

"Where is it?" inquired the old lady, surveying the table.

"Right in the meat-dish," Rhoda explained. The other glanced at the dish and said, as she drew in the corners of her mouth, "Let us ask a blessing."

"We have four cuts, I believe," said Mr. Merlin Aggency, raising his knife. He attacked the dish, then looked inquiringly at his sister.

"What is this?" asked Miss Glory pouring a liquid from the coffee-pot.

Rhoda was surprised. "It is coffee, Miss Glory."

"The toast is rather black," said Miss Glory, rising.

"It stayed 'most too long," Rhoda apologized.

"It is just like me," remarked Miss Glory. "Get your pipe, brother Merlin, dinner is not ready yet." The old gentelman, who had with great difficulty parted a small island of steak from the white and blistered mainland, asked, "Shall I count that cut, sister Glory?" Miss Glory did not respond. "Run out and play, children," she said briefly, "I will call you when dinner is ready."

Past and Future.

By William Rogers Clay.

The following witty speech was given at the annual banquet to men of which E. L. Powell, of the First Christian Church, Louisville, is host. An account of the banquet is given in "Our Budget" pages.

Answering the toast, "Fifteen Minutes' Outlook," William Rogers Clay spoke in part as follows:

"Careful introspection is always necessary to see that our views of to-morrow are not controlled by our sickness or failure, our health or success, for the world may move forward in spite of our indigestion or indigence, and backward in spite of our grape-nuts or greenbacks. And above all things, we should not overlook the influence of the liver, for that organ, even when in a state of inactivity, has sufficient power to wither the reddest roses of pleasing prospect.

"The real outlook always depends upon true retrospection. By the twilight of history we may predict the dawn of to-morrow.

"We all love the past. We love it not only for the joys felt, but the agonies endured. Sweet days were those of red-topped boots and sore heels, of bare feet and stone bruises, of long swims and longer switches, of pumpkin pie and poultices. Dear old days were those when men were loved who had never played football, and women were adored in spite of hoop-skirts. We shall never cease to be thrilled by the mere recollection of the old wooden bath-tub. And, oh, the ecstasy of even looking back upon the time when cooks cooked for you instead of at you!

"If we consider not only the past of our own lives, but the past that lies beyond them, we shall find that it was the custom of each age to lament its own degeneracy, and to extol the virtues of the preceding age. We shall also find that it was the habit of every orator to tell the youth of the land not to draw their inspiration from the living, but to imitate the lives of their ancestors. How long this has continued no one knows, but if Mr. Darwin's theory be correct, I have no doubt it extended back to the time of our ape-like ancestors, who persisted in telling the younger ages to refrain from their new 'monkey shines' and stick to the tricks of their fathers.

"In many instances I find that this praise of the past and imitation of ancestral virtues have been due more to a dread of innovation than to a desire for improved conditions. There have been times when the appearance of a new bonnet, or the wearing of 'slashed apparel,' or the possession of 'immoderate great breeches,' has caused greater consternation and direr forebodings than the sight of the Quaker, Mary Dyer, marching to the scaffold under an armed guard of two hundred, led on by a minister seventy years old, and, as one historian says, 'all the fiercer for every year.' And even in our own day there are many reputable citizens who can stand anything but a substitution of the new for the old. They are not the least wrought up over revelations of bribery; they don't get alarmed when the city treasurer forms an entangling alliance with the treasury; they keep cool and collected when they learn that the grafter has been working on the village apple tree: but substitute some other game for golf and the foundations of civilization will begin to crumble.

"We Forget We Were Boys.

"And then, too, it has been the almost universal practice of the man who, in his youth, threw rocks at lamp-posts, 'played hookey,' tied tin cans to dogs' tails, destroyed birds' nests, robbed orchards and stole watermelons, to look with utter horror upon the pranks of boys who have the temerity to play tick-tack upon his window, and to exclaim with all the agony of glorified innocence, 'Boys are so bad now; I don't know what the world's coming to!'

"If, therefore, we consider only the testimony of each age as to its own degeneracy, we can not escape the conclusion that the world would have long since reached a condition of such indescribable wickedness that the possession of a single virtue would call for an apology, and every life insurance director would be looked upon as the incarnation of perfection.

"In the intercourse of nations with each other kindness and friendliness have displaced much of the enmity and bitterness of the past. And even those nations which fostered cannibalism and all forms of brutality and depravity, and to enter whose shores meant death to the white race, have thrown wide their gates to welcome the messengers of peace and civilization.

"Having devoted all my time to a survey of the past and present, I will now close with a brief reference to my real subject. What then is the outlook?

Dip Into the Future.

"As I 'dip into the future' I see the army of civilization marching on, led by intelligence. In its ranks I see envy and malice, cruelty and oppression, avarice and selfishness, corruption and fraud, commanded by hate. I see kindness and good will, gentleness and mercy, charity and self-denial, purity and truth, commanded by love. Everywhere is insubordination, insurrection, mutiny, revolt. I see avarice with dagger drawn striking at the heart of charity. I see the foul hands of corruption around the white throat of purity. I see malice grappling with good will, and falsehood battling with truth. I hear hate cheering for avarice. I see right and patriotism rushing to the rescue of purity and truth. I see timidity and fear and indifference making way for the contestants. For ages the contest goes on; sometimes the victory with one, sometimes with the other. Then I see love gathering her cohorts for the mighty struggle. I see malice and falsehood, avarice and corruption yielding to superior strength. Slowly but surely they are crushed to the earth. I see them shudder as the hand of death beckons them to follow. I see love radiant and triumphant. I hear the huzzas of untold millions. I behold intelligence, with bowed head and bared brow, kneeling at the feet of love, and I hear a voice saying: 'To thee we owe the victory.'"

The Growler.

By Dr. E. C. Dargan.

Rev. E. C. Dargan, who responded to the toast, "The Growler," at E. L. Powell's banquet, spoke in part as follows:

"The first branch of the subject brings up the problem of personality: Who the growler is. Were it not that the theory of biological evolution is now somewhat decadent we might invade the realm of zoology and heredity so far as to suggest that the line of descent of which the growler can boast is lupus, canis, homo; and, therefore, his personality contains, along with its human elements, distinct traces of the wolf and the dog. The growler is constantly hearing 'the call of the wild,' and it confuses his perception of the finer harmonies of life. From heredity the problem of personality advances to class, and we must ask, to what order of society does the growler belong? The answer, alas! is easy—he pervades them all. Whether the so called social classes are natural or artificial, whether based on character, culture or wealth, we find our unsocial comrade easily at home in any human group. His strong personality defies the futile boundaries of caste as easily as the dog in him jumps a fence, or the wolf in him roams a plain. The growler is a whole class to himself. * * *

"Having thus disposed of the first branch of our problem, we may now advance to the next:

"Where the Growler Lives.

"Here we have the problem of habitat. As we consult geography, and back of that geology, we learn that in all ages and places on this planet the growler has been found. Fossil remains of the mesozoic age tell us that when the mighty ichthyosaurus disported himself in the tumbling waves, when the horrid deinosaur crawled on land, and the dragon pterodactyl darkened the skies with his hideous wings, the growler also was native to the scene. And everywhere on the crust of the modern geologic earth the growler has appeared in every age to impress his views on every race of man, objecting to everything in sight and out of it. Cain was the first historic growler, and his progeny multiplied and replenished the earth and subdued it. Even the flood did not wash away all the growlers. Some were preserved in the ark, and their descendants are with us to this day. Typical of this mournful history was the significant fact that before the dove of peace came back from over the wild waters with the olive branch in her gentle bill, the wandering raven had been sent out to croak lonesomely over a desolated world. And 'this grim, ungainly, ghastly, gaunt and ominous bird of yore' has ever lived in the same world with the dove, so that her soft coo of love has too often been counterpointed by the hoarse croak of discontent. So history and geography tell us that every time and clime has had its hosts of growlers. Nor is our own great republic an exception. From ocean to ocean and from lakes to gulf we are a nation of kickers and growlers. We were born so and we can not get over it. And what shall we say of local conditions? Does there happen to be a growler or two in our beloved Louisville? We have only to consult our ears now and then to feel like saying with 'poor Goldy' concerning Islington:

> " 'And in this town a dog was found,
> As many dogs there be,
> Both mongrel, puppy, whelp, and hound,
> And curs of low degree.'

"I speak, of course, only of actual dogs, but their multitudinous presence is painfully suggestive of their human similars. But lest I should inadvertently 'bring a coolness over the meeting' I hasten to come to closer quarters yet, and discharge my conscience by broaching a still more hazardous inquiry. * * *

"When we come to criticise the action which has been thus defined we shall have need, as in all such matters, to use discrimination. For in many ways and degrees. Some are loud, insistent, provoking, and not devoid of results; some are feeble, hesitating, contemptible and ineffective; some are more or less generous, warning before a bite, and some are mean and snappish to the last degree of littleness; some are individualistic to the pathetic extreme of isolation, and some by sheer multiplication become a veritable roar of threatening demand; some are well-founded in just wrath against unbearable abuses, while others are but the exaggerated snarls of petty vanity; some may be even virtuous in intention, while others are utterly selfish and wicked. So the moral and social quality of his act is largely to be determined by the character of the growler and by his particular end in any given growl. But when the best possible is made of it, a growl is not an admirable thing. It is a weakness in the strong, a vice in the weak, a folly in the wise and a scandal in the foolish.

"Growls Differ from Each Other

"The growler is not and can not be a highly esteemed member of society.

"He is Always Disagreeable, often injurious and never highly useful. But owing to the general depravity of human nature, and the consequent imperfection of all human institutions, he has an unhappy but firm reason for being, and as long as he is inevitable he may be turned to account in several ways. He sometimes calls needed attention to existing evils which cry aloud for abatement, and but for his racket might be lazily condoned. So, amid many and better incitements toward the social good, a place and some degree even of charitable recognition may be accorded to him. But his chief service is as a warning how not to render service. His spirit is unlovely, his method coarse, his aims usually selfish, his courage questionable, and his achievements very slight.

"And so 'God rest you, merry gentlemen,' and may we all by divine help be so disposed as to have patience to bear with our discontented friend, courage to redress his just grievances and grace to be unlike him."

With the Children.

White Fields.

By Carolyn Wells.

I love the days in winter
  When snow falls all around,
And like a soft, white blanket
  Is spread upon the ground.

I love the days in summer
  When daisies are in bloom,
And cover all the meadow
  Like a carpet on a room.

And which I think the prettiest
  I really do not know—
When the fields are white with daisies,
  Or when they're white with snow.

General Boom-Boom.

By Fanny Adam Wilkes.

The hall clock said Boom-boom-boom, in a deep bass voice. Dong-dong-dong, answered the parlor clock, and Ding-dong-ding, came in silvery notes from the one in the library, and then the little brass clock in Grandfather's room replied in a sweet voice, and sounded forth the most melodious chimes, like the bells in the tower of St. Paul's on Sunday morning.

"It makes me feel kind of solemn inside, does it you, Grandfather?" said Radcliff.

"It used to, little boy, but I can't hear it very well now. Grandfather's getting deaf."

"But you can hear the hall clock, Grandfather, can't you?"

"Yes, I can hear him because he speaks so loud and slow."

"Do you like old General Boom-boom the best, Grandfather? I do, but Marjorie likes the clock with the bells."

"Yes," answered Grandfather slowly. "I like him best because he is the oldest friend. He used to live in my father's house when I was a little boy. And once when there was a burglar coming up the stairs of our house, the General said 'Boom-boom-boom!' so loud that it woke my father up and frightened the burglar away."

"Grandfather," whispered Marjorie, hiding her head in Grandfather's neck, "don't tell about it—it 'fraids me so."

"Oh, Marjorie's a 'fraid cat! She's afraid of everything. I'm not. I'm not afraid of anything," crowed Radcliff.

"Pooh! pooh!" said Grandfather. "Not so loud, boy; it never does to boast."

Grandfather kissed the little girl on his lap and held her close. Then he said, "Here comes a little mouse, creep, creep, creep," and Marjorie doubled over with laughter.

"Do it again,' she cried; but Grandfather said,

"Shoo, little pigeons!" and got up and went out into the hall to get his hat.

"Good-bye, Grandfather!" they shouted, and watched him from the window, walking down the street.

"How long are we going to stay at Grandfather's house, Nanna?" questioned Radcliffe at last.

"Two weeks, dear, unless mother says you may stay longer."

"I like to stay here with you and Grandfather," said Marjorie. "Only I wish mother was here, too."

"So do I," added Radcliff. Just then there sounded a patter of little feet and a happy laugh, and a wee girlie with black hair and big, gray eyes came toddling into the room, crying out,

"Me comin'—here me is!" and the Elfin baby, as Aunt Nan called her, looked about for the welcome that always greeted her coming.

"You dear little Brownie!" Nanna cried, hugging her tight.

"Isn't our baby sweet, Nanna?" whispered Marjorie. "Let her come and play with us, she's so cunning"

So Nanna went upstairs for a short time, and left the children playing happily in the big hall. Now and then she came to the head of the stairs, and looked down upon them to see if they were all right. "They're such good children," said Nanna to herself, and went back to her work. A hush fell over the house for a moment. The children were still in the hall below, and the General said, warningly, "Boom-boom-boom!"

"It's big enough for me to stand in," Radcliff was saying, as he held the door open and stepped inside of the big hall clock. "Oh, it's a fine place to hide in! I'm going to see what makes it go."

"Let me get in, Radcliff," cried Marjorie.

"Wait a moment, until I see this business first, and then I'll let you, Marjorie." Suddenly the hall clock gave a strange sound under the rude touch of a little boy's fingers, and the steady tick-tock ceased.

"Oh, Radcliff, what's the matter?"

"I don't know," answered a scared voice and the door of the General's house was closed rather quickly. How quiet the hall seemed without the voice of General Boom-boom! It was dreadful. What would Grandfather say? Grandfather, who thought so much of his clocks, and who liked the hall clock best of all. And what would mother say, if she knew?

"Let's go outdoors," suggested Radcliff. He wanted to get away from the silent, accusing face of the General.

"Now don't you go and tell, Marjorie," whispered Radcliff as they went out onto the veranda.

"No, I won't," she replied, "but if I were you, I'd tell Nanna."

Marjorie could never bear the weight of a burdened conscience.

When the shadows began to deepen in the big hall, Grandfather came home. Only the baby ran jubilantly to meet him, and Grandfather threw her up above his head and came into the library, bearing the little one on his shoulder. Marjorie, whose little face was quite pale with anxiety, came quietly to his side and laid her hand in his.

"Where's Rad?" cried Grandfather.

"Here I am. I'm looking at a fine book all about Indians. Tell me about it, will you, Grandfather?" But the boy did not dare to raise his eyes from the book.

Silence for a moment in the house, then the parlor clock and the library clock struck the hour without the General's signal.

"Look at this big Indian chief, Grandfather," said Radcliff nervously. But Grandfather went out into the hall.

"Hm!" they heard him say, and waited for their doom. "Some one must have been handling the pendulum and fingering the works, I'm sure. Radcliff! Marjorie!" he said, coming back into the library, "did you do anything to the General to-day?"

"I didn't, Grandfather," said the little girl, looking beseechingly into his face. Radcliff, still buried in his book, lifted his head just long enough to remark, "Perhaps it was the baby."

"The baby isn't big enough, Radcliff," said Grandfather, and looked searchingly at the boy from beneath his thick, bushy eyebrows.

It was a very long, uncomfortable evening, but it came to a close at last, and the children went to bed.

"Good-night, Grandfather," they said, faintly.

"Good-night," replied Granfather, very gravely. The children hurried up the stairs past the silent General, turning their faces from him as they went.

"Say your prayers, Radcliff," reminded Nanna. And Radcliff, obeying, repeated these closing words unsteadily,

"Help Radcliff to be thoughtful of others, truthful and good."

When the light was out and the two children were left alone in the room, Marjorie whispered, "Rad!"

No answer.

"Rad, aren't you going ever to tell? Grandfather'll forgive you. He looks so sad, I can't stand it." And Marjorie wept into her pillow.

Long after Marjorie was asleep, Radcliff lay tossing on his bed. Something sat heavily on his heart or his stomach, or was it his chest? Anyhow it was terrible. If he only weren't afraid to tell! And this was the same little boy who had boasted of not being afraid of anything. Radcliff found himself wishing that he had Marjorie's courage.

Suddenly the clocks—all but the General—began to speak. Dong—dong! and Ding—ding! and finally the brass clock with its sweet voice chimed solemnly in the still night. Slipping from his bed, Radcliff stole to the head of the stairs. There was a light in the hall and one in the library. Down the stairs the small boy crept with his bare feet. Grandfather was reading, and the lamplight fell on his gray hair. His face looked stern, Radcliff thought, and for a moment his courage forsook him.

"Grandfather," he sobbed, and in another moment he was confessing on Grandfather's shoulder.

"If a burglar had come to-night, Grandfather, the General couldn't have warned you, could he?" said the small boy after Grandfather had talked to him a while. "Is that the reason you are sitting up to-night? But General Boom-Boom can be mended, can't he, Grandfather?"

"I think so, little boy, and now go to sleep."—The Congregationalist.

Chinese Literary Examinations.

The Chinese educational system has done a good service. It is very democratic. The poorest child if he can get into one of the few free schools, or pay his way at one of the many cheap schools may look forward to a literary carer. If he is successful in his examinations an official career is possible.

Monthly official examinations are held in small centers; yearly examinations in larger, and for those who have won the first degree there is a triennial examination held in the provincial capitals, for candidates for the second degree.

Each student has a room or "stall" to himself. There are 26,000 rooms, and I am told that the students at one examination sometimes exceed this number.

The examinations are given in three sessions. Each session lasts nearly three days, during which time the student is not allowed to leave the room. The intermissions are for one day each. It is not uncommon for men to die under this excessive nervous strain. Yet men persevere until they are grey headed hoping to be successful at last.

The missionaries distribute a great deal of good literature to the students as they leave the halls the last day. It is politely received.

The character of these examinations has changed greatly in the last few years. Whereas formerly only a knowledge of the Chinese classics was required, now questions national, international, historic, economic or scientific are of frequent occurrence.

There is at present a greatly increased interest in education among the Chinese. They are opening up schools for western learning on all sides. This being true we must more thoroughly equip our mission schools with men and means that they may keep in the lead, as they are today, in the educational affairs of China. In this way we may hope to bring a strong Christian influence to bear, not only upon the boys and girls in our own schools, but in the government institutions where our graduates go to accept positions of trust and responsibility.

This book is without a doubt the finest of its kind in the world, and consists of eighty pages, sixty pages of which are devoted to eye diseases. Nearly fifty ordinary diseased conditions are treated in separate chapters, and the book is illustrated throughout with colored plates. The remaining twenty pages are devoted to testimonials from cured patients all over the country. The book is well worth its weight in gold to any one who is suffering with their eyes. ## What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

The Centennial Horizon.

Tell me the size of your world and I will tell you the size of your heart. The most fundamental thing that is to be accomplished by the Centennial agitation is to bring all the Disciples of Christ to behold all of the world that God himself sees—all that was contemplated when he gave his only begotten Son.

Now it would seem that no particular effort were needed to bring men to behold their own wards and townships; but as a matter of fact, many are so blind and unable to see afar off that they fail to look beyond their own dooryards, and some have the end of their eyelashes as their utmost limit of vision. One would think that the natural and most easy method of extending the horizon would be to point out the things that are nearest. Experience has proved the contrary to be true. The explanation of this lies in the fact that no man will admit that he is ignorant of and indifferent to his immediate neighbors, and so, while he insists that he sees, his sin remains, as in John 9.

But begin at the farthest reach of the divine vision and show the indifferent Christain, or church, the colossal needs of Africa and India. He has never pretended to see this before and takes no affront at your effort to inform him. And so at one stroke you lengthen the range of his vision so that his horizon includes the world and that means his own nation, state, county and voting precinct as well as China and South America. If a million and a quarter of Disciples could be brought to see the whole world as their Master sees it, they would be easily multiplied to twenty millions of better Disciples before the Centennial year. But since our faith is only as a grain of mustard seed, we are daring to contemplate an increase to only two millions within these four years.

The man who wrote the Declaration and the Address in 1809 was unwilling to have his horizon fixed by his presbytery and so with one great sweep he threw it out to the ends of the earth where the Savior's great commission had placed it. It was not enough to him to have the fellowship of the Anti-Burgher Seceder Presbyterians. He claimed the brotherhood of all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ sincerely and esteemed this his most precious possession. He insisted that the same heritage belonged to all other Christians and set about bringing them all into such union as would recognize the supreme fact.

For ninety-six years the Christian world has been moving up to the standard that he raised. The people who have advanced the farthest and fastest are those serving as missionaries on the far rim of the horizon. They have been taught under the divine Providence by the men they went to teach, and in turn are coming home to instruct those who sent them out to teach and with whom we have been pleading for union. We should not only rejoice in the powerful reinforcements that we have received in the missionaries and the mission converts and the friends of missions at home, but we should take the hint thrown to us by these facts and recognize that the ripest field in the world for the preaching of the seventeenth chapter of John is at the point farthest removed from the central strongholds of denominationalism.

Campbell, Scott and Stone and all their fellow laborers were missionaries. They went and preached and baptized and taught and they found their ready field not in the teeming centers of the east where denominationalism was intrenched, but in the frontiers where lived and wrought the men whose eyes were opened to new things. Now the frontiers are moving faster than the Disciples of Christ. Calcutta and Shanghai are to-day no farther from Bethany than St. Louis and Chicago were a hundred years ago. Let us prove worthy sons of worthy sires and seize the ripe opportunity of our generation as promptly and vigorously as they met the crisis that confronted them. We should be ashamed to call ourselves their successors and talk of celebrating their Centennial, if we fail to roll up $300,000 for missions this year and half a million in 1909. W. R. WARREN.
Centennial Secretary.

Current Events.

Dummy Directors in Congress.

Mr. Lincoln Steffens, who has devoted himself very assiduously and very usefully to discovering and publishing the shame of some cities and the shamelessness of others, has turned his attention to the federal government. He is now spending a period in Washington, and will make public the abuses which he discovers. There are doubtless plenty of them, and Mr. Steffens' method is better than a congressional investigation for applying the publicity cure. Whether his motive is reform or magazine sensation is of no consequence so long as he tells the truth. The first section of his report on conditions in Washington deals with the House of Representatives, which he likens to a dummy board of directors whose business it is to keep quiet, draw their fees and vote as they are bidden. This condition he attributes to the strength of party organization in the House, and to the dictatorial power which the Reed rules place in the hands of the speaker. "The speaker is the House," says Mr. Steffens, and by contrast he praises the Senate as a purely deliberative body whose members enjoy the sweet privilege of talking as long as they please on any subject they please, and of voting as they please. There is no boss in the Senate as there is in the House—not even Senator Aldrich, to whom that title is sometimes accorded. There is doubtless a measure of truth in Mr. Steffens' comments upon the procedure of the House. Budding statesmen who enter that body with their breast-pockets bulging with stump speeches which they are anxious to deliver, with hand thrust Webster-like in waistcoat bosom, to applauding galleries, to have flashed over the wires to a thousand waiting presses and preserved to posterity in the "Congressional Record"—such candidates for oratorical honors often find themselves singularly invisible to the speaker's eye when they rise to demand recognition by the chair. The length of the session being limited and the amount of business to be transacted almost unlimited, something has to be cut out, and the stump-speeches might as well go first. Incidentally, too, the House doubtless loses many sensible and helpful remarks which members who have not seen the speaker in advance would make if they had a chance. The tyranny of the speaker is more apparent than real. If it prevents a good many speeches, it cannot prevent any member from voting as he pleases, and voting rather than speech-making is the chief function of Congress. Few votes are changed by argument on the floor of the House. Recent events prove, too, that there is such a thing as successful revolt from party rule in the House. The Senate's prerogative of unlimited debate and freedom from party bosses is a doubtful advantage. Mr. Steffens will investigate to little purpose if he does not find, what everybody else knows, that the Senate is subject to influences no less potent than those which curtail the prerogatives of congressmen. If the boss of the House is in the speaker's chair, the bosses of the Senate are in the lobby.

Aged but Not Superannuated.

Senator Pettus, of Alabama, has announced that he will be a candidate for re-election to the Senate upon the expiration of his term in 1909. As he is now eighty-five years old and therefore, if his plans work out as he desires, will be ninety-four at the end of the term to which he aspires, it is evident that Mr. Pettus is not in favor of the Osler theory. Ten years ago President Cleveland declined to appoint him to the Supreme Court on the ground that he was too old (seventy-five years), and with undaunted spirit he determined to break into politics and outlined a twenty years' campaign of which he is now in the midst. Senator Morgan, who divides with Senator Pettus the labor of representing Alabama in the Senate, is eighty-two and is also a candidate for re-election. His protracted fight against canal legislation did not place him in the most admirable light in the eyes of many people, but it exhibited a surprising degree of physical vigor. Men of this type, remembered by posterity fifty years hence, will cause our descendants to sigh over the good old times when men lived to a ripe old age, and when the world's affairs were not in the hands of mere boys—just as we now recall the vigor of the pioneers as if their like were no more.

A Lock Canal.

The Isthmian Canal Commission has reported to Secretary Taft in favor of the construction of a lock canal with a maximum level of eighty-five feet. The board of engineers recently reported to the commission in favor of a sea-level canal, but this verdict was backed by a majority of only one and the American members of the board, with one exception, were with the majority. The report of the engineers took account only of the engineering problems, and their opinion (by the narrow majority mentioned) was that a sea-level canal was practicable and preferable. The Isthmian Canal Commission, weighing the questions of cost and time of construction as well as the engineering aspects of the question, favors a lock canal. In other words, they hold that, whatever may be the advantages of a sea-level canal, they would not be worth the additional cost and delay. The report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, together with that of the engineers, has been transmitted to Secretary Taft and will be forwarded by him to the President.

Providing for the Future.

How little interest most of us have in the future—the distant future, that is. Considering that money well invested doubles itself every fifteen or twenty years by the accumulation of the interest, it would obviously be perfectly easy for any one of average fortune to establish a fund which would amount to a very large sum within a couple of centuries. If a dollar doubles itself six times in a century, a fund of one thousand dollars invested and reinvested for two hundred years would (barring accidents) amount to the handsome sum of $4,096,000 at the end of that period. If one could wait until the end of the third century and there were no declines in interest rates, his modest thousand would by that time be $262,144,000. If it were not for the brevity of human life we might each accumulate a very comfortable competency for old age. But institutions are (theoretically, at least) immortal. It would be easy to enrich them if the donors would forego the pleasure of seeing, with their mortal eyes, the results of their benefactions. The shrewd Franklin took advantage of this principle and left a small fund which, accumulating by the addition of the interest, now amounts to considerably over a million and will soon be put to some good use. Mayor Fitzgerald, of Boston, has recently established a fund of $1,000 which is to be allowed to accumulate for a hundred years, at the end of which period it is to be used at the discretion of the board of trustees for any object which will most benefit mankind.

Food Adulteration.

Professor Wiley, the government food expert, has been made the victim of an artificial lamb chop. The chop in question was bought in a Washington butcher shop and its spurious quality was not detected until it was placed on the professor's breakfast table. Its texture excited his suspicion and on investigation he found the alleged chop to be a base fabrication of sheep neck and second-hand soup-bone. When such things are foisted upon the experts, what may not the rest of us expect? The work of detecting, punishing and preventing the adulteration of foods and drugs is going forward in many states under the leadership of the state chemists. The state chemist of Indiana, after analyzing nearly four thousand samples of various staple foods and drugs purchased in all parts of the state, has published a report. The interesting and novel feature of this report is that it publishes the names of the brands of the adulterated goods and the names and addresses of the retailers who sold them. The conditions revealed by this report are bad, but not so bad as many of the general statements recently published would lead one to suspect. For example, not more than half of the samples of olive oil turned out to be cotton seed oil, a great many brands of lemon and vanilla extract were shown to be pure, and a good deal of packed meat contained no harmful preservatives. Most of the adulterations discovered were fraudulent rather than dangerous.

The latest in co-operation is a kind of limited company. It is a well known fact that there are sermonizers who prepare discourses for preachers and send them out by the dozen to ministers all over the country who will lend themselves to this kind of a thing. But we have never heard before of a group of ministers entering into a co-partnership among themselves for the production of sermons, and each man using the common result. The Chicago "Standard" is authority for the statement that four pastors of the city of Chicago have entered into such an agreement. They meet together for study, and each is to preach at the same time upon the subject studied. The sermons, however, are to have individual treatment.

Christian Union: An Historical Study.

I. THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

4. Unity of the Early Church Tested.

We have spoken of the question of the relation of Gentile Christians to the law as having been settled by the conference at Jerusalem. It was, indeed, a settlement of this question among the leaders of the Church, and probably a majority of the members. If any one supposes, however, that the Judaizing party in Jerusalem accepted this official decision as final, and were silenced by it, he reckons without the record. When was the spirit of faction, or of opinionism, ever submissive to the wisdom and wish of the leaders of the Church, and the majority of its members?

It is clear from the record of this council, as it has been called, that there was opposition to the decision at the time, and notwithstanding the agreement reached between the "pillar" apostles at Jerusalem, Peter, James and John, on the one side, and the heads of the Gentile mission, Paul and Barnabas, on the other, this opposition increased in strength and fury until the party resolved to send out propagandists to visit the Gentile churches and persuade them to be circumcised and to keep the law of Moses, if they would not imperil their salvation. Of course this was in direct violation of the decision which had been reached, and of the apostolic rescript conveying this decision to the churches. But no doubt these men justified their course on the ground that it was more important to see that the law of Moses was obeyed than that they should obey a decree issued by men of their own time, and that too against their wishes. Besides, did they not have a "Thus saith the Lord" enjoining circumcision and other legal observances?

"For years and years these emissaries of a narrow-minded fanaticism, which believed itself to be the only genuine Christianity, diffused themselves over all the churches founded by Paul throughout the Gentile world. Their work was not to found churches of their own; they had none of the original pioneer ability of their great rival. Their business was to steal into the Christian communities he had founded and win them to their own narrow views. They haunted Paul's footsteps wherever he went, and for many years were a cause to him of unspeakable pain. They whispered to his converts that his version of the Gospel was not the true one, and that his authority was not to be trusted. Was he one of the twelve apostles? Had he kept company with Christ? They represented themselves as having brought the true form of Christianity from Jerusalem, the sacred headquarters; and they did not scruple to profess that they had been sent from the apostles there. They distorted the very noblest parts of Paul's conduct to their purpose. For instance, his refusal to accept money for his services they imputed to a sense of his own lack of authority; the real apostles always received pay. In the same way they misconstrued his abstinence from marriage. They were men not without ability for the work they had undertaken; they had smooth, insinuating tongues, they could assume an air of dignity, and they did not stick at trifles."* Nor were the efforts of these men without success. Particularly were the Galatian and Corinthian churches affected by them. The Galatian letter is one of the hot bolts which Paul hurled against his enemies, who, in time, were silenced, but not without making a severe test of the bond of unity which held the early Church together, as one body.

Another question soon rose upon the horizon, which was close akin to the one whose disturbing influence we have just seen. Was it right for the Jewish Christians to continue to observe the law of Moses? It is certain that Paul's view of Christianity, if rigidly applied, would have put a stop to all such legal observances. Besides, it was a logical conclusion from the decision in reference to Gentile Christians. There could not be two sets of terms of admission into the Church—one for Jews and another for Gentiles. Paul, however, was about the only leader who saw clearly that the law of Moses was superseded by Christianity and that the believer in Christ was complete in him and needed not to observe the ceremonials of the law. It is certain that the main body of the Jewish converts to Christianity, including perhaps the apostles at Jerusalem, had not yet reached this conception of Christianity. As a matter of fact we know they continued to observe the law for many years after their conversion to Christianity, so that James could say to Paul, on his return from his third missionary tour, as late perhaps as the year A. D. 56, or 57, "Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are who believe; and they are all jealous of the law; and they are informed of thee that thou teachest all the Jews who are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after their customs." For a quarter of a century, therefore, the Jews who believed on Christ had continued to be "jealous of the law." There is no evidence that Paul had ever raised his voice against the custom. The rumor that had reached Jerusalem to that effect was probably one of the false reports circulated by his enemies to injure his influence. "By one huge blow he had cut himself free from the bigotry of bondage; but he never fell into the bigotry of liberty."

A very important principle of union comes to light in the foregoing facts. There are those, no doubt, who think Paul should have made an issue with his conservative brethren and forced them to abandon their Jewish observances or himself pulled out, with his party, in order to have a "pure" Christian Church. But he deemed it wiser and more in accordance with Christ's spirit not to interfere with the deep-seated prejudices and long-established customs of his Jewish brethren, believing that the growth of the Christian life within them would ultimately remedy the matter. So long as they held to Christ as Lord and Savior, he felt that they should be recognized as Christians, and that Christ himself would reveal to them the way of the Lord more perfectly. Without this spirit of mutual toleration the Church could not have passed through the apostolic age an undivided Church.

A Church in New Hampshire

At the San Francisco convention a chart was hung on the wall showing that every state in the Union was represented in our list of churches except New Hampshire. The Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST made a proposition that he would undertake to provide the funds for an evangelist to hold a meeting in a place to be selected in that state, before the next convention, with a view of establishing a church, provided the New England Board would assist in the selection of the field and the evangelist. After considerable correspondence the place selected is Manchester, a city of 65,000 population, and Bro. Herbert Yeuell has been selected as the evangelist to hold the meeting. The time is March, with so much of April as may be necessary.

Soon after this proposition was made, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, through its corresponding secretary, Sister Helen E. Moses, expressed its willingness to assume the responsibility of supporting a pastor in the newly-established church, as soon as it was organized. It has been with the co-operation of Sister Moses that these preparatory steps have been taken. At our request Bro. A. L. Ward, pastor of our church in Boston, has, with Brother Hunt, of Springfield, Mass., personally investigated the cities of Concord and Manchester, and recommends the latter. Concerning this city Brother Ward writes that out of a population of 65,000, about 57 per cent are natives. He says: "There are about 31,000 young men in the city but only 765 are church members, and not more than 1,200 attend church. In all Protestant churches there are about seven thousand members, out of a Protestant population of 35,000." There certainly seems to be need of religious work in that city, and perhaps of a little different type from anything there represented. Over 30,000 young men in the city outside of the church! That argues something radically wrong with the religious life of the city. If we could supply that element that is lacking and stimulate all the other churches to better and more aggressive work, it would certainly be worth doing, and it would be entirely in harmony with the principles of Church federation.

At the time this proposition was made, at San Francisco, one or two brethren came to us and expressed the desire to co-operate with us in the enterprise. We are now ready to receive donations from brethren who wish to have a hand in planting a church, based on the principles of our Reformation, in the city of Manchester, N. H. No members have been found. It will have to be built from the beginning. There will be expenses for hall, for advertising, for salary of evangelist and singer, and all together we shall need several hundred dollars in order to plant a church in a city like that. We solicit the aid of any brethren who may feel moved to assist in this enterprise. All donations for this purpose may be addressed to the Editor of this paper and acknowledgment of the same will be made in our columns.

Is a Revival Coming?

There seems to be a general expectation among Christian people of all religious bodies that we are on the eve of a great revival in this country. Those whose ears are tuned to spiritual things claim that they hear the sound of the going in the tops of the mulberry trees. There are no doubt many indications that such a revival is at hand, but there is one essential condition which, it seems to us, remains to be complied with before we can expect a widespread revival of religion among men of the world, and of that condition we wish to speak.

The Church is God's agency for reaching and converting men. It is the pillar and ground of the truth. If the Church be worldly-minded, faithless, indifferent, how can God use it in the conversion of men? From many sources we hear that church members are indifferent, pleasure-loving, worldly-minded, absorbed in money-making, indulging in doubtful amusements, and otherwise neutralizing the spiritual power of the Church. Even the moral standard of many church members is reported to be very low. So feeble is the tide of spiritual life in many of the churches that members resort to card-playing, games of progressive euchre, dancing, and other forms of worldly amusement to while away the time, finding no joy and inspiration apparently in deepening their own spiritual life or seeking to save others. Our own observation leads us to believe that there is much truth in these reports.

What is the remedy? Faithful pastors and ministers of the Word must call the churches to a searching self-examination and to repentance. No church can hope for a revival while the tide of spiritual life is so low in its members. Let the stern voices of our modern prophets be heard in every pulpit, calling church members to repentance and to a renewal of their spiritual life, preparatory to entering upon an aggressive campaign for righteousness and for the evangelization of the world.

Judgment must begin in the house of God, and the Church must heal its backslidings and turn away from its sins of omission and commission and renew its allegiance to the Lord, before it can be used of God in the conversion of sinners. Let the worldly-minded and careless church pray with the Psalmist:

> "Create in me a clean heart, O God;
> And renew a right spirit within me.
> Cast me not away from Thy presence;
> And take not Thy holy Spirit from me.
> Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation;
> And uphold me with a willing spirit.
> Then will I teach transgressors Thy ways
> And sinners shall be converted unto Thee."

Notes and Comments.

Dr. Geo. H. Ball, of the Free Baptists, has written quite a thorough review of the Editor's recent work on the Holy Spirit in the "Morning Star" of Boston, under the title of "The Disciples and the Holy Spirit." We make the following extract from Dr. Ball's thoroughly appreciative notice:

"The attitude of leading minds in this denomination respecting the Holy Spirit has not always been entirely satisfactory, but for two or three decades their ideas have grown in clearness, and evidently in correctness and force of expression, until, from the most intelligent point of view, they are entirely satisfactory to evangelical scholars. This work of Dr. Garrison is lucid in style, thorough in discussion, fully up to the best standards of current belief in the personality of the Holy Spirit and his active service in the work of regeneration, instruction, and sanctification. The wild, mesmeric, and irrational notions which once largely prevailed, and still to some extent prevail, are properly discarded, and the efficiency of his work as a teacher, through the written Word, by men he has inspired, by the personal influence of Christians in whom he dwells, and by providential events and diverse currents of life, is magnified. It is eminently an instructive, inspiring, and comforting production. Its spirit is tender, devout, and in every respect well adapted to impress the reader with the infinite value of an ever-present and an ever-comforting and ever-helpful Spirit, both to win souls to Christ and to build them up into full grown and richly endowed men and women."

The "Morning Star" has an article on "The Attitude of the Disciples toward Union," in which, after quoting from the "Christian Standard" what it recently said concerning the impossibility of our recognizing the legitimacy of other religious bodies, it says:

"From this editorial it is apparent that at least a part of the Disciples do not recognize the Free Baptist denomination as churches of Christ or branches of the Church of Christ. These Disciples believe that the Free Baptist denomination, along with all other denominations, is 'utterly condemned as carnal by the word of God,' and that with the Free Baptists, as a denomination, there can be no such thing as alliance or federation without surrendering fundamental principles which the Disciples hold as matters of conscience."

The "Christian Standard" did indeed lay this down as a "simple truism," in its first article, but afterward it "amended" this "truism" so as to make exceptions of the Free Baptists and Baptists. The "Morning Star" must give credit to our contemporary for this enlargement and increased catholicity.

Quoting further, however, from the same paper what it said about the "legitimacy" of other religious bodies, the "Morning Star" comments as follows:

"Here is an aspect of the Disciples which has not been obvious to their Free Baptist friends. They evidently do not propose a union, which would permit the Free Baptists to do as they have hitherto done, namely, treat all sister Churches as allies in the great kingdom of God, worthy of distinct organic existence, and as valid branches of the great Church of Christ to which church members can be commended."

As to that matter, no religious newspaper would have control of the relations of the several Churches embraced in the union toward other Churches. Among Disciples of Christ, as among Baptists, we have congregational autonomy, and there would be no contraction of freedom on the part of either in consequence of their organic relationship.

The following selection from the "Christian Standard" belongs properly to the "Funny Column," but we insert it here to relieve this department from too great sobriety:

"In saying: 'Take for instance, that phrase which our contemporary uses so often, "those Disciples of Christ who would be simply Christians,"' The Christian-Evangelist betrays an almost unpardonable confusion of thought. It confuses a name with an explanation. The phrase 'those Disciples of Christ who would be simply Christians' is not a name that distinguishes them to whom it is applied from other believers, but is simply an expression of the fact that there are Disciples of Christ who are simply Christians, and others who have added something to the name and obligation of Christian."

To substitute an "explanation" for a "name" and then to deny that the "explanation" "distinguishes them to whom it is applied from other believers"—that is rich in humor. Then of course the "explanation"—"those Disciples of Christ who would be simply Christians"—includes all believers! But what then becomes of "others who have added something to the name and obligation of Christian"? Where do they come in? They come in right where the laugh comes in! Mark Twain may "go away back and sit down"!

Dr. Francis E. Clark has been saying some things in the "Outlook" in connection with the Quarter Century of Christian Endeavor which have displeased the "Epworth Herald." Dr. Clark says that the greatest opposition the Endeavor Society has had has come "from strict sectarians who have seen in its rapid growth a menace to denominational fences which had been built so high and guarded with so much jealousy." Of course the "Epworth Herald" regards this as a "fling" at the Methodist brethren for pulling out of the Christian Endeavor movement and organizing a separate movement for their young people. It does seem a great pity that this was done by our Methodist and Baptist brethren, and we believe the time will come when our people of all the religious bodies will hold their conventions together, regardless of any denominational organization which they may have for special purposes.

"Does not the success of our plea," asks a correspondent, "involve the destruction of the various denominational churches?" We should say, with the Master, that our mission is not to destroy but to fulfill. Christ would lift us all out of denominational limitations and bring us into perfect unity and conformity to his will. Our mission is to work with him toward that consummation.

Editor's Easy Chair.

What a widening and deepening revelation that was which came to Peter when he exclaimed, down at Cesarea, in the presence of a Gentile audience, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him." Up to that time Peter seems to have entertained the idea that the Jewish nation had a monopoly of righteousness such as would be acceptable to God. He had shared with his Jewish brethren the doubt whether the Gentiles were to be admitted along with the Jews into the Church with equal privileges. It had taken an ocean view, and a house-top vision, down by the seaside at Joppa, and a visit to the household of Cornelius, to break down his ancient prejudices and open up to him a wider view of God's mercy and purposes. As he gazed out over the broad expanse of the Mediterranean at Joppa and thought of the peoples living beyond, did he wonder whether all these were to be excluded from the privileges of God's grace and love? If such a thought came to his mind it was well-timed to the vision of the sheet let down from heaven "wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts and creeping things of the earth, and birds of the heaven," which was designed to remove the middle wall of partition out of his mind, as it had been actually removed by the death of Christ, and to teach him that "what God had cleansed" he was not to regard as "common." Then came the invitation to visit Cesarea and federate, as it were, with Gentiles. It was not until he had heard the story of Cornelius—how he was a praying man and that God had answered his prayer—that he was able to "perceive" the great truth quoted above. This was a great experience in the life of Peter, and it was a great event in the history of the Church.

What was the matter with Peter's religious views prior to this visit? They were provincial. Peter had not traveled extensively nor had he mingled with the people of other nations very much. His religious views had kept him aloof from the Gentiles. How could he know whether there were any really conscientious believers in the true God among the Gentiles, who were seeking to know God and work righteousness? No doubt he was sincere and honest, but he was provincial and narrow. God was seeking to widen his vision and enlarge his religious horizon. The visit to Cesarea had a mission for Peter as well as for Cornelius. While Peter was not entirely freed, even by these experiences, from his national prejudices, he was so far lifted above them that he was enabled to agree with Paul and Barnabas at the Jerusalem conference that the Gentiles were to be received into the Church without being burdened with the observance of Jewish ritualism. Paul had traveled much more extensively than Peter and no doubt had a much broader knowledge of the customs and literature of other nations than Peter had. It took Peter a long while to see that

> "There's a wideness in God's mercy
> Like the wideness of the sea."

Had it not been for his experience at Joppa and at Cesarea it is certain he never could have filled the large place which he subsequently did in the history of the early Church. What a delightful sensation it must have been to Peter's heart when it really dawned upon him that God was at work among all nations and that the Jews did not have a monopoly either of truth or grace! From that hour onward he had a higher and truer estimate of God and of other nations. If God would visit a Roman centurion, hear his prayers, and lead him into a larger knowledge of the truth, then a Roman was not to be despised, and the God of the Jews was also God of the Gentiles. It is a great experience in the life of any man when he comes to perceive that he and those who think with him are not the sole objects of God's care and love, and that on them does not rest the sole responsibility of saving the world!

One of the greatest obstacles in the way of Christian union to-day is religious provincialism. There are thousands of good and devout souls in the various religious bodies of Christendom who believe that the salvation of the world depends upon all other people being converted to their peculiar views and practices, and they cherish in their hearts a mild sort of pity for other religious people who abide in darkness because they have not accepted their particular tenets. It is a constant wonder to them why it is that God blesses, as he seems to do, other religious bodies than their own, and why they do not shrivel up and disappear from the face of the earth! It is true that the number who are in the bondage of this provincialism is steadily and rapidly decreasing, but still there are enough of them left to delay the work of Christian co-operation and Christian union. If these good people could mingle with other religious peoples in their worship; if they could attend religious gatherings made up of representatives of all evangelical churches, and catch their spirit of devotion to Christ, and see their passion for the world's conversion, they would be able to say with Peter, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons," and would realize that they are not the only people through whom God is working out his great plans for the world's salvation. They might find even that there are those whom they have despised, perhaps, who manifest a breadth of brotherly love, a spirit of devotion to Christ Jesus and his will, and a degree of self-sacrifice for the extension of his kingdom, to which they have not yet attained, and they would go home humbler and better Christians for having witnessed with their own eyes and ears what God is doing in and through others. It might not, and perhaps would not, change their view as to the theological errors which their brethren hold, nor cause them to hold with less tenacity to whatever truth God has shown to them, but it would greatly broaden their Christian sympathies and enlarge their spirit of Christian fellowship.

As one glides swiftly down the stream of Time there are beautiful spots along the shore where he would like to linger a while, did not the resistless current carry him on. The Easy Chair passed such a bright spot the other day. It was marked by what people call a "milestone," and we had scarce time to decipher the figures, "64," thereon, until our barque had floated on down the stream. The scene was beautiful while it lasted, for there were familiar faces of loved friends about the table, and there were friendly voices, not of condolence, but of congratulation and cheer. There were tokens of loving remembrance from fellow-workers, and there was music, and the old home at Rose Hill echoed with merry laughter and anecdote and bright repartee, through all the happy evening. What matters it if these "milestones" seem to come oftener than they used to, so long as they are occasions, not of grief over the departed years, but of joy in living and laboring for the world's betterment? Coming the other day on to Paul's description of himself in his letter to Philemon, as "Paul, the aged," our curiosity was excited to know how old he was, and we were a little startled to find that according to the best chronology, he was probably not more than sixty-two years of age! The Editor of the Easy Chair could not think of speaking of himself as "the aged." Is the active life of man growing longer? No doubt this is true, and it is also true that Paul had been the victim of shipwrecks, stripes, stonings, imprisonments, and hardships innumerable, and these helped to make him "aged" at sixty-two.

And yet the Easy Chair does not conceal from himself the fact that the time is short, and that what he does must be done quickly. "Tell us how life looks to a man of sixty-four," said one of the friends around the festal board the other night. Well, it looks very brief, and it seems to pass very swiftly. The westering sun hastens toward the horizon, and yet there remains much to be done. Again, to us at least, life seems rich in meaning and purpose. It seems vastly worth while to live and labor in a world over which God reigns and in which he dwells. In fact the world never seemed so beautiful, with its mountains and rivers, its lakes, its oceans and plains. Life's relationships never seemed so sacred and tender. The widening thought and the growing life of the world make one feel that it is glorious to live, and to have some part in the world's progress. One of the compensations which age brings, or should bring, is freedom to utter the truth as God gives one to see the truth, regardless of personal consequences. Why should one who is soon to enter into the presence of the Judge fear what men may say or do? Is God not constantly reversing human judgments? And so we try to please God, and help our fellowmen, and to sing with Tennyson,

> "Sunset and evening star,
> And one clear call for me;
> And may there be no moaning of the bar
> When I put out to sea."

A Letter From Tibet

By A. L. Shelton

Following is a resume of my trip down from Ta Chien Lu to meet Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Ogden.

We left Ta Chien Lu September 26, Mrs. Shelton and the baby in a chair and I riding a horse. The chair journey was like any other chair journey, I suppose, except that we had very rough roads a part of the way, as the country is nearly all mountainous and two of the passes are a little over 10,000 feet altitude, on top of which it was very cold. Here on this journey Mrs. Shelton saw her first dead men lying in the road. We passed two lying in the road, the first two days out. Arriving at Yacheo, we parted company, Mrs. Shelton and the baby having come eight days with me, they going on to Chentu, four days more, and I taking a raft down river. The rafts are made of large bamboo poles and are about 60 feet long and eighty feet wide. You feel very safe on them for you are in the water all the time and no danger of sinking as in a boat. They use them because the river for a hundred miles is so full of rapids and in places so shallow that boats can not be used. In the rapids we go very fast and it is somewhat exciting, especially when the water comes over the raft. I slept on the raft at night under some matting and at daylight we were off again before I would be up, but at the first rapid I would have to wake up and hold on to my bed to keep from being thrown out. On this raft I traveled, in about four days, the distance that, overland, takes about thirteen days' walking. At the place called Sui Fu I changed to a small boat perhaps 25 feet long and still had the most dangerous portion of the journey before me. On the Yangtze river as far as Chung King there was nothing particularly dangerous, but after leaving Chung King the river has many bad rapids, and many times the boat was lost control of and we went around and around like a top, but fortunately we struck no rocks. We went very fast at times and saw many boats wrecked. At one place, where there is a particularly bad rapid, there is a very narrow place into which if you can guide the boat, there is no particular danger. It is between a very large rock in the river and the shore. As we were nearing this place we met an enormous cargo boat which was bound up stream, being towed by a large bamboo rope pulled by forty men (the way all boats have to go up river). Their rope broke, and despite their best efforts, they drifted rapidly to the middle of the river and on toward the rapids. The men were screaming for help. My own interest and attention was divided in watching them and our own boat, wondering if we should be able to pass into the narrow channel that meant safety. We got safely through just as the large boat went to wreck on the ragged rocks on the other shore, striking stern first. I think no one lost his life. As it hung for some time on the rocks, they were perhaps able to get ashore, but we passed so rapidly out of sight down river that it was impossible to tell.

Three Tibetan Soldiers. The pipes and teacups are Chinese.

At one place we saw two men fall into the river, dragged by the rope of a boat in which they had become entangled. One managed to get ashore on an oar thrown to him for a float. The other was still screaming and floundering in the water as we shot out of hearing down river. Many lose their lives annually on this river and it is estimated that fully ten per cent of all cargo going up the river is lost. The loss of life and boats is so frequent that it seems of no consequence to any one except those immediately concerned.

I arrived safely in I Chang after about fourteen days on the river. Here interest in the journey ceases, for from here on there are steamers. This, however, is nearly 1,000 miles from Ta Chien Lu. We arrive there to-morrow on our way up the river. We are on the steamer now. In a few days as soon as we can secure a house boat we shall begin the long, tedious journey up river. The distance I covered in twenty-four days coming down will require some nine or ten weeks going up stream. We trust, however, that we shall have no serious mishap and arrive safely in Ta Chien Lu some time in February.

A Short Railway Journey in India

By Adelaide G. Frost

Two of our friends at the Mahoba railway station, Mr. and Mrs. Higgs, asked me to take a trip with them to Banda, thirty-three miles from Mahoba. The large traveler's bungalow there seemed quite like a home when we reached that station, for Mrs. Higgs had sent on her household servants and luncheon or "tiffin" was ready when we arrived. Mr. Higgs is called the "Plateer Sahib" as he is a "Plate layer" or Permanent Way inspector, his work is to see that the road is in perfect repair over a certain section. In the rainy season he must take especial care and inspect or oversee the inspection with great fidelity and accuracy. Heavy and sudden rains make washouts and the ballasting of the road must also be carefully attended to. Through July, August and September, night patrolmen go over every foot of the track lest the great iron road of civilization fail in any spot. Each two men have a patrol of four miles

The travelers' bungalows are such a convenience in India, we were soon quite at home in the large, airy rooms, though if screens did not partition the dining room one might feel desolate in its great expanse not elaborately furnished, its dimensions being 44x21 feet.

We had just finished our tiffin when an old native man arrived with some boxes tied up in a dirty cloth not at all inviting-looking; he untied this same dingy rag and began to spread out his wares on its surface and soon the topez and amethyst crystal, beautifully cut and polished, shone there in glittering little heaps, then exquisite paper knives of agate and paper weights of a polished conglomerate stone, containing a great deal of jasper and lovely cut and polished pieces of moss agate, grass agate, gold stone and chalcedony. Most wonderful of all are the crystals with drops of water in them. We saw a most beautiful great agate that must have been five inches in diameter, with so much water in its heart that we could hear its sound when the stone was shaken. The price of this sounds very big at one hundred rupees, but something less as $33. We did not purchase it, however, One would scarcely think so much beauty could be displayed from such dirty rags and common wooden boxes. We endured considerable temptation, and then came what was to me a real treat. Just at evening Mr. Higgs took us out for a ride on his trolley car, something like a handcar with a comfortable long seat on which we three sat easily. It was so exhilarating and I was astonished at the agility of the trolley men. When we came to an upgrade or where speed was required the men jumped off and pushed, running along rapidly on the rails! It was very wonderful to me that they never made a misstep on that narrow surface, for the soles of their feet. We glided over the rails in the cool, damp evening air, past the picturesque, abrupt hills like mountain spurs which are characteristic of this part of India. Huge pyramids of green and brown and gray some seemed, and here the stones were crowned with turrets and bastions of an ancient fort, recalling India's feudal days, and there with crumbling old temples with here and there a wayside shrine, with a freshly painted idol within, telling us of the antiquity and the present day belief in gods of stone. Now we come to fields of cotton, broom corn, rice and grain, just springing up so vividly green in this soft light of evening. The rains have been very much better here than about Mahoba. We are "wearying" for the rain there.

Here we are at the great railway bridge which spans the Ken river not far from Banda. This immense bridge has 12 spans of 100 feet each, and one of 250 feet. The water goes down to 40 feet in its deepest place in the hot, dry season, and comes up to 80 feet in the rains. The river is not high now, and the great irregular rocky bottom was disclosed in many places, these great swirls of rocks looked to me like a huge petrified whirlpool, and Mr. Higgs told me that once when trolleying across the bridge he saw the dead body of a little native child stretched on those cruel rocks where the current had tossed it. One shuddered again thinking of the crocodiles in these waters! Did any one care when the little body was thrown there, did any one miss the baby? It was probably a little girl and some one felt that death was better than life for her, and she was not wanted! Across the bridge we looked away to the sunset, some gleams and bands of crimson rifting the gray clouds, then rose, then ashes of roses. Still we sped on until one of the trolley men said: "Your gun, Sahib, hiran!" And there they were, five beautiful deer bounding along an elevation not far away. In a moment the trolley had stopped and Mr. Higgs was creeping up the embankment, one shot and a beautiful little animal, looking so clean and perfect, was placed at the back of the trolley. I had never seen a deer bound as I saw what must have been a tame deer near a village, bounding along by the trolley. Its graceful little body would spring far into the air, the dainty little feet actually did seem to spurn the ground.

As we came back across the river we saw a ferry boat crossing; there is no bridge for pedestrians and vehicles here, and when the rains have been heavy the river is very much wider. There are both low and high water landings for the boats. From this Ken river come the beautiful stones which tempted us earlier in the day.

We passed numbers of villages and as always a thought went out to those whose lives are so poor in many things we count good and whose few wants seem so scantily met, one cloth a year, one full(?) meal a day, for bread, a stone, no comfort in life's tragedies, no shelter in the storms of temptation, no school, no books and these but a few out of the thousands in India's many similar villages.

When we returned to the bungalow one of Mr. Higgs' contractors was there with a huge tray of India sweetmeats, and another of puris and vegetables cooked in a most tasty way and brought to us in dishes fashioned from leaves, in a beautifully primitive manner, pickles, too, made from mangoes, seeds of the bread fruit and other curious fruits and seeds.

IN MATCHTOWN

Fortunately no Faith Was Required, For She Had None.

"I had no faith whatever, but on the advice of a hale, hearty old gentleman who spoke from experience, I began to use Grape-Nuts about two years ago," writes an Ohio woman living in Barberton, who says she is 40, is known to be fair, and admits that she is growing plump on the new diet.

"I shall not try to tell you how I suffered for years from a deranged stomach that rejected almost all sorts of food, and assimilated what little was forced upon it only at the cost of great distress and pain. I was treated by many different doctors and they gave me many different medicines, and I even spent seven years in exile from my home, thinking change of scene might do me good. You may judge of the gravity of my condition when I tell you I was sometimes compelled to use morphine for weeks at a time.

"For two years I have eaten Grape-Nuts food at least twice a day and I can now say that I have perfect health. I have taken no medicine in that time—Grape-Nuts has done it all. I can eat absolutely anything I wish, without stomach distress. I am a business woman and can walk my two or three miles a day and feel better for doing so. I have to use brains in my work, and it is remarkable how quick, alert and tireless my mental powers have become." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Union of Immersionists

By Rosetta B. Hastings

I was glad to see the quotations from the "Watchman" in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of December 21, regarding the union of various bodies of immersionists.

It has for years been a theory of mine that the longest step that could be taken in the direction of Christian union would be the union of all immersionists.

The commands of God that are needful to salvation are so plain that they seldom cause division. Churches usually divide over theories about non-essentials. When Christians learn that they can be one in faith, while diverse in opinion, it will be easier for them to unite.

The one practical matter which is the biggest stumbling block in the way of union is the form of baptism Immersionists claim that it need not be in the way, because all acknowledge that immersion is valid. But I have heard preachers deny that Christ or his apostles ever taught or practiced immersion. And thousands of pious Christians look upon it with horror, and think it rank sacrilege for one who has been baptized (by sprinkling) to be baptized again (by immersion).

Those who practice immersion so nearly agree on other essential points that they ought to decide to hold their minor differences as matters of private opinion, and unite in faith and obedience to the Lord's commands.

There are, in round numbers, 6,000,000 immersionist and 10,000,000 pedobaptist Protestants in the United States.

In parts of the west, where the Baptists and Disciples are numerous, the sentiment in favor of immersion is so strong that those uniting with other churches insist on being immersed. The daughter of a Methodist preacher told me that so many asked for immersion that her father had not sprinkled any one for years.

If immersionists were all united, we would have a church in every community at least three-fifths as strong as the aggregate of all the other churches. In most cases the proportion would be even larger, for there would seldom be more than half a dozen other churches in any one community, except in large cities. And the number of ministers and amount of money set free by union could be utilized in planting a new church in every needy place.

With the mighty influence of such a united church, would not the belief in the validity of immersion soon permeate the younger part of religious society, as it has already done in the past? Before we were aware of it, nearly the whole membership of all the churches would consist of immersed believers, and the middle wall of partition would crumble away.

In view of such a responsibility, let us put away all prejudice and self-will, and work and pray earnestly that the prayer of our Lord may be answered.

The Nanking Girls' School

By Ethel Brown Garrett

We had the pleasure of attending the first graduating exercises of our girls' boarding school in Nanking, This is the "Carrie Loos Memorial School" so dear to the hearts of many in the homeland, and which has been most ably superintended since its inauguration, in 1896, by Miss Emma Lyon, formerly of Washington, Pennsylvania.

The school has grown from six pupils to forty, and this last year there were two bright girls to finish the course and receive their diplomas. Their essays were most creditable. One of the girls discussed the benefits of girls' schools in China, voicing in strong terms the need of China's women. The other subject was "perseverance," the need of which has certainly been demonstrated in the lives of these girls, as they have overcome one obstacle after another in obtaining their education.

The entire program was in the hands of the girls, and was a valuable object lesson to the large audience that listened. There was vocal and instrumental music, a bright note of welcome from one of the little girls, some English songs from the older pupils, a drill by the whole school most skillfully executed, an Engish poem by the youngest pupil—eight years of age, the daughter of one of our most influential families in Nanking, and last of all a class song prepared and sung by the oldest girls—a happy surprise in honor of their loved teacher, Miss Lyon. Mr. Hsia, the father of one of the graduates, spoke feelingly of his appreciation of the work that is being done in such schools as this.

"It certainly pays to educate Chinese girls," said an onlooker at the close of the program. God grant that this sentiment may grow until it may become the voice of all who have opposed the emancipation of women in heathen lands!

One rarely meets a more beautiful Christian than Chen Hsiao Ewing, whose sad story is that of so many Chinese girls. She came into the school soon after its opening, ten years ago. Her cruel stepfather had previously engaged her to a boy of whom she knew nothing, calmly condemning her to a life of misery for the paltry sum of thirty dollars. As she was yet but a child he was persuaded by one of our missionaries to put her in school for a few years. She proved a very apt pupil and was soon loved by all. During her second year in school she was baptized, and as the better way opened before her she decided that she could not and would not marry this man to whom she was engaged. He had shown himself a man of no character whatever. His father, it was said, had killed two wives. But what was to be done? The girl herself was helpless and her parents had no means by which to rescue her. Ah, this terrible curse of China! How many lives are ruined thus, and women driven to suicide! We rarely see a happy home, and what wonder! However, in this case the old father, seeing his opportunity to enrich himself, offered to release the girl on the payment of a large sum of money. As there was no other way he was finally prevailed upon to accept one hundred and fifty dollars. This Miss Lyon paid, the girl agreeing to work and return the money. She will now teach in the school for two dollars and fifty cents a month, half of which amount will go to discharge her debt. But she is perfectly happy now and has no fear for the future. Her presence in the school will be the greatest blessing to the girls, all of whom love her.

Only those who have seen the fruits of these Christian schools, can rightly appreciate their value. Miss Lyon by her untiring devotion and consecration has won a large place in the hearts of these girls. Her influence will live through long years to come in the lives and homes of many made happier and brighter through her efforts.

OVER SEA HABIT

Difference on this Side the Water.

The persistent effect upon the heart of caffeine in coffee cannot but result in the gravest conditions, in time.

Each attack of the drug (and that means each cup of coffee) weakens the organ a little more, and the end is almost a matter of mathematical demonstration. A lady writes from a Western state:

"I am of German descent and it was natural that I should learn at a very early age to drink coffee. Until I was 23 years old I drank scarcely anything else at my meals.

"A few years ago I began to be affected by a steadily increasing nervousness, which eventually developed into a distressing heart trouble that made me very weak and misrable. Then, some three years ago was added asthma in its worst form. My sufferings from these things can be better imagined than described.

"During all this time my husband realized more fully than I did that coffee was injurious to me, and made every effort to make me stop.

"Finally it was decided a few months ago, to quit the use of coffee absolutely, and to adopt Postum Food Coffee as our hot table drink. I had but little idea that it would help me, but consented to try it to please my husband. I prepared it very carefully, exactly according to directions, and was delighted with its delicious flavor and refreshing qualities.

"Just so soon as the poison from the coffee had time to get out of my system the nutritive properties of the Postum began to build me up, and I am now fully recovered from all my nervousness, heart trouble and asthma. I gladly acknowledge that now, for the first time in years, I enjoy perfect health, and that I owe it all to Postum." Name given by Postum Co. Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs.

Postum Food Coffee contains no drugs of any description whatsoever.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Somebody writes me saying: "I would like to learn the number of Christian churches in your city, and the location of each, if possible. I see, in an official guide I have, but one given, and that is your own on Vermont avenue. Am told there are two or three. And since the Christian Church, or Church of Christ, is divided into two factions, I would like to know if both are represented, and if so, the location of each. In order to make myself more fully understood I will attempt to note some of the differences between the two factions as follows: One calls itself 'the Christian Church.' It has both vocal and instrumental music in worship, has a Y. P. S. C. E., Woman's Mission Board in the states, has a state board, and state evangelist who oversees the affairs of the state, for which he is chosen, and most local congregations have a pastor or preacher who looks after local affairs. The other faction calls itself 'the Church of Christ,' has no societies as mentioned in connection with the Christian Church, has no missionary board, no pastor to preach to them reguarly, but is directed by the elders directly. They do their missionary work directly, without a board of any kind, and use vocal music only in their worship."

I am always glad to give information to brethren inquiring about conditions at the Capital, and of course wrote this good man concerning our status as churches here. He would have a cordial welcome in any of our congregations. We know no factions in the body of Christ. We do not permit newspapers to divide us. These two bodies, "the Christian Church," and "the Church of Christ," as separate schools we do not find in our Zion, nor should they be thus known in the region from which our brother writes, nor in any place among a people claiming to follow New Testament order. There seems to be no warrant whatever for this condition. Is it possible that the declaration of Thomas Campbell, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; and where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent," has been changed to read, "Where the Scriptures speak, we are silent; and where the Scriptures are silent, we speak"? There is no command so clear as the command to go making disciples, to push the work of missions in all the world. Here the Scriptures speak and we would speak. There is no command as to the express method of doing this business. Here the Scriptures are silent and we might be satisfied with their silence to remain silent. There is no duty more plainly enjoined than the obligation to praise God. Here the Scriptures speak in no uncertain tones and we should speak. There is no law as to the express method of sounding forth our praise, and we might be content here to be silent as the Scriptures are silent.

It must be confessed there is some confusion about the name. Some of our religious teachers use a big D and some a little one. Some say, "Disciples of Christ," as Alexander Campbell preferred, and some, "those disciples of Christ who plead for the Restoration of the Christianity of the New Testament," or "those disciples who would be Christians only," and who, writing "Disciples," use a small d, but cheerfully use a large R in writing "Restoration." Now, all this to some may appear a little bewildering, but let it be remembered that when a man writes, as I am now writing, he is but one man, and does not know it all, and may not be held either as an infallible oracle or as the mouthpiece of a million; and let the Word of God be the court of appeal in every case. It is amazing how we allow ourselves to be controlled by trifles. In one of our papers recently I observed an article headed, "A Trip to Washington." The writer seemed to be a most amiable man and was evidently traveling in search of information and visiting his brethren with a sincere desire to observe with them the ordinances of the Lord's house.

"As is our invariable custom," he says, "when the Lord's day came we sought the Lord's house, the first Lord's day, on Vermont avenue. Here we were just a little puzzled. We listened to a very acceptable discourse on the subject of 'Asking and Receiving.' The speaker urged the necessity, the imperative necessity, of 'praying always,' of constant communion and touch with the dear Father, which we heartily approved. After the discourse, we supposed the elders and deacons would take charge of the Lord's table. In this we were disappointed. The minister took charge of the table, while six brethren, we suppose deacons, came forward and took their seats. The minister returned thanks for the loaf, and also the wine, so that during the service his was the only voice heard in prayer or in thanksgiving—five times in all, and we wondered if, amongst all these apparently intelligent brethren, none could be called upon to at least return thanks for the emblems. And we were perplexed to know how there could be any development of the exercise of prayer, if the minister offered all the prayers himself. We do not know whether or not there are any elders in the Vermont Avenue Church—none were in sight. Another thing in the worship that caused us a measure of perplexity was that the 'individual communion cups' were used. I thought of the account given by the evangelists; it came to my mind readily, and I reasoned out the problem thus, that when the evangelists report the Master as saying, 'In like manner also he took the cup,' that our translators had erred, and that it should read, 'In like manner he also took a small tray containing a number of small cups, and said, Each one of you take one of these little cups.' It is safe to lay down the proposition that in every reference to the institution by the Master, and by the apostles, the expression is 'the cup' in the singular number. We once knew a sister who, when the cup was passed to her, would always use her kerchief to wipe the cup before partaking, and we have wondered if she would do so if the Master were in the same pew, for so far as we know and believe, he wore a full beard, as also the rest of the group, except perhaps John and Jude, who were younger."

Now I could have shown our brother fifteen of these same elders had I known of his desire; and as to the cups, that also is easily adjusted. He has no voice of Scripture requiring these officials to come before the congregation, or to return thanks for the emblems. One alone conducted the service in the beginning, and one is sufficient at the time in the present day; and no custom is more disorderly than that of calling upon different persons in different places to offer thanks at the Lord's table. It is good Scripture, "Do all things decently and in order," and where the Scriptures speak let us speak. Then our brother has no warrant for the position that but one cup was used by the Master. There were at least four employed in the paschal feast. If in his Kentucky church he uses two or six let him read: "In like manner also he took six cups," etc. "The cup" is as clearly divided when we use six as six hundred. Certain I am that our kind critic uses more than one cup for his family and his guests when he gathers them about his hospitable table in the old Kentucky home. Even little Mary will have her "individual cup."

Our brother attends the Ninth Street Church and there he enjoys "the cup." It is refreshing to know he found something to approve in our Washington ways. But he declares even this blessed congregation of Christians has the wrong name. No Scripture for "Christian Church." When he enquired for "Church of Christ" no one could tell, he says. That is curious, for "Church of Christ—Scientist" is to be found. It is "Christian Church" he objects to and asserts there is as much Bible authority for "Methodists." Let him give chapter and verse for "Church of Christ."

Now this excellent brother from the "Blue Grass" would have felt much better had he introduced himself and allowed us the privilege of showing him how we love our brethren. Petty differences like these should not divide us, nor in any way detract from the enjoyment of the worship of God's house. It is not likely on all matters of opinion and about all things indifferent we shall agree. He does not find it so in his home church. It is not for one moment an essential thing. On the great matters of faith we may be one; in the great essentials of the Gospel and its propagation. March is coming; March 4 will soon be here. March and its offering are of more concern to the Master than all our little quibbles about mint, anise, and cummin. March calls for weightier things than these trifling condiments that flavor the soup—judgment and mercy and faithfulness. March rebukes forever our legality in little things; our lawlessness in great things; straining at gnats and swallowing camels. March calls in trumpet tones attention to our sins of omission. March says to us: Get together. Pull as one man for your foreign missionary offering. When it comes to this be anything but omissionary. Honor the Lord with your substance. Give as Christian men to their Christ. Let every church pleading for the original order as given by the Master and his apostles have a part. Be you enlarged Stand together for the faith of the Gospel. Abandon the littles; glorify the Lord.

—The Religious Education Association meets in executive session at Cleveland, Ohio, February 13-15. Many important subjects are on the program for discussion. It was thought wise for several reasons to hold a conference rather than a convention this year.

—C. E. Dunkleberger writes that the church at Flat River, Mo., has just enjoyed a visit from Horace Siberell. He spent four days at Flat River and four at Elvins, preaching for Brother Dunkleberger on the Lord's day and organizing teachers' training classes at both places.

—The churches at Troy, N. Y., have been repairing their buildings. Third Avenue will begin an evangelistic campaign this month under the leadership of D. C. Tremaine. The Hudson Valley pastors brought good reports of their work to the recent rally held by S. J Corey and A. E. Corey in the interest of foreign missions.

—A union meeting is being held at North Tonawanda, N. Y., five of the English-speaking churches taking part. The buildings are used in rotation, each pastor preaching in another church than his own. We shall expect a report from one of the pastors of our churches there.

—Evangelist J. Stuart Miller has just been requested to find Carrie E. Pearson who was married to Major A. V. Leiben in the senate chamber by Lieutenant-Governor Harris at Lincoln, Neb., in 1897. Notification should be sent to her mother, Mrs. W. H. Pearson, Box 82, Hendley, Neb.

—The congregation of the First Church, Omaha, has recently been offered a handsome price for its property. There are additions to the membership almost every Lord's day. The Men's Century Club, an organization of recent date, is attracting the attention of the business men of the city.

—The Foreign Christian Missionary Society has received $500 from the estate of the late Sarah Ewing through the board of officers of the Christian church, Bowmanville, Ont. This is to be a permanent fund, the interest of which is to be used for scholarships in Drake College, Nankin, China.

—Brother Eggert, who has done so much for the church at Grand Rapids, Wis., reports that this young congregation, which was organized by Brethren DeVoe and Shields last May with forty-four charter members, is doing splendid work under the leadership of C. W. Dean, formerly of Colfax, Ill.

—We have an interesting communication from the Christian ministers' alliance of Kansas City and vicinity which we must reserve for next week. We are also in receipt of a communication from Oregon touching a state federation movement there to which we hope to give some attention also in our next issue.

—Among the visitors to The Christian-Evangelist office last week was H. Elmer Wren, of Greenville, Texas. Brother Wren is superintendent of the Bible school of J. W. Holsapple's church and has the fine record of having been in attendance every Lord's day for seven years. He is spending some time in St. Louis on business.

"I have just finished the Editor's book on 'The Holy Spirit.' I feel that the brotherhood is indebted to him for contributing this work that comes as an answer to a long-felt want. I shall read it again. It expains away many of the difficulties which confront Christians." B. V. Black.

—L. N. D. Wells has closed the fourth year of his pastorate in Wilkinsburg, Pa. During his incumbency the church has grown from 94 to 428 members, the mortgage has been decreased by $4,000, and Brother Wells enters upon his fifth year's work with $400 increase in salary, and every department of the church in first-class working order. Bro. E. E. Rushton reports that there were 108 accessions during 1905.

—Jasper Bogue, president of the Young People's Society at Grand Junction, Col., writes us about the successful work of his society, which was doubled in numbers during the last year and has done its part handsomely in the raising of money. A meeting has just begun, Frederick Grimes, the pastor, doing the preaching. It is expected that the church will be cleared of debt this year and the outlook is very bright.

—L. T. Faulders has resigned at Arcola, Ill., where he has been over five years, during which time there have been 391 additions to the church, with a net gain of 306, giving a membership of 459 at present. During this period there has also been built a $16,000 church free from debt, and a lot purchased for a parsonage. It is one of our best churches in Christian work. Brother Faulders will take charge of the church at Wellington, Kan.

—Harold Bell Wright sends us a very cordial word about the course of lectures just given at Lebanon, Mo., by Prof. C. M. Sharpe, of the Missouri Bible College. The house was filled every night despite the unfavorable weather, and the entire community shows an awakening interest in the Word of God and in the church. Brother Wright believes that this course of Old Testament studies will prove of great value to any church in the state.

—W. H. Bagby had been asked to remain indefinitely at Cleburne, Texas, but his yearning to return to the mountains led him to accept a unanimous call to the church at Missoula, Montana, where is the seat of the state university, and which is a live, up-to-date, and aggressive congregation. The field at Cleburne, where a strong man will now be needed is a difficult but promising one. The greatest handicap is the location of the church building.

—Bro. H. A. Devoe, of Digby, Nova Scotia, was in the city last week in the interest of the work he represents in that thriving town. He is making an heroic effort to remove an indebtedness upon the church, which he has built at great personal sacrifice. He is known to the Editor of this paper as a most faithful and worthy Christian and minister of the Word, and we bespeak the sympathy and co-operation of the brethren wherever he may go.

—J. L. Haddock, who will be one of the party to accompany B. B. Tyler on his Oriental trip, writes that he will be gone seventy days, and asks those who desire him to conduct meetings to please be patient. He will come to them just as soon as he can, and hopes to be the better prepared for a great work by this visit to the Holy Land. Brother Haddock will doubtless prepare a lecture on his experiences. All communications should be addressed to him at Weil, La.

—A church has been organized at Litchfield, Neb., as a result of a meeting held by O. A. Adams, of Ansley. They begin with 129 members, a Sunday-school of 100 members, a good ladies' aid and Y. P. S. C. E.; $800 have been pledged toward a church building. This just shows what can be done by earnest effort. Brother Adams went to the field with the desire to preach the simple Gospel, and without any stipulation as to the financial returns.

—Harry G. Hill is kept busy addressing special meetings for men. During his meeting at Duquoin, Ill., he spoke twice to men only. The second meeting doubled the first in attendance, and filled the opera house, standing room being at a premium. Brother Hill seems to be specializing in this kind of work and will address men's meetings during this month at the Y. M. C. A. at Kokomo, Ind., Springfield, O., and Lincoln, Neb. He is now in a week's lectureship at Deland, Ill., giving a popular lecture each evening.

—E. B. Barnes has just begun an evangelistic meeting with George B. Evans, at Big Run, Pa. The church there has an electric motto, "Each one win one," over the pulpit platform for a slogan during the campaign. The church has entered the Centennial crusade by purchasing a parsonage. The property is modern in every respect and is situated not far from the church building. Brother Evans, who has just received handsome tokens from his congregation of their appreciation, preached during January a series of Sunday evening sermons on missions. Such topics as "Missions and Medicine"; "Missions and Geography"; Missions and Martyrdom"; "Missions and Money," drew large audiences.

—Rev. John H. Harris and Mrs. Harris, for years honored misionaries in the Congo, have been prevailed upon to come to the United States in order to lay before our people the true conditions in the Congo Free State. They have the very best of credentials, and will, for some weeks, be available for meetings. Those desiring to correspond with them may do so through the Congo Reform Association, 710 Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., the secretary of which will be pleased to send literature explanatory of the issues involved and the humane cause they represent.

—The church at Atoka, I. T., desires to secure the services of a good man as pastor. The church is said to be in good condition, owns its property, is entirely out of debt, has a good Sunday-school, C. W. B. M. auxiliary and a membership of about seventy-five, including a number of influential citizens. It is believed to be a fine field for aggressive work, as new people are constantly coming in and Atoka is a rapidly growing railroad town. Those interested may address, with proper references, Paul B. Smith, Atoka, I. T.

—The teachers and friends of the Chinese Sunday-school of the First Christian Church, St. Louis, were entertained by the "boys" last week in celebration of the Chinese New Year and the departure of two scholars to Kentucky University, where they will prepare for more useful service among their fellow countrymen. It was a very delightful occasion and if you did not like Chinese fare you could have American, even down to ice-cream. Sister Brandt is bent on having a club-house for the "boys" where the work can be better carried on.

—F. N. Calvin has been requested by the Endeavor Society of the Compton Heights Church, St. Louis, to represent them this week at the Endeavor Institute being held in New York City. When the Sunday-school learned of the intention of the Endeavorers to send Brother Calvin, its members requested him to spend some time in an examination into the Sunday-school work of some of the prominent eastern churches. We commend the Compton Heights people for making it possible for their pastor to take this trip. The money and the time will be well spent.

—George H. Combs and his congregation at Independence Boulevard, Kansas City, may be proud of their year's work. Dr. W. J. Dawson, of London, England, who was recently in many of the cities of this country, has just said of the Independence Boulevard Christian Church: "It is the most beautiful church building I have ever seen, either in England or the United States." Besides the erection of this handsome edifice, the work prospers. The largest amount for general church purposes and missions that has been reported to us was raised by this church, while over 500 have been added to the membership which is now one of the largest in the country. The Sunday-school averages nearly 800, and the three Endeavor Societies have a membership of 325.

—The First Church at Portland, Ind., where C. H. Trout is pastor, has just purchased a lot, considered the best in the city, and will erect in the near future a handsome building. Every department of the work is growing and the congregation is greatly encouraged.

—Russell F. Thrapp, of Jacksonville, Ill., was surprised on the occasion of his birthday recently by some of the prominent members of his church, his home being enriched with a handsome library table and other things. Guy B. Williamson is Brother Thrapp's assistant and the work prospers under their ministrations.

—President Josephus Hopwood, of Virginia Christian College, Lynchburg, Va., writes that they have enrolled over two hundred students this year. He says: "The enforcement of our ideas of total abstinence from the tobacco and strong drink habits, and from profanity and such habits as tend to destroy character, instead of hurting the institution has, I believe, increased the interest, elevated the standard, and will tend to improve the college life. We simply and positively refuse to enroll students who will not give up such practices. We have now six mission and church points in and on the suburbs of Lynchburg besides the one church that was in the town when the college was put here two years ago." Success to Virginia Christian College, with its high ideals!

—The men's club of J. E. Lynn's church at Warren, O., is a vigorous organization. Two hundred men were in attendance at the last banquet which was held just preceding the evangelistic meeting, hence the toasts considered were more upon the question of the type of revival needed to-day. Some of the topics were: "Revival of Effort to Reach the Unchurched"; Revival of Conscience in Public Affairs"; "Revival of Honesty in Business"; "Revival of Spiritual Fellowship with God." The mayor of the city and the pastors of several of the other churches responded to toasts. The theme for the first week's services in the meeting in which Miss Ida Mae Hanna, of Cincinnati, is helping the pastor, was "If Christ is Come to Warren."

—W. J. Cocke's resignation as state evangelist for Georgia takes place February 10, and he will do similar work for the Kentucky State Board to that which he has been doing in Georgia for two and a half years, beginning March 1. The policy of the work in Georgia has changed, and there will simply be a secretary to do the correspondence, and there will be no special evangelist. Brother Cocke has done well for Georgia. The work is to-day on a firm financial basis and a perfectly legal one, and it has been systematized. Before he went to Georgia the annual amount raised averaged from twelve hundred to fifteen hundred dollars. During the past two years there have been over seven hundred additions, a number of churches and Sunday-schools, organized several evangelists sustained, and over six thousand dollars raised for state work. We trust that the brethren in Georgia see their way to keeping up this good record. Most of our southern states need our sympathy and our active co-operation.

—The Sunday-school or Bible school departments in various states are planning for a simultaneous Sunday-school campaign during the month of April. The object of this campaign will be "new schools, new scholars, new methods, new departments, and conversions from the schools." The program suggested is: First Sunday, parents' day, sermon by pastor, followed by midweek prayer-meeting for the campaign; second Sunday, girls' rally day; third Sunday (Easter), decision day; fourth Sunday, boys' rally day; Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights, special meetings; fifth Sunday, general rally day for all forces of the new schools. This is a fine move and Brother J. H. Bryan, state superintendent of Iowa, who first suggested it, says that the plan is meeting with enthusiastic approval throughout the country. Let there be now a united effort on the part of all the Sunday-school forces throughout the country, with a view of vastly increasing the number of Sunday-school pupils and elevating the standard of teaching.

—Mrs. E. G. Thompson, of West Plains, Mo., who has just returned from Hot Springs, Ark., is enthusiastic over the opening for a great work for the primitive Gospel in that popular resort. She speaks enthusiastically of the work of Brother Kincaid and of his right-hand man, Dr. Connell, whom she describes as "the most consecrated, spiritual man I ever saw; one of God's noble men, who is sacrificing time, talents and means for the cause in that city." She says concerning the place: "It is the grandest mission field in the United States. It is said 100,000 people visit it annually, presumably 25,000 of these being young men." Concerning the work of the brethren there she says: "The lot of the new Christian church is in a central place, and about $500 worth of work has been done in the excavations for the lower story for reading room, Y. M. C. A. room, and one business department to rent. Shall we not, as a brotherhood, while doing mission work, devote some of our dimes and dollars and prayers to this rich, ripe harvest field?" This is the judgment of all who visit the place and we are glad to learn that our readers are responding to the call of Brother Kincaid for assistance in paying for this lot. See his diagram elsewhere.

—We have received from L. L. Taylor, senator from the third district, Iowa, a copy of the "Centerville Journal" containing a full-page account, with illustrations, of the growth and development of the Christian church at Centerville, Iowa. This church was organized in 1867 and its first few years were years of severe struggle. It was under F. M. Kircham, who was the first minister to devote all his time to it, that new life came to the church. General F. M. Drake's gift of $500 to the building that was being erected was the beginning of that remarkable benevolence which is associated with his name. The present pastorate of F. L. Moffett has lasted nine years, and he received a unanimous call for the tenth year. Brother Moffett gives great satisfaction and the length of his stay in this one pastorate is itself all the evidence that is needed of his ability and success. The present church building, dedicated in 1903, is a handsome one costing about forty thousand dollars. It is an interesting fact to note that there have been as many additions during the past three years as there were during the first six years of the present pastorate. Another interesting fact is that Mr. T. P. Shonts, who was chosen by President Roosevelt as chairman of the Panama Canal Commission, was baptized by Brother Moffett about two years ago and has kept his membership in the Centerville church because his business interests have not permitted him to be permanently located anywhere else.

—A sister writes us a strange story. She united with the Christian Church when she was fourteen years old, but she "came to have a deep longing in her heart to do something for the Savior besides getting up church suppers and socials." She found, however, that she was "lacking in something," she hardly knew what. She went to her pastor, and he told her she was "all right"; but she knew she was not. She attended a Methodist revival and heard a sermon on the text, "Have you received the Holy Ghost since you believed?" She was convinced that she had not, and she says, "The more I read Paul's letters to the churches the more I could see that that was the very thing I needed." She finally received, as she believed, the Holy Spirit, and experienced "a deep settled peace which came into my heart and still abides." The strange part of the story is that her name was removed from the church roll, as "one who became contaminated by the so-called holiness doctrine." But she says, "I love the church just the same, and am praying for it." Granted that this sister had a theory of spiritual influence which the majority of the church regarded as erroneous but which brought her "a deep settled peace," could not the church much better afford to exercise charity and forbearance toward her than to have pursued the course it did? Intolerance is an evil which, unfortunately, is not confined to the past.

About Missouri Bible School Work.

More than half the year is gone. The work lagged through the summer for the reason that the board was not able to secure a superintendent to succeed W. A. Moore, who laid down the charge at the Marshall convention and left the state. I was elected in September, but for two months could do nothing except what could be done by correspondence and the maturing of plans. I have been devoting all my time to the work since November 15. I find that there is a general desire to move the work forward. Everything gives hope that we shall be able to do this. I am trying to keep myself in touch with the most aggressive movements in the world of Sunday-school activity; and it is, and shall be, my constant effort to bring to our Missouri workers, the very best things that can be gathered from all accessible sources.

R. B. Havener, now a veteran in the work, continues with us in south and southwest Missouri, and in occasional trips to other territory where we have not yet been able to place men. No one could be more devoted or energetic than Havener. His address is Windsor.

Horact Sibercll began with the board January 1, his field being southeast Missouri, with headquarters at Cape Girardeau. He is very busily engaged in holding Institutes, organizing teacher-training work, and in attending to the many other matters that fall to such a man in such a field.

H. G. Bennett is doing special service under my direction, and is showing himself well fitted for this work. His address is here in my care. The board will seek to engage other men for the different section of the state as rapidly as suitable men ca be found, and the money to sustain them i furnished.

In order to come to our state convention with a good record, every school should be aroused to do its full duty in every way in the support of the work. Indifference must be broken up. Every laggard must be brought into step with the procession. Enthusiasm must be aroused. We must not fall into ruts nor depend upon routine. We must come up to our convention determined not to be satisfied to trundle along in any antiquated ways, nor to allow any mere tradition, however hallowed its origin or associations, to dominate our plans.

It is highly important that there be no slowness in the payment of pledges and apportionments by the schools. More than half the year is gone, and yet many schools have sent in nothing, of course they will do so, but they ought not to wait till the close of the year. It will be harder the longer it is postponed; and besides we have to get in money right along to pay our men. Therefore let every school send in at once every penny due. The money will be acknowledged and put to work at once.

How the Rally Succeeds.

The rally has been running seven weeks. We have received $619 cash and $300 in pledges. We have paid one $500 note and the interest, and have $100 cash on hand. Of this amount, the congregation of Hot Springs gave $100. Receipts for this last week $119; previously reported, $545.

A VISIT TO LITTLE ROCK.

On Lord's day, January 28, by invitation of J. N. Jessup and the official board of the church at Little Rock, I presented our cause to them. The result was $35 in cash and $90 in pledges, making a total of $125. This, too, at a time when they are building themselves. They are now in the midst of a building enterprise, in which they expect to invest $30,000. Such sympathy and helpfulness nerve our hands for great effort. Brother Jessup is truly a yoke-fellow of the kind which one seldom meets, always seeking to find a way to assist every good cause. The Little Rock congregation is composed of a great-hearted people, and they never disappoint their pastor, when asked to assist any worthy cause. We will gladly visit any congregation. Let us have a dozen invitations to visit churches in Missouri, Tennessee and Texas. Address all remittances to T. N. KINCAID.

Getting Nearer Together.

Dr. Ball's article, quoted in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, is bearing fruit, as appears from the following:

"I was so pleased with the statement of Dr. Ball, as a basis of union between Free Baptists and Disciples, which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, that I took the paper along to Two Mile Branch Church last Lord's day and read it to the congregation, with the request that all who were satisfied to unite on such a basis should rise to their feet. The old veteran Disciple, H. C. Clare, set the pace, and all agreed it was 'O. K.' God speed the day when such a union may be brought about!

A First Week in Denver.

Sunday morning at the South Broadway Church a fine audience was present to hear their pastor, B. B. Tyler, for the last time before his start for the Holy Land. He introduced me to the congregation, and told them to be as good to me until his return as they had been to him. Sister Tyler is no less beloved and popular than Brother Tyler in this excellent church and community. I think there were 12 additions during the day.

At night I attended the Central Christian Church to hear Bayard Craig on "The Judgment of Christ." The discourse was in the clear, enthusiastic and pleasing style of Brother Craig. He insisted on introducing me to the church and having me go after the services to his beautiful home for an after sermon lunch. There were a number of additions during the day, and this, as at South Broadway, is the report for almost every Sunday in the year. Brother and Sister Craig are spoken well of on all sides.

In the South Broadway Church Wednesday evening the members of this church and a number from the Central extended a farewell reception to Brother and Sister Tyler, and a welcome to the writer. The hearty fellowship of the members and their farewells to pastor and wife were of the finest spirit. The churches of Colorado have this spirit, I am told, of harmony and whole heartedness. The writer thinks that in large measure, as goes Denver, so goes Colorado in matters of both church and state. Is not this the characteristic of Brother Craig? Did not the founder of the work in Denver leave his impress? May we not say that the builder of both Central and South Broadway churches has accomplished a mighty work for our cause? I have not yet met the cool-headed pastor (Brother Pickett) of the Highlands church, whose church dedication is to be next Lord's day, but reports of him are high. I hope to meet all the ministers of our churches within the three months I shall be here. More anon.

A New Union Movement in Tennessee.

It makes the heart of every true "Disciple" rejoice to see any religious movement, original in growth, that has propelled itself to a position more or less harmonious with our own great principles. It emphasizes the fact that it must be the simple, natural and true New Testament position.

No doubt in every section of the country we could find some movement that has bidden adieu to denominationalism, ceasing to be satisfied in its iron grip, to begin its progress on the great foundation, the New Testament. Such movements seem to be as mediators to the Lord's erring flock.

It is with pleasure I give to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a few facts concerning such a movement begun in Hawkins and Granger counties, Tenn., about the fall of 1895. As I understand, new light entering the mind of a prominent Methodist preacher in the person of Geo. W. Jarvis, of Hawkins county, he began trying to benefit his denomination by some slight reform. This caused quite a stir among his superiors in office, which grew more serious and resulted in Mr. Jarvis' leaving the church. It would be well to mention that Mr. Jarvis was raised in Hawkins county, and in the beginning of his school work attended some two or three sessions of the school of Prof. Joseph Hopwood.

Looking about for a new field for his labors, Mr. Jarvis could not find any movement that exactly represented his views, and, standing loyal to his convictions, he began by organizing one; taking the New Testament alone as his foundation but holding fast to the tail end of his Methodism by retaining the name and adding for a distinguishing word "American" (American Methodists). He made his constitution very liberal by leaving the question of baptism and such points open, but tied down on the New Testament and the New Testament alone as the guide, the rule of faith, etc. He believed with others, that by standing on the "pinnacle of truth" he could not go far wrong. Having started thus, the progress of the American Methodists has been steady, gradually growing to their present position. There have been few revisions made in their progress, but such as have been made will be of interest to Disciples, considering that they started in greater sympathy with the Methodist brethren. First: Christian union has grown strong among them—followed by a revision of their name to "American Christian Church." This was followed by a general interest on the question of baptism; and a few weeks ago at a semi-annual meeting it was suggested

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and can not compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

that at their general convention they should eliminate the name "American," hence "Christian Church."

Their leader, no doubt because of lack of support, had to accept a better paying position, helping his brethren at chance moments, but now for something like six years they have made their own way until at present they number something like a hundred churches and possibly as many young preachers.

Now, what is our attitude toward them? They are in deep sympathy with us and recognize only one point of difference—"the one mode of baptism." Our literature would no doubt help them to the full truth on that score. Brother Jarvis is at present in Cleveland, Tenn. HUGH S. FOX.

Close Communion.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In your issue of January 18 is an article from Rev. W. B. Harrell on the above subject. He says it is really "close baptism," instead of close communion. Not if it is only a question of baptism, then those who practice what is called close communion would certainly be willing to commune with all Christians whom they acknowledge to be baptized.

The fact that they do not do this shows that they do not consider the question as being simply a question of valid baptism, and Christian character. There are hundreds of Christians who have been regularly baptized by the people who practice close communion, the validity of whose baptism they certainly would not deny. Now these persons have taken membership in various other churches. There can be no question as to their Christian character, or as to the validity of their baptism. Why, then, do not the Baptists commune with these people?

I submit that the fact that they do not do so proves that the question is not a question of close baptism, but purely and simply a question of close communion.

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

MAKE IT TRUE! : : : By Thomas Curtis Clark

The song may be simple you're called on to sing;
  The words may seem worthless and few;
Its accents may not for the world's hearing ring;
  But I pray you, my child, make it true!

The task may be simple God gives to your hands;
  Too meager a service, think you?
It may not be applauded throughout the broad lands;
  But I pray you, my child, make it true!

The life may be simple God asks you to live,
  Not such as you think is your due;
But take just that life God has thought best to give,
  And I pray you, my child, make it true!

Thomas Curtis Clark, who has entered the evangelistic field as soloist and leader of song, has been in religious work most of his life. He is the son of Thomas J. Clark, now pastor of the church at Bloomington, Ind., the home of the state university. Mr. Clark is a pianist and composer as well as a singer and has written a large number of poems, some of which have been published in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

January and the Home Work.

The brethren throughout the country will rejoice that steady progress is being made in the affairs of the American Christian Missionary Society. The receipts for January show a gain of $5,167.28 over the same month of 1905; $1,140 were received on the annuity plan and $1,566 by bequests. The receipts of the society for the present missionary year are $8,082.05 above those of the same period last year. The needs of the society, however, were never greater than at present. ### Study the Life of Christ in 1906.

The "Easy Chair" suggestion came to the writer one day after he had made the plea that every member of the church belong to the regular Sunday-school, or the Home Department for the study of the life of Christ during 1906. This confirmation of my own idea, however, has quickened and spurred me to an increased emphasis upon this study.

The need of just such a stress point for our own congregation was further confirmed when in turning to A. B. Bruce's "Apologetics" these statements were read: "You can not make Christians by the method of catechetical instruction intended to fill the mind with orthodox opinions;" "neither can you make Christians by the method of evangelism;" but you can, he would affirm, make Christians by having them "learn first with the man, and then advancing gradually to higher views of his person and work."

The Synoptics present the historical background just mentioned, and in spending the year with Christ in the Sunday-school in devoting one-half hour each prayer-meeting evening in an after service to the lesson study, in preaching frequently during the year on salient points or neglected parts of his life, and in illustrated lectures on the Christian art, the Holy Land, and the customs of the people of Palestine, to be given by outsiders, we hope to have our members see as never before the Man of Nazareth, and learning him to find "all within them" led into a closer walk with the Son of God.

A suggestion as to sermons has come from Prof. W. Sanday's "Outlines of the Life of Christ." It is the last heading of the Outline, entitled: "The Verdict of History" and is subdivided:

A. Christian History. (1) The Christ of the Gospels; (2) The Christ of the Apostles. (3) The Christ of the Undivided Church; (4) The Christ of Personal Experience.

B. The Person of Christ; Our Lord's Human Knowledge.

C. The Work of Christ: (1) The Place in the Cosmical Order of the Ethical Teaching of Christ; (2) The Significance of the Personal Example of Christ in regard to His Ethical Teaching; (3) The Work of Christ as Redemptive; (4) The Work of Christ as Revelation; (5) The Founding of the Church.

As to books besides this book which is contained in Hastings Bible Dictionary. Article Jesus Christ, two books that dare be named are Geo. Adam Smith's "Historical Geography" and Horace Bushnell's "Character of Jesus." C. M. WATSON.

Eureka's Progress.

Our celebration of Education day was postponed one week on account of bad weather. An appropriate program was given under the direction of the President of the Illinois Christian Educational Association, Mrs. Dr. Crawford, of this city. Pastor A. W. Taylor had preached a strong educational sermon and taken pledges and contributions. The membership of the local association was increased to 225. The financial condition of the college is better than ever before, and under the strenuous work of Field Secretary J. G. Waggoner, and the I. C. E. A., is improving all the time.

The Convention Date Again.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

If I am not out of order, I should like to call for a further consideration of the date for our national convention. Has the date been chosen when our forces shall assemble in annual convention at Buffalo? If so I will plead guilty to culpable ignorance and oversight, and say no more. If the date has not been announced, I feel that the earliest possible announcement would subserve the interest of all, for the obvious reason that in our northern states the autumn months are the most suitable for evangelistic services, and these services are often arranged for several months in advance. To preclude the possibility of conflicting arrangements the convention date should be announced before plans have been made for the annual evangelistic campaign. For the same reasons, I will also urge either August or September as a more suitable month than October.

The People are Ready.

Our people are ready for a new move. Their enthusiasm over passing the quarter of a million dollar line for foreign missions last year is without a parallel in our history. Words of cheer and congratulation have come from every source in this and other lands. Our churches are ready for a new task. Nerved and heartened by the past year's phenomenal liberality they are willing to adopt a new slogan, or $300,000 for foreign missions by September 30, 1906. It is less than a general average of thirty cents per member. Some have suggested $500,000, others a million dollars.

All ready! Sound out the new war cry from every pulpit. The world is over ripe for a great forward movement. All the crowning victories of the past, the majestic, providential movements of the present, and the tokens of future blessings and conquests combine to inspire us to plan as those who expect to see the world conquered for Christ.

Our nation is rich. Our churches are prosperous. Our work in all lands bears the unmistakable stamp of the divine approval. We are left without excuse. Anything short of $300,000 will not even approximate our imperative duty. All ready! Ready for agitation and education, ready for higher standards in every church, ready for a crusade that will insure another victory! Yes, ready for preparation, ready for execution, ready for a great offering March 4.

If you have not ordered March offering supplies, make your request known at once and the same will command prompt attention.

Broadway Church, Los Angeles.

"The world do move," and as it moves it seems, during the past decade, to contrive to joggle off Everybody and his wife for at least a few months' sojourn in southern California. As Los Angeles is the great gateway, Mr. and Mrs. Everybody wake some bright morning in the City of the Angels and proceed to investigate its claims of greatness, become tangled in its crooked streets and get bumped by its trolley cars. If they are Christians and have not done, as so many do, chucked their Christian "mantillas" up-garret while they come west "to have a good time," they will hunt up the "meetin' house" of their faith and join the throng of worshipers, offering their praise as one to "Him that hath loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood."

Personally I found for four years a very pleasant home at the Broadway church. When it was decided to transfer the old Temple street organization to the southwest section of the city, some of the members felt it would not be wise to abandon that point, so a new organization was formed, in 1896, with an enrollment of 120 names. The present church building was erected entirely at the expense of the pastor, Brother Coulter; it cost about $40,000, and is a thoroughly modern structure with a seating capacity of 1,200, with lecture rooms, class rooms, parlors, pastor's study, etc. The enrolled membership is now over 1,000. It now has four home missions, one Japanese mission in the city and one in Japan.

The Vernon mission was started by members of the church and was only a Sunday-school mission at first. However, in February, 1902, the late T. D. Garvin was located there as minister. upon the dedication of the $5,000 chapel, also built by Brother Coulter. F. M. Kirkham became its pastor upon the death of Brother Coulter in 1903. Its membership now is about 150.

The Japanese mission and school, which meets in one of the rooms at the church, has a large enrollment. Miss Harrison is employed as teacher. She has had seventeen years' experience in the foreign field. Eleven other teachers assist without compensation.

This church is supposed to be the first living link church among us, supporting a missionary in Tokio, Japan—Miss Alice Miller—then there are the Pico Heights, Sunset boulevard, and colored (negro) missions, all supported by this church. Two young Japanese from their school have lately entered the college at Lexington, Ky., to prepare for the ministry.

It is with the hope that I may be able to correct any unfavorable impression upon our brotherhood which may have been made by a recent statement in your paper in regard to the Broadway church, that I state these facts. Permit me to quote one older and wiser than I, a former member of the First Christian Church of Los Angeles, Bro. F. M. Kirkham, who, as editor and minister, needs no introduction to eastern readers. In the "Christian Standard" of April 1, 1905, he writes:

"The Broadway church is exceptionally wise in its management and liberal in promoting its work. . . . The largest Sunday-school attendance of any of our churches in this city is at the Broadway school. At least one-seventh of our entire membership in southern California are members of the Broadway church."

In regard to the Boyle Heights church he says: "Besides the local financial support the Southern California Home Mission Association, under whose auspices it was started, is paying $20 a month and B. F. Coulter the same amount monthly."

The assistant pastor, L. Swindle, has only one fault so far as I am aware; he will break the ten commandments by working seven days (and nights) in the week. He is wearing himself out for the cause he loves.

If there is a reason why this church should not have full fellowship with the brotherhood, let us have it. Personally I have been reared in the faith by a minister not unknown in the middle-west and I can but think we are straying from the old paths, when we make anything "except Christian character a test of fellowship."

If circumstances make it advisable for a congregation to "paddle its own canoe" in the missionary waters, does the Bible forbid its doing so?

The Week of Prayer in Monterey.

In a recent readjustment and enlargement of our evangelistic forces in our Mexican work, it seemed best for the writer, although on the field only six months, to take charge of the native church in Monterey, in addition to his other duties, with a view of developing some of the promising material among its membership as pastors and evangelists. The new pastor's little knowledge of the language challenged the sympathies of the congregation, and in his weakness, they found their strength. The growing interest was shown, among other things, by a demand that we celebrate the week of prayer, which we did with remarkable results.

Those of us who were familiar with the prevailing indifference to the devotional part of the services and to prayer-meetings among our churches in the United States, learned some lessons of great value.

The topics followed were those suggested by the evangelical alliance for a world-wide revival. Ours came in the midst of these services. The crowds constantly grew from the beginning, and were the largest we have ever seen at any religious service at the mission. A large number of children from the school were there every night, although the program consisted only in talking to God, and four of them were led by these prayer-talks to confess their faith in Christ and to be buried with him in baptism.

The meetings were model schools of prayer. The Holy Spirit was asked to call out the leader for each night, and before each meeting closed, some one had volunteered to conduct the following service. There was no talking, except the announcement of the topic by the leader, and the Gospel invitation, without any urging, by the pastor. There was generally some quiet singing, some Scripture reading, and the rest of the time was filled with prayer. There were no pauses, and there was no one individually called on to pray in the whole series of meetings. The Mexican Christian is not afraid of his God, and the one who will not pray in public is very much the exception. These meetings, which lasted from an hour to an hour and a half, could have been continued for three hours without the loss of time in taking part. There was no "series of sentence prayers" called for, but often one prayer followed another, making continued supplication, for an extended time.

The prayers were simple, definite, inclusive. They were for personal consecration, increased usefulness of the local church, a national awakening, blessings upon our mission board, and for a world wide revival that should speedily bring the kingdom of heaven to all parts of the earth.

With a large number of children present, there was no disturbance. The spirit of prayer was in the very atmosphere, and all present were compelled to breathe it. At one of the services, the acetylene gas went out, and almost the entire meeting was conducted by the light of a candle. And singularly enough, it proved to be one of the best services of all.

God has visited his people, as they gathered together and asked for his presence. A month ago, this little church of seventy members was greatly discouraged, because their pastor had been sent to a more needy field. Now they are rejoicing in the Lord's strength, that he has heard their petitions, that he has given them souls for their hire, that he has shown them that with Christ all things can be done.

One of the results of this revival, which we hope will continue until this church is as a great light set on a hill, in the midst of this wicked city, is the formation of a "League of Conversion" for personal work. The members of this league sign a pledge, which, translated, says, "Trusting in the Lord Jesus for strength, I promise him that I will work with some individual and pray for his conversion each week. And unless hindered by some reason which I can give to my Savior, I will be present at the weekly meeting of the League of Conversion, for prayer and conference."

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The state board meeting, on Jan. 11, at the Union Avenue Church, St. Louis, was full, except one member. The day was faithfully used in planning for the building up to greater usefulness of the C. W. B. M. work in our state. If our sister workers everywhere could know how this great responsibility, which they have laid upon us, weighs on us, they would remember us with frequency and fervor at the throne of Grace.

The Centennial offering, which must be completed by the close of 1909, was the burden of the afternoon. We accepted our apportionment of $15,000, subject to your approval at the next state convention. Second, we elected, from the board, one member, who shall be the "Centennial secretary" of our state, her office to continue until the fund is complete, or Dec. 31, 1909. The choice was unanimous, and Mrs. J. H. Garrison is the Centennial secretary. She has for her committee for managing and consultation, Mrs. H. A. Denton and Mrs. Bantz, president and corresponding secretary of the state. All correspondence that relates directly to the Centennial fund will go out under Mrs. Garrison's signature, and all communications in regard to it may be addressed to her, Care of Christian Publishing Company, 2712 Pine St., St. Louis, until further notice.

We have a letter from Mrs. W. F. Richardson, announcing a new auxiliary at Ivanhoe Church, Kansas City. Names of officers are not yet reported.

Mrs. Nell H. Glenn, manager of Springfield district, reports a new auxiliary at Ashgrove, in Greene county. Mrs. William Monday and Miss Maud Shaw are the president and secretary. The news is most welcome.

We now have 213 auxiliaries and circles, all, so far as we know, holding meetings and remitting money to both headquarters and to the state treasurer. I trust, my sisters, we shall not be satisfied with this number, but let each auxiliary have a lookout committee, whose duty it shall be to look out for some work near to it. Let some place that has no auxiliary, or where one is needing encouragement, be chosen and have the wisest and most optimistic members, visit it and help it, until a strong auxiliary, in full sympathy with all C. W. B. M. views, shall result.

Let auxiliaries see that their report for December is sent in at once.

El Paso, Tex., Letter.

Why should El Paso be writing a letter? What has she to say for herself? Much every way. She is the gateway to the land of the Montezumas. She is the land of perpetual sunshine, the home of the health seeker; she is the metropolis of the great southwest, with splendid public schools and a large public library. Eight railroads pierce her heart and lead into the richest ore fields on earth. She has three great daily newspapers. But what tidings does she bring that is worthy a place in our greatest religious journal?

Another year of happy activity has passed into history and at our recent annual meeting reports were read from all departments of work. It was a time of self-examination, not of self-glorification.

The pastor's report showed a gain of 113 additions, more than 33 1-3 per cent. Number of sermons preached, 138; whole number of religious meetings, 334. The financial secretary's report showed the consecration of the people in giving; nearly $5,900 received and disbursed through the various channels. Of this $2,000 were applied on current expenses; nearly $2,700 in debt and interest; the other $1,200 on Updike meeting, missions and local interests.

The ladies' aid society is a mighty factor in the material interests of the church; the C. W. B. M. in the spiritual life and work. The Sunday-school and two Endeavor Societies made good reports. The church has a business men's club that bids fair to solve many of its financial problems as well as encourage a social life and spirit.

We have a promising mission among our Mexican people under the leadership of J. M. Martinez. Services are conducted three times a week in the native language. The pastor's salary has been increased $300 a year.

In view of the fact that when we took hold of this work, two and a half years ago, we had but a modest chapel and were in part a charge of the A. M. C. S., and that to-day we have the handsomest church edifice in the city or southwest, and a bonded debt of only $6,800 with a collateral to the value of over $30,000, we say, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

We have enjoyed the fellowship of the wise men from the east and west during the holidays. President Jenkins, who spent a month here with his mother and sister, gave us an address on Education. Dean Van Kirk called on his way to and from the Texas Lectureship. Both gave us pleasure. May the Lord abundantly bless The Christian-Evangelist and may it speedily reach 100,000 homes.

E. M. Waits, pastor.

Los Angeles Letter.

Evangelist De Forest Austin and his singer, King, have pitched their tent at 37th and Main street, this city, and under the direction of our South California Evangelistic Board are planning to organize a church in that important section of our growing city. It is expected that E. H. Kellar will preach for the new church to be organized. When this meeting is closed it is expected that another work of similar character will be projected in the southwestern part of Los Angeles. We propose to keep up with the rapid growth in population in this marvelous city.

A new church house at Monrovia, a city of 2,000 inhabitants twenty miles east of Los Angeles, was dedicated January 21. C. C. Chapman, the prince of orange growers in southern California, who has developed money raising genius, will be master of ceremonies. E. H. Marsh is pushing the work in that growing city.

The church at San Bernardino, under the stirring ministry of H. E. Wilhite, has outgrown its building, which was less than two years old, and the first Lord's day in December entered an enlarged building. It had a special day, with C. C. Chapman at 11 A. M., F. M. Dowling at 3 P. M., and the writer at 7:30 P. M. The work at this important center is greatly prosperous.

Sumner T. Martin, pastoral supply at Pasadena while Pastor Dowling is recuperating his health, aided by J. Walter Wilson and his stereopticon, is planting a new church at South Pasadena, which is now almost a connecting link between Pasadena and Los Angeles. It is expected that a good church will be organized there in the near future.

El Monte has joined the procession of new churches, occupying its own new church house. W. S. Utter ministers there to a prosperous church in a growing community.

After a ten years' pastorate in Indianapolis, George Anderson is serving the church at Riverside. He now basks in eternal sunshine, with magnolias and orange trees in his horizon.

George Ringo, after a successful pastorate of four years at Riverside, is trying his skill on a new church at Ocean Park, a growing sea park city fifteen miles from Los Angeles. We expect to hear good reports from Ocean Park. A. C. Smither.

North Carolina.

I am in the midst of a meeting at Macclesfield, with one confession. A deep and abiding interest seems to be aroused, and I am hopeful of success. We are raising funds to build and I hope to have a house under way when I close the meeting. Our services are being held in an old dance hall. The man who owns the hall, and who until recently ran a saloon, hasn't missed a service. We had a great meeting for men only yesterday afternoon. The hall would not accommodate the attendance last evening. This place has a population of about 450, with three saloons, a billiard hall and a bowling alley. There is no church of any kind. Two other towns between Tarboro and Farmville, a distance of twenty-six miles, are without any church and each with several saloons and other iniquitous traps. This looks like a large offering for home missions in May. I could do so much more in this field of work if I had a singer. I wish some good brother with not too many poor relatives and enough of this world's goods would make a good singer possible here in the Old North state for the next eight or nine months. Let us hear from you, brother.

James T. Moore has been called to the work at Farmville, thirteen miles below here. He will preach there twice a month, and following the meeting at this place once a month. Brother Moore is attending the Atlantic Christian College at Wilson, N. C., having had four years in other colleges. He is a native of the state and is an earnest preacher. He will do a good work in this field. The state board will assist in his support at Macclesfield.

I had the pleasure of preaching for my good friend, J. Boyd Jones, at Wilson, on the first Sunday of the new year. Two large and appreciative audiences greeted me. Brother Jones is doing a great work at Wilson and indeed for the North state. He is our corresponding secretary and understands the people of this section and their needs, being himself a native of the state. Wilson is destined to become the Jerusalem of North Carolina. We have a splendidly equipped college there, with Dr. J. J. Harper, one of God's noble men, at its head, and being assisted by an unusually efficient corps of teachers. This college means much to our cause in this state. It is under the auspices of the state convention. The effort is being made to educate the young men of North Carolina who aspire to the ministry of the Word so that they can retain them in the state. In other words they have tired of furnishing preachers to other states. We give all such young men free tuition. Professor Smith, the Bible teacher, is able and justly popular with our brethren and in the school.

W. G. WALKER,
State Evangelist.

SOME BRIEF FIGURES

The Work of the Year

FROM ANNUAL REPORTS

RED OAK, IA.

During George H. Nichol's pastorate last year we had 45 additions, 28 being by baptism. The church is in good working order.—A. McConnell.

MISHAWAKA, IND.

The church treasury closed the year with money ahead. We gained in all departments.—Edward O. Tilburn.

EUREKA, ILL.

We raised $3,000 for missions and benevolences, an average of nearly $5 per resident member. Five gifts totaled $300. Only a few people gave nothing. The average for the year before was about $4 per member. Is not this the best record in the brotherhood?—A. W. Taylor.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Independence Boulevard: The additions were 501, the present membership, 1,501. This church perhaps has the record in the brotherhood for the amount of money raised during the year. The total receipts for the general fund were $13,124. This included a $2,000 special offering to state mission work, a $1,000 offering to the National Benevolent Association, and $1,729 for other special purposes. In addition to these collections were $2,228 for missions, $2,251 collected by the Sunday-school; and other sums from different departments raised the total amount of moneys collected to $20,208, the total for missions and benevolences being $8,497. The new church was dedicated at the cost of $124,300. George H. Combs is the pastor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Central Church: Additions by letter and statement, 68; by confession and baptism, 20; total, 88; total losses, 43; net gain, 45. Money raised in all departments, $3,643, of which $619, or about 17 per cent, were for missions. We closed the year with all bills paid and money in all treasuries. During the year the old property was sold, and in a few weeks we will begin the erection of a handsome new home on a good location.—Walter Scott Priest.

NORTH TOPEKA, KAN.

We had a net increase of 31. We paid all obligations except $37.50, and raised for missions and benevolences $173.—F. H. Bentley, pastor.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

Union Avenue, J. M. Philputt, pastor: There were 73 additions by baptism and 68 otherwise; total, 141, giving a net increase of 40, and a present membership of 1,007. The total receipts of the church for current expenses were $8,409. The Sunday-school raised $1,175, the C. W. B. M. $682, the ladies' aid $2,178, the Christian Endeavor $65, the business men's association $56, giving a total receipt of more than $14,500 for the year, independent of the amount paid and pledged for the building fund, which, up to December 31, had been $81,510. It has been a most helpful year.

Fourth Church: There was healthy growth in all departments. We raised nearly $4,000 for all purposes, and nearly $1,000 for missions. There were 75 additions to the local church, and a congregation was organized at Alton, Ill., where there were 65 additions. It was one of our best years.—E. T. McFarland.

WORCESTER, MASS.

The net gain for the year was 23, the number of additions by baptism being 13 and by letter 10; present membership is 147, 117 being resident. The amount raised by the church and its auxiliaries was $2,768, $68 being for missions. Roland A. Nichols is the pastor.

ST. THOMAS, ONT.

The church has taken a very active part in the evangelistic life of the city, though there has been a net gain of but 2 in the membership, which now is 408. The total receipts were $2,024, $182 being for missions. In addition to this, the departments and the work at Yarmouth Heights raised $894 for all purposes. The annual meeting decided in favor of a new church, toward which $3,000 have already been guaranteed. Bro. James Egbert seems to be doing an excellent work in a field that is by no means easy.

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C.

We rejoiced over the return of the first mortgage from the Church Extension Board. On August 1, this year, we expect to pay off the last $700, for we have $535 in pledges and over $36 in hand. The treasurer's report at the end of the year showed $52 in the general fund.—J. A. Hopkins.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

To the First Christian Church there were added 132 members, the largest number during the seven years of J. T. Boone's ministry, except the year 1899, when the additions were considerably over 200. The finances of the church are in better condition than ever before in the history of the church, and all the arms of the church service are being successfully handled. The church starts off its new year with every possible promise of the best year in its history.

BUTLER, MO.

The year's work at Elizabeth Chapel closed with active church membership doubled. Our church is the leader in all things for miles around. —Henry W. Hunter.

BARNARD AND BOLCKOW, MO.

At the former place there were 17 additions and $845 raised for all purposes. At Bolckow there were 41 additions, and $650 were raised. The work is in good condition, but I have left it to take full time at Eldon.—J. F. Bickell.

PRAIRIE GROVE, ARK.

In eight months' work with this church and three months with congregations near by there have been 105 additions, one congregation organized and one Sunday-school; a Methodist preacher received and located with two of our congregations; one young man started in the evangelistic field; a parsonage built, and over $1,100 raised, more than half of which was used in church and missionary work, independent of my salary. Our membership was more than doubled, and there is harmony and godly enthusiasm.—H. S. Hobley.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

We have had good growth; 54 added; present membership, 150. Money raised, $1,472.—T. N. Kincaid.

SOUTH BEND, IND.

Our annual report showed the most gratifying gains of any year in the church's history. Our Indiana Avenue Church is prospering under the ministry of A. C. McHenry, a young man who recently united with us, having previously been identified with the Methodists.—Perry J. Rice.

MANSFIELD, OHIO.

We raised last year a total of $5,994 and ended the year with a balance in hand of $119. There is still an indebtedness of $6,500 on the church. Our income showed an average of over $110 per Sunday. It has doubled in less than two years. But our missionary showing is not very good—only $454, all told. It will be our chief concern next year to increase this.—Bruce Brown.

WELLSVILLE AND HALLSPORT, N. Y.

The Wellsville church had 22 additions during 1905, and the Hallsport church 12. Wellsville raised over $2,900 for all purposes, and Hallsport paid off the balance of its church debt and erected and paid for new sheds.—Wm. E. Adams.

TAYLORVILLE, ILL.

I have begun my third year's work. Last year we had 105 additions, all debts paid and some money still in the treasury. The church is united We gave $220 for missions.—Zuinglius Moore.

DUNDEE, OHIO.

I began another year's work at Dundee, O., January 21. I held a meeting here in December, 1904, and revived the church (which had not met for over four years), and have continued ministering for the church since that time. The house has been repaired, decorated, and furnished with new carpet, organ and lights. This church of 40 members gave for all purposes $750 in thirteen months, all raised by free-will offerings. Soul winning will be especially emphasized this year. "The Membership Doubled" is our watchword for 1906.—Bowman Hostetler.

MARYVILLE, MO.

Reports of last year make the best showing ever presented at the church's annual meeting. There has been complete harmony. The membership was increased by 85 additions, bringing it up to nearly 1,000 communicants. The different departments raised $5,873.15, more than one-third of which went to the cause of missions. Local expenditures amounted to $3,674.65. The Bible school contribution to benevolences surpassed that of any other school in the brotherhood. The church adopted the plan of electing two elders and five deacons annually by ballot, without nominations, thus giving entirely new officers every three years, if desirable.—H. A. Denton, pastor.

RUTLAND, ILL.

Every department made an increase over last year. The attendance is one-third better. The C. W. B. M. has increased almost four fold. There is a growing spiritual interest. There were 6 additions. The total amount raised was $1,623, of which $1,322 were for local purposes, the rest going to the various missionary enterprises. Much credit is due to our pastor, R. B. Doan, and his wife.—Wilson Mateer, clerk.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Niles, O., Feb. 5.—Herbert Yeuell's meeting closed with 252 additions—230 confessions; 25 yesterday. Hundreds turned away; meeting beyond our fondest dreams. H. Kellar.

Pasadena, Jan. 29.—Thirteen added yesterday; 3 baptisms (all adults), 1 from Baptists, 1 by statement and 7 by letter; 2 baptized last Lord's day. Five of these baptisms are a result of a meeting I am conducting in South Pasadena, a new field for the Disciples of Christ. The meeting is now entering the third week, and about 25 have declared their purpose to stand together in this new church. I look for others this week. We start a Sunday-school next Lord's day. I am doing this work in addition to the heavy work as minister of the Pasadena church.—Sumner T. Martin.

The planting and rapid growth of the church here within the last ten months, forms a religious turning-point for Lindsay.—L. B. Grogan, minister.

A DAY OF MIRACLES IN CAPERNAUM. —Mark 1:21-34.

Memory Verses 33, 34.

Golden Text.—He healed many that were sick.—Mark 1:34.

After his rejection by the people of his own home city, Nazareth, Jesus removed to Capernaum on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. It was a town of considerable importance, but all traces of it have now so completely vanished that the very site of it can not be located with certainty. The place was the home of some who had become, and of others who were to become, disciples of Jesus, and here he made his headquarters for a time. The call of the four disciples occurred shortly after this removal and only a little later (following the order of Mark's narrative) came this day of healing with which the present lesson deals. Luke, however, puts this day of healing before the call of the four, and Matthew, who records only the healing of Peter's wife's mother, puts the event considerably later, after the calling of the twelve. Mark's order is preferable.

On his return from Judea to Galilee, Jesus had at once begun to preach in the synagogues, and the fame of his teaching went throughout the region (Luke 4:14). But so far there had been few exhibitions of miraculous power—none at all so far as the records of the Synoptists show. So it was in accordance with established habit that he entered into the synagogue at Capernaum and taught. Apparently he did not seek opportunities for miracles of healing, but used his power only when there came a positive demand for it. In the case of this demoniac in the synagogue, it was almost self defense.

"He taught as having authority, and not as the scribes." Jesus was essentially a teacher of first-hand truth, which he got fresh from the fountain-head of religious truth. The scribes were essentially purveyors of second-hand truths—in so far as what they taught was truth. They repeated what had been told to them and what they found in the books. They were transmitters of laws, principles and teachings of which they had only formal, and not vital, possession. They were governed by an authority wholly external to themselves and unrelated to their own experience. Great as was the difference in content between the teaching of Jesus and that of the scribes, the difference in method was even more so. Theirs was the method of every teacher who depends wholly upon the external authority of book, creed or church. His was the method of one who has immediate and first-hand knowledge of the truths which he teaches. Jesus had within himself authority unique and divine which can not be completely reproduced, but those who teach in his name and by his authority must shun the method of the scribes.

The healing of the demoniac is one of a numerous class of incidents in which what we would perhaps call insanity or epilepsy is described as demoniacal possession, and in which a cure is said to be effected by the casting out of the disturbing evil spirit. In earlier days, many phenomena of physical and mental pathology which modern medicine would describe in terms of disease were accounted for on the ground of demoniacal possession. The problems connected with such phenomena have not yet been so completely solved as to warrant an absolute statement that the old explanation was wholly wrong. To be reasonable, however, we must be prepared to accept the theory of evil spirits to account for abnormal mental conditions in our own day if we accept it in the similar phenomena in earlier times.

The recognition of Jesus as Messiah by those possessed of demons is an element of the case which can not be satisfactorily accounted for on any basis except that the possessing demon had a superhuman insight into the nature of Jesus, or that the afflicted man was, by the nature of his disorder, rendered abnormally sensitive to the mental states of those about him and so, by what we should call telepathy, read in the mind of Jesus his knowledge of his own Messiahship. The latter theory makes a strong demand upon one's credulity, especially in view of the frequent repetition of the phenomenon (Mark 1:34).

Peter's wife's mother, on being healed of her fever, at once arose and ministered to Jesus and his disciples. The incident may serve to illustrate the duty of every one whom he has healed of the malady of sin to arise from the bed of his lethargy and serve him who has brought health and healing.

THE CHURCH AND HER CHARITIES.—2 Cor. 9; Jas. 1:27; 2:15, 16.

Suggestive texts: Lending to the Lord, Prov. 19:17; The gleaners, Deut. 24:21; Lev. 19:9, Ruth 2:2, 3; Part of the Christian program, Matt. 10:8; One of the first fruits, Acts 2:44, 45, 4:34, 35; Organized for work, Acts 6:1 7.

Our Church has two hospitals in which the poor and friendless sick receive free medical or surgical treatment. One of these is in this city and the other at Valparaiso, Ind. Ere long in every chief city of the land we believe there will be hospitals dedicated to the relief of the poor, to the glory of that Great Physician who came into the world not only to save men from sin and an adverse judgment, but from hunger and poverty and cold and sickness and disease and loneliness and despair as well.

At Midway and Morehead, Ky., Baldwin, Ga., Edwards, Miss., and Fulton, Mo., the Disciples have orphan schools for the benefit of American children. In conjunction with our mission stations are twenty-four others. In addition to these thousands of dollars are annually given to the endowment of our colleges to assist worthy youth to the advantages of Christian education. With the levers we are thus placing in the hands of the coming generation surely the race will be lifted up to a higher plane of thought and life.

Orphanages are conducted by our churches at St. Louis. Louisville, Cleveland, Dallas, Loveland, Col., Baldwin, Ga., and Dew Drop, N. C. Bereft little ones are taken from city slums, almhouses and other places of destitution and therein reared in an atmosphere of piety, love and culture till good, Christian homes are found for them from which they emerge out into life nearly as well equipped for careers of happiness, usefulness and honor as if orphanhood had not been their early lot. What wonderful opportunities for service here!

At Jacksonville, Ill., and East Aurora, N. Y., the churches of Christ are making proof of their ministry by conducting Homes for our old brethren and sisters who have come in indigency to three score years and ten. There everything is done for their comfort that love can suggest while they await the summons to the home above, that building of God not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. No volume of "Evidences" our scholars can write will prove as effective in changing infidelity into faith as this expression of Christian love for aged Disciples.

Brooks' Appliance is a new scientific discovery with automatic air cushions that draws the broken parts together and binds them as you would a broken limb. It absolutely holds firmly and comfortably and never slips, always light and cool and conforms to every movement of the body without chafing or hurting. I make it to your measure and send it to you on a strict guarantee of satisfaction or money refunded and I have put my price so low that anybody, rich or poor, can buy it. Remember I make it to your order—send it to you—you wear it and if it doesn't satisfy you, you send it back to me and I will refund your money without question. The banks and the postmaster here will tell you that is the way I do business—always absolutely on the square and I am selling thousands of people this way for the past five years. Remember I use no salves, no harness, no lies, no fakes. I just give you a straight business deal at a reasonable price.

C. E. Brooks, 1034 Brooks Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Had Dorcas been asked her employ she would have replied, "I am making some garments for the poor." She saw only the poor, but beside her was a silent loom on which angels were weaving the finer threads of her kindly purposes into radiant texture, and as she sewed for them she was fashioning for herself robes of immortality. So with you; you thought you were placing that coin in the trembling hand of mendicancy, but really you were committing it unto the Lord who will keep it for you against that day. And that coat was thrown rather about Jesus than the old wayfarer, into whose face you looked in the giving, and he will translate it into celestial regalia that will make glorious your appearance among the angels.

The Board of Ministerial Relief represents one of our Church's charities that should be enshrined in the tenderest affection of every Disciple's heart. Its purpose is to gather funds and distribute them among aged preachers and their wives who have come to old age in indigency. When others were accumulating a competency for declining years, these soldiers of the cross in the prime of their mental and physical powers were giving themselves unremittingly to spiritual ministrations. It is a joyous service of the Church, and one that brings rich blessings into the administrators' lives, to care for them in the years of their helplessness. A. L. Orcutt, East Market street, Indianapolis, is the president of this board, and will gladly place correspondents in blessed relationships with these ambassadors of the heavenly King.

CHRIST'S LIFE: HIS LIFE-WORK, AND WHAT WE MAY LEARN ABOUT OUR OWN WORK.—Jno. 14:8-14.

There is something in the well doing of the humblest tasks that fall to us as husbandmen in the Lord's vineyard, as soldiers of the cross, or as priests in the great temple of life, that gives them fellowship with the greatest works of the Christ.

The pathos of it is that Christ's ministries of such wonderful love and power were all performed under the shadow of the cross. Surely in his life we find no justification for permitting our "light afflictions" to drive us into retirement to nurse them in solitude, to stay the full tide of our sympathies for others' sorrows or to paralyze our altruistic endeavors in behalf of a sinful and care burdened world.

Christ's greatest work, his mightiest miracle, was his own life of stainless innocence, made and kept so by conscious effort, by holy meditation, resistance of temptation, and entering all open gates of usefulness. By this token let us realize that our own hearts offer the most tempting fields for our cultivation; that if they are kept pure and fruitful of good, heaven will declare our life's work successful even if we are unknown to earthly fame.

About much of our work are evidences of a hurry and an incompleteness that do not mar the works of the Master; even his cerements were carefully arranged in the tomb from which he must have so gladly emerged. The quiet dignity with which he accomplished so much is proof that his time was not dissipated upon trivialities. Let us eliminate from this week's program many of the inconsequentials upon which we lavished time heretofore and attempt works worthy to endure, and they will be more creditably performed, a present help to others, a joy to us forever.

Christ's humanitarianism knew no caste. He did not restore to life that little girl in the palace because the ruler was rich, nor pass by on the other side of that funeral cortege at Nain because the widow was poor. Suffering in hearts, whether throbbing under velvet or fustian, constituted an irresistible appeal to his sympathies, enlisting his power for rescue regardless of all distinctions of race, religion or fortune. Our likeness unto him is increasing when no form of prejudice bars us from any created in the image of God whom we may help for time or eternity.

---

In many instances the store seems to own the man instead of his being proprietor, and the picture greater than the painter. Jesus always loomed larger than his works. If he preached one Sermon on the Mount, he impresses us as able to make of every hill a pulpit for words of life thrilling the nations; those who by faith see him at the grave of Lazarus believe he can call forth all the entombed millions who have looked farewell into the sun. Much of this reserve power, this real superiority to all materialism, and even our best mental fabrics, we also can acquire through a life so close to God as to give us consciousness of divine sonship.

---

The "greater works" Jesus promises we may do refers rather to their quantity than nature. He raised the dead, forgave sins, died for the lost, redeemed and glorified the fallen. There are no works superior to these. But while Jesus opened a few blinded eyes, surgery, flourishing only in Christian civilization, restores vision to thousands daily; Jesus withheld the widow's son and the ruler's daughter from the grave, but in Christian lands the longevity of races has doubled that of earlier ages; to a hundred Jesus may have said, "Thy sins are forgiven thee," now, thousands are added daily unto those who are being saved, and rejoice in the consciousness of sins forgiven; not many dwell in his glorified presence who also saw him on earth, but now the three gates on either side of the city that lieth four square are thronged by mortals translated through the ministry of the churches. Let us also abound in these greater works; they are the vindication of our claims to be believers on him.

My Valentine.

By Lynn R. Hornish.

I sat to-day,
And, glancing o'er the pages of the past,
Thy name alway
Would bring its glow of memories at last.

I gazed on faces:
The great, the good that earth had known;
I saw but traces,
In their higher linings, of, my love, thine own.

I saw fond homes,
And heard the hist'ry of their hearths foretold;
My fancy roams—
Yet, lingers 'round thy gateway, as of old.

Oh, memories!
And past, with all thy burdens and thy tears—
Gethsemanes!
That blast the future and the promise of the years.

Ah, not to know
That e'en Divinity and Love's divine desire
Must brighter grow
When leaps the Light above hate's smoldering fire!

And so, at last,
I lift my eyes; they meet thine own, soft grown,
All doubt is past;
"Truth crushed, must rise, and Love can never lose its own."

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of the First Three Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either one of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. A consultation of the kind-hearted people of the town is to be held to decide upon what to do with the two children. In the meantime they are cared for by Miss Glory Aggency, a maiden lady, who lives with her brother, Mr. Merlin Aggency, who is considered "queer."]

Chapter IV.

The dinner which Miss Glory prepared, was eaten in silence. Rhoda was grieved that her cooking had not pleased the elderly lady, and Raymund was downcast because his sister had failed in her endeavor. It was not possible for either of the twins to be happy when the other was suffering, either from pain or from disappointment. After the dishes had been cleaned and Mr. Merlin Aggency had registered them in his book, Miss Glory again left her brother in care of Raymund. "Be sure not to let him escape your eye," she said in a cautious whisper. "My headache is worse than ever, and I will try to lie perfectly still; but if brother Merlin leaves the premises, have me called at once."

It was a delightful afternoon in early September, and Rhoda went out into the yard to look across the fence at what had been her mother's home. She felt that she could not look at it often enough, for in a few days she might be sent—she knew not where. Something must be done with her—how could Raymund protect her until he was older? The girl was troubled and wished Raymund would come out to give her confidence. But Raymund had been detained by aged Mr. Merlin Aggency.

"Boy," said the venerable little man, the wrinkles on his face deepening as he spoke, "what do you think of my dining room ledger?"

"Do you mean the book that tells how many dishes and cups and other things are wiped each meal?" asked Raymund, who was no longer afraid of the smiling face and the eager eyes.

"Just so," said Mr. Merlin Aggency, nodding briskly.

Raymund reflected, then said, "It seems very businesslike, sir."

The old gentleman clapped him on the shoulder. "It is organization," he said. "It is detail. Come to the parlor, boy."

Raymund glanced wistfully through the glass door at his sister, but followed dutifully. Rhoda had failed in her cooking; but Raymund was resolved to keep his eye on Miss Glory's brother. They went into the parlor, which was darkened and smelt musty. The sunlight was kept as jealously out of Miss Glory's parlor as Indians out of a blockhouse.

"Now look around," said the old man, waving his arms, and spreading apart his short legs. "Look at anything. What do you want to select?"

"Thank you," said Raymund, perplexed, "I don't want anything."

"But name something,' returned Mr. Merlin Aggency, a trifle impatiently. "What do you see? Name a detail. Any detail. I don't care what detail!"

Raymund gazed blankly about him. "Mr. Aggency," he said desperately, "what is a detail?"

"Boy," said the other, fidgeting from one short leg to the other and rumpling his snowy hair, "how old are you?"

"I am twelve, sir," said Raymund meekly.

"You are twelve. That is a detail. Anything is a detail. Chairs—tables—cups—houses—elephants—my dear boy, the earth is a detail—the moon—the stars—where are we to stop? We can not stop. We can not. Look about you. Name a detail!" This in a tone rather fierce.

Raymund responded timidly, "Would the willow-chair do?"

The old man's face expressed complete satisfaction. "Good!" he cried. "You say the willow-chair. You ask me for this detail. Wait!" he walked nimbly to the mantel and took down a clothbound blankbook similar to that in the dining room. "This is my parlor ledger. I turn to the index. I do not look for willow, but for chair. Willow-chair is a species of the genus chair. I find Chair. Here it is Let me see?" He mumbled under his breath: "Cane-seat, plush-bottom, rocking, willow—ha! Here it is, Willow. Page 43. Now I turn to page 43." He did so, and presently read, "Willow-chair: The third chair on the east." He looked over the top of the book at Raymund. "What do you think of that? Is it the third chair on the east?"

"Yes, it is," replied Raymund, after considering.

Mr. Merlin Aggency closed the book triumphantly and slammed it back upon the mantel. "Yes, it is," he repeated; "the third chair on the east. It is so recorded. Do you wish to name another detail?"

"Would you not like to smoke your pipe outdoors where it is so pleasant?"

"The very thing," said the other, his face relaxing. "Let us go out."

When Mr. Merlin Aggency was installed in his easy chair under the hard maple, Raymund joined his sister, whom he found watching the laborer at his whitewashing. The workman seemed even tighter than before in his blue trousers and close-fitting shirt. He wore a glazed cap which came so low that he was obliged to look up from under the brim at anything on a level with his face. When he looked up from under the brim, he screwed his eyes, and drew in his mouth, as if it were an exertion.

"Been talking to the old chap?" he asked of Raymund. "Curious old chap, that's what I call him. That's my name for it—curious. He used to be a superintendent of schools over the county, and all he ever done, as I have heerd, was to organize. He was little force, they tell me, as to say that he learned anything to any of his pupils. But he was hunky on classifying them. Sorter went to his brain, is the way I explain it. What he knowed, he put in sorter pigeon-holes in his brain. He always knowed how to go after what he knowed. It was right where he had put it. But it was too straining. Now me, nobody knows how much I do know. I ain't aware of it, myself. Sometimes I am amazed to find that I know something which it is only fair to say I had no knowledge at all of, as to say that I knowed it. And that's best. Just leave your brain clear of things to come and go. If you turn your brain to a sieve, or sifter, it'll like enough ketch things that's no account. Now that old man, smoking there so peaceful—anything that's of value, he's let get through. He's just ketched the dregs, you might say."

After this explanation, Wizzen felt that he owed it to conscience and the world to whitewash an entire paling without a stop. He did so, then paused.

"Do you like to whitewash, Wizzen?" Rhoda inquired interestedly.

"No," said Wizzen, "I do not. I can not say, Rhoda, that I care for any unbroken work. I like work as well as any man, but I do not like unbroken work. Continuous, you understand. That is my word for it—I do not care for continuous work. What I like, and what I believe in, is moving. It is the keynote of my interest in life. Right this minute I want to be in a covered wagon, starting down south—say for Mississippi, or Alabamy—driving slowly along day after day, cooking my meals by the roadside—"

"Oh, how I should love to go!" cried Raymund. "Wouldn't we, Rhoda?"

"Oh, Wizzen," said Rhoda longingly, "I wish you could take us! There is nobody here who wants us, now that mother is dead, and though we have an uncle in St. Louis, he will not even answer our letters—he is just a half-uncle—but he might have answered mother's letters. Don't you think you could take us, Wizzen? I could cook for you, I guess you wouldn't be as particular as Miss Glory—and Raymund could help feed the horses and hitch up, and we would be all the company to you that we could. Don't it sound just like a fairy-story?"

"Yes, it do," said Wizzen, dipping his brush into the whitewash-bucket. "Did you ever notice one thing, Rhoda, that's in every fairy-story? No matter how different the stories may be, what's in one, is in the other."

"What is that, Wizzen?"

"It's the fairy," said Wizzen.

"I don't understand," said Rhoda. "Do you, Raymund?"

"There are surely different kinds of fairies," said Raymund.

"They're all alike," said Wizzen decidedly.

"They are unreal. That's my word for it. You twins are not fairies. You are humans So'm I. I'd like to take you with me, but they wouldn't let you go. And, besides, I'm poor, and couldn't afford the extra expense. And more important than that, you'd get dead tired of the whole business. You haven't been brought up to keep moving. Now, whitewashing is motion, but it is slow motion. I can stand it. But you'd find riding along week after week pretty near as tiresome as I find this. Not quite, perhaps," said Wizzen, laying down the brush, "but pretty near."

"We'd like it ever so much better than going to an orphan home," Rhoda declared. "Oh, ever so much!"

"An orphan home!" exclaimed Wizzen, lowering his head and screwing his eyes to look at her from under the glazed tip of his cap. "They won't do that, will they?"

"I'm afraid so," said Raymund. Rhoda did not answer—a lump had come into her throat. "To-morrow afternoon the ladies will meet here to discuss what's to be done with us. I don't know what it will be—only I know I'm going to get an education somehow!"

"They's one thing I like," said Wizzen, reflectively. "It's of a warm, moonlight night when I have stopped for the night beside some crick or other, and my campfire is burning, and my coffee pot is swinging over the blaze, and my dog is curled up at my feet, and the water sorter laps and slishes in high grass, and wa-a-ay away you hear some cow 'moo,' or a rooster a-crowing—" He broke off and lifted his brush.

"Oh, do go on!" cried Rhoda, breathlessly.

"I was just taking notice," said Wizzen, "that the old organizer has slipped out the front gate."

Raymund turned swiftly. Sure enough Mr. Merlin Aggency had deposited his pipe in his split-bottom chair and had crept from the yard. "Oh, Rhoda," cried Raymund in alarm, "run wake up Miss Glory, "while I try to bring Mr. Aggency back home!"

Gleanings from the Magazines.

A Badly Abused Cereal.

Our public won't buy any rice unless the grains shine and glisten. Consequently the first thing the miller does is to put his rice crop through a course of polishing by which the covering of the kernel is rubbed off, and at the same time the most nutritive part. The result is that he gets a beautiful, almost sparkling, grain, which sells well, but inasmuch as the covering has been removed, the grains when cooked lose their identity and become a mush. "Polished rice" is a peculiarity of America. The public can procure the unpolished rice if they will insist on the grocer's getting it for them, for "polishing" is an extra process which the miller will be glad to abandon.—Country Life in America.

Motherhood Is, After All, Woman's Business.

The accumulated force of all nature for all time is not going to be balked by expression in this culminating species. Motherhood—if anything—is woman's business. That business has been forever interfered with by a man-made world; by warfare and shipwreck, by accident and injustice, by vice and excesses without end—all on the father's side.

While drink and war and crime kill thousands and hundreds of thousands, while our railroads alone destroy more men each year than many a battlefield, it does seem somewhat absurd to turn about and cry to patient motherhood for more children. Napoleon was frank and consistent, saying women were only to be valued for their number of children—he called them "cannon food." A little less cannon food may tend to reduce the appetite for cannon.

Moreover if there are any women so ignorant, shallow, and unnaturally selfish as to deliberately forego motherhood—then we are well rid of her species.—Charlotte Perkins Gilman in Woman's Home Companion.

The South's Industrial Advance.

All that has been accomplished in southern material upbuilding which can be measured by dry statistics, is as nothing compared to the value of the experience gained, the capital accumulated, and the realization of power and strength as against weakness and hopelessness of twenty-five years ago. If from Mount Mitchell—the highest peak east of the Rocky Mountains—a bird's-eye view of the south could be had, there would be seen a mighty, resistless, onward movement of a people who, having struggled amid the darkness of the wilderness with no pillar of fire to guide them, strengthened in body and mind by the hard but victorious fight, have at last come in sight of the Promised Land. No longer moving westward as heretofore, the tide of population would be seen to be turning southward. The hardened veterans of the south's struggle for industrial independence are seen to be drawing heavy reinforcements from this incoming tide. Capital, the greatest coward of earth, joins the procession, and the south, beggar no longer, invites the world's surplus money seeking the most profitable field on earth for investment.—Review of Reviews.

"What English Poetry Owes to Young People."

The Rev. Francis E. Clark, President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, writes most interestingly on this subject in the February "North American Review." Among the young people who have put English poetry under obligation to whom Dr. Clark refers are Charles Wolfe, the author of "The Burial of Sir John Moore"; Christopher Marlowe and Francis Beaumont, the dramatists; Thomas Chatterton; Henry Kirke White; John Keats; Herbert Knowles; Richard Gall; Robert Nicoll; David Gray. Dr. Clark says: "This article does not pretend to be an exhaustive account of youthful poets. If we should enlarge its self-imposed limits to include poems written by the young men and women who afterward lived to middle life or old age, we should find it a most interesting story, but too vast for the moderate proportions of a 'Review' article. Many of our greatest bards have 'lisped in numbers, because the numbers came.' Neither have we attempted to trace the poetic flights of many obscure poets whose early swan-song has been heard by an admiring group of personal friends and relations, but not by the world at large. The poets' corners of country newspapers undoubtedly entomb a multitude of youthful but not inglorious Miltons; and, very likely, every reader would like to add one more adolescent bard to this list, but it is already long enough to make clear one or two points that will strike most readers with surprise. One is the serious cast of the youthful mind. Scarcely anything that is humorous, comparatively little that is heroic, almost nothing that is tragic, do we find in their writings, but largely their works consist of descriptions of natural scenes, or praise of abstract virtues, or the amplification of the religious impressions they had gained at their mothers' knees. Even light and tripping love-songs, which you would expect from them, they have largely left to their elders. The supposed sparkle and effervescence of young life are usually absent, and the shadow of the Unseen seems to be all about them. Perhaps this may be attributed in part to their early decline in health. Many of them had already entered the Valley of the Shadow, and their poems reflected the seriousness of ill-health and approaching death."

I am a little fellow,
Though I'm always up to date.
The days I hold within my hand are only twenty-eight;
But I just save my moments up,

But little folks that kindly are, and pleasant in their play,
May save enough in far less time to make a happy day.

A Boy's Composition on Babies.

Babies are people just beginnin'. When they are born, they are very small, but get bigger as they grow up. Babies are not like growed-up people. They are not strong like them; they have no hair, no teeth and no sense. Sometimes babies laff. But that's 'cause you make them. People kisses babies too much. Teacher says it propergates mikerobes which is unhealthy. Babies give lots of trouble to their mother. They do nuthing but eat and sleep all day and cry all night. Some people haven't got any babies. Them what have don't sleep at night on account of them, at which time their father sometimes says bad words. Babies don't go to church or the theayter 'till they're growed up, 'cause they don't unnerstan' what's going on and mite create a disturbance. The best thing about babies is that it don't last always. They get over it.

A Week With the Woodneys.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

[The last chapter has been found and is printed herewith.]

CONCLUSION.

It was a good while before the Woodneys recovered from the confusion and excitement incident to Bonaparte's invasion. The kitchen was in the utmost disorder, but perhaps not more so than their own minds. One idea which stood forth with singular distinctness in the minds of each member of the family was that the Wrens should go home; but the Wrens remained. It was from pure kindness that they gathered into the sitting-room to talk over the recent uproar, and to offer sympathy. But kindness is like a fire in that too much of it may do more harm than good. The end of Luther's visit was a troubled one, half a dozen Wrens chattering at the same time, and not a single Wren, with the exception of Annie, showing the slightest curiosity to know what the other Wrens were saying; while Annie listened only to criticise. "I'm afraid mother is ill," Mrs. Geraldine presently exclaimed, for the first time noticing the old lady's absence.

"I think she is talking to the tramp," said Mace.

"Well, do look!" cried Mrs. Geraldine as a figure passed the window. "That tramp is going away with Benjamin's coat on! And his very hat! He must be stopped!"

"And he has on father's boots," cried Mace, staring through the window at the tramp almost respectfully, because he looked so much like Mr. Woodney. Old Mrs. Woodney appeared at the door and beckoned mysteriously to her daughter-in-law. Mrs. Geraldine suffered herself to be led out to the parlor porch. "That was Dave Jim Woodney, tramping the country," said the old lady in a hoarse whisper, "but I've bought him off. He's agreed to leave Missouri and not go near G. C. D. Woodney. I'd have given him the garments off my own back to have hired him to leave. I did offer him Bonaparte."

"Wouldn't he take it?" exclaimed Mrs. Geraldine eagerly.

"Did he ever do anything," said the old lady fiercely, "for the credit of his family?" When the Wrens finally retired to their own nest, Dave Jim was thoroughly discussed. Mr. Benjamin, always disposed to look for the bright side of life, said to his wife in the confidence of their bedroom, "Perhaps this will be a salutary thing for mother, my dear. I doubt if she will brag so much on the Woodneys henceforth, for she'll never know when cousin Dave Jim will turn up to confound her. You saw this cousin Dave Jim, yourself; now tell, do; do you suppose any Dobney could look more shiftless and low?"

"Oh, no, indeed!" said Mrs. Geraldine emphatically. "He is simply awful—so untidy—so slouchy, and tobacco all over his neck—he must rotate his head when he chews. It was awful!"

"Very good," said Mr. Woodney cheerfully. "I believe we have at last found a check to mother's boasting. Really, I used to be a little grieved to feel her edging her way toward the Woodney theme. You could always tell when she was going to talk Woodneys, for her voice took on its company accent. Should she again indulge herself, a mere reference to cousin Dave Jim, or the suggestion of a visit from him, will suffice."

"Anyway," returned his wife, "cousin Dave Jim, for all he has fallen so low, is, in some respects, still a Woodney; he refused to take Bonaparte!"

Early the next day, Mr. Woodney had Arthur lead him to the saloon. Mr. Hoogan was surprised to receive another visit so soon, and his surprise increased to amazement when the other made known his errand. "You say," cried Mr. Hoogan, "that you have it from G. C. D. Woodney, and he has it from the president of the railroad company?"

"Such is the case," cried the other triumphantly. "The railroad will run through Sullivan. Go buy up your town lots, and make no delay. Start off at once."

"But I don't understand," said the saloon-keeper, "why you don't go and buy them yourself. Why are you giving me this tip?"

"Because I want this saloon closed," Mr. Woodney explained. "I thought you understood that."

"How do you know I'll close it, if I do buy the land?" demanded Hoogan.

"Didn't you agree to close it if I found you a lucrative occupation?" returned the unworldly Mr. Woodney with the simplicity of a child.

Mr. Hoogan thrust his hands into his pockets and winked at Arthur. Then he shook his head. Then he began to pace up and down before his saloon. "Look a-here!" he said suddenly. "I know you want the saloon closed, I know it's sentiment with you. But it don't stand to reason that you want it closed bad enough to give me a little fortune to close it; and to be plain, I can't see into your game!"

A pained expression crossed Mr. Woodney's face. "Mr. Hoogan," he said earnestly, "if I knew I should receive my sight once more on condition that I cease my efforts to do away with this saloon, I would most contentedly remain blind." Then he added hastily, "I don't want you to misunderstand me, sir. I am contented, as it is; I never repine. I merely meant I wouldn't have back my eyes as they were, if, to have them so, I must consent to this saloon."

"Do you mean those words, Mr. Woodney? But I see you do," the saloon-keeper interrupted himself. "Look a-here! Your religion means something. It's so actual that I can feel it. Do you know, as long as I've been in business, nobody ever came at me in your way? Some have tried to drive me with badgering and arguments, but old Hoogan can't be drove. I'll go this day to Sullivan, and if I like the looks of things, the saloon goes; and if I make a neat sum, you get half of it, too."

"No," cried Mr. Woodney, "it's enough for me—"

"You get half of it, too!" cried Mr. Hoogan. "Now you mind me! But, say! Are you in the habit of trusting to people's words like you're trusting to mine?"

"Surely nothing is sweeter than to trust our fellow-men," exclaimed Mr. Woodney with a bright smile.

"Maybe it's sweet at the first taste," remarked Hoogan; "but don't you ever get fooled?"

"Oh, yes!" said Mr. Woodney.

"Most generally?" persisted the other.

"Well, ye-e-es," Mr. Woodney confessed, "I suppose that's why I am poor to-day. But how much happier I have been my life long than if I'd mistrusted my kind and had grown rich!"

"Old woman!" cried Mr. Hoogan to his wife, who was walking with the screaming baby in the yard, "close up the shutters. The saloon's suspended for the present. Mr. Woodney, let me see you home. Here, put your hand on my arm." As they walked up the street, Hoogan saw Mr. Winterfield, Marcia Winterfield and Miss Susie Day approaching from afar. "See here, Mr. Woodney," he said, stopping short, "I wasn't thinking how this might look to other people. The Winterfields are coming and they wouldn't understand. You and Arthur go on home, and I'll get ready for the hack."

"No, sir!" cried Mr. Woodney, clinging to the burly arm, "I feel like this is my triumphant march."

"Then come on," returned Hoogan, "for this is my proudest day since I came to the village." When he had seen Mr. Woodney home, he left an order at the store for the hack, and returned to the saloon. Before the door he found two farmers, Mr. Walker and Mr. Fencer, staring in surprise at the closed shutters. These two farmers had been at enmity for years, and did not speak to each other; but their surprise and pleasure over the closed shutters had drawn them together, for each had a son who frequented the saloon. It must be understood, however, that they had been brought together purely in a physical sense. Each, ignoring the other, asked Hoogan the meaning of the closed shutters.

"Gentlemen, the saloon is suspended and possibly dead," said Hoogan. "I'm thinking of going into another business. In the meantime, I'm going to help get that church rebuilt. Mr. Woodney is working for it hard, and I intend that he shall see it berise from them ruins. Yes, gentlemen, I say he'll see it; for angels don't need eyes to see; and if he ain't an angel, they's no use to expect one to light in this village."

"I want that church rebuilt as much as anybody," said Walker, "and I'll give fifty dollars toward it, on the understanding that the man who has wronged me and my family (I mean Jim Fencer) has no part in the subscription."

"Hoogan," said Mr. Fencer, "I'll go seventy-five dollars on the list, if Walker isn't included among the subscribers."

"Hoogan," said Walker "I'll just raise my bid to a hundred, if that bars out Fencer."

Mr. Fencer, who up to this point had remained cool, now began to show excitement. "I'll offer one-fifty," he cried.

"Two hundred!" exclaimed Walker.

"Gentlemen,' cried Hoogan, rubbing his hands in enjoyment, "this here is religion!"

"I wouldn't have minded about Walker's pigs getting into my cornfield," Fencer declared, now red in the face, "if he hadn't denied it. And if he stays out of this church enterprise, I'll donate two hundred dollars."

"What made Fencer mad," remarked Walker, "is that I beat him at the trial. Then he turned his cows into my market-garden, and I'll give three hundred dollars if he stays out of this."

"Go ahead, gentlemen," cried Hoogan, "and we'll get that church built this morning!"

When Mr. Woodney reached home, he found three children in the yard. Arthur Lowell informed him of their presence. "And who are you, my dears?" inquired Mr. Woodney.

"I am Do-over Tumbleton with the hyphen," answered one tow-head, "and this is sister C, and little Y—he's the baby, sir; and we come to ask about that trunk."

"Ah!" cried Mr. Woodney in relief. "Do yon know whose it is? Arthur, call Geraldine."

"Not exactly," answered the little boy. "But would you like to hire C? Everybody in town has hired her, one time or another."

"Yes," said the shrill, keen voice of C. "I want to be hired. My name sure enough is Sissy, but they call me C for short."

"It's alphabetical," explained Do-over with the hyphen.

"But the trunk," interrupted Mrs. Geraldine, who had come to the door, her manuscript fluttering in her hand; "it wasn't meant for this house, then?"

"Well, perhaps not," said C, or Sissy. "But—Y, take that thumb out of your mouth."

"Excuse the interruption," said Mr. Woodney suddenly, "but this dear little fellow, named Y, was he—was he—could he have been the twenty-fifth?"

"No, sir," said Sissy Tumbleton, "his birthday is the second of September—day after to-morrow; and he's awful pleased when kind people make him presents."

"But I mean, why Y?" persisted Mr. Woodney.

"His name is Yeast," Do-over interposed. "I've heerd pa talking about it. You see they is eight of us, not counting Y, and them that is dead; they was plenty of us without Y. He was too much, pa thought!"

At these ungracious words, Y began to sob dismally.

"Stick his thumb in his mouth, C," Do-over counseled. "Yes, sir, pa was just outdone. He said it seemed to him that children was rising all about him out of the very earth, so he called the baby 'Yeast.' And pa says he'll take that trunk, if it's in your way."

"Does he think the trunk was meant for him?"

"Well, not exactly," said D, "but he has plenty of room for it at his house. He's coming to finish your porch in three weeks. He says if you'll let A and D come for the trunk, maybe he can begin work on your porch to-morrow, but certain, next week!"

"You tell your father," said Mrs. Geraldine, "that we feel obliged to keep the trunk, but he may take—"

"No," interposed her husband quickly, "I intend to keep Bonaparte."

"Which, that horse?" asked C. "Pa says he wouldn't have him. He see it comin' to town this mornin' and he said he felt like goin' out an' givin' it a lift. Then I'll tell A and D to drive around for the trunk!" When the children understood that the trunk was a fixture in the Woodney household, they marched sullenly away, taking occasion to make a detour that they might trample over the grassplot. "The little heathen!" exclaimed Mrs. Geraldine wrathfully. "I wonder why such people are in the world!"

Mr. Woodney answered brightly, "To put in your book."

"Why, of course," exclaimed his wife with sudden interest, "I'll go and do it at once."

* * * * * *

Here, then, is a slice from the life of a Missouri village, with its everyday incidents, its little hopes and joys and fears. And, just as if you had spent a week there, you leave it, knowing nothing of the future, except what the present warrants. To-morrow night, Worth Acre goes to pay his visit to the Miss Days. The next night, Ed Woodney and Mace will organize their musical club. Arthur Lowell has not yet been introduced to Jennie Woodney, and still dreams of her as of some ethereal creature, too fine for his workaday life. Bob Enderthorpe still admires Mace, and wonders if she will ever become his friend. The school is to begin in three weeks. Bonaparte is to live or die, with apparently equal chances for either fate. The daughter of old Mr. Acre expects to visit Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney in a short time. Arthur Lowell is to become a famous composer, or fail in his highest ambition; Mrs. Geraldine Woodney is to write a book that will sell, or one that will be known only in her immediate circle. Dave Jim Woodney is to hover like a ghost in the background of old Mrs. Woodney's consciousness. A thousand little threads are to run their course in the pattern of that village life. Perhaps some day we shall pursue them farther, and worship in the new church, and exult over the saloon's downfall. But now, like travelers who are about to return home from a week's visit, with a kind thought, I trust, for many of the inhabitants, let us climb into the hack, wave a hand at Main street, give a last smiling glance at the Woodney yard with its patch of grass, and bid the village farewell.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

James O'Bryan, Westfal, Canada: "Now let Ruth Sampsel speak up and defend herself! How does she make Whitefoot's fur fly? Good for Mr. Herriman! A Charlie-Education-Fund is the very thing. When I have something to send for it, I will. I wish our Sunday-school had a stereopticon like the one Harry Buckley wrote about. It would make it mighty interesting. Clarence and Carl Per Lee didn't tell us if they are still selling newspapers. I wish they would let us know what they are doing. Was that a French harp or a Jew's harp that orphan Charlie got Christmas? Somebody ought to show Ashley S. Johnson that offer you made him! I send my first report, and I'm proud to have begun keeping the Av. S. rules." Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia.: "I wish there was some way to get an Av. S. pin! I'd like awfully well to have one, but can't afford to buy one." (90 cents for the gold pin, sorry to say.) "Well, I wonder if I can think of anything to say to the society." (I shouldn't wonder!) "I am thinking so hard about its being bedtime that I can think of nothing else." (Then good-night!) "This ink is so pale." (Why! You're still up!) "I guess I'd better send my 'specs' along, so you can see to read it." (Maybe I can find my own 'specs.") "Well, Iowa had a great old blizzard three weeks ago. Nearly all the trains in Des Moines were blocked and the street cars came very near being." (I never saw a more independent town than Bentonville about street cars. When they don't run, people go about just the same as ever.) "The snow plows were kept on the go all the time." (I don't know where they keep ours.) "Was Charlie remembered Christmas? I thought of him, but that was all I could do." (Perhaps that helped to fill just the tiniest tip of the toe of his stocking.) "Really, I must go to bed." (Hope you'll have plenty of cover.)

Dora Griffith, Emida, Idaho: "I send two dollars as a new year's gift, one for Charlie, one for Drusie. May our Father in heaven ever bless her in her good work, and may little Charlie live to enjoy many happy vacations!" Jean Chambers, Richwood, Ky.: "One of my new year's resolutions was that I would do better Av. S. work, so look out for a fine report next time! After all, though, I am not sure there will be any 'next time,' if you are going to get people interested in your stories and then stop short without letting people see how they turn out. Lost, indeed! You know you remember that last chapter and could write it again in an hour, if you wanted to, and I think you ought to do it! People don't like to read stories that have no end to them. I hope it isn't still raining down in Arkansas." Lena Beamer, Smithfield, Mo.: "The last time I wrote, we had organized our Junior Endeavor. Now, you asked if it 'kept fat.' Yes it did, for we have fifty enrolled. What do you think of that?" (Yes, but how many come? Rolls are pretty nice when they're hot and fresh, but they don't always come up to expectations.) "I am interested in Drusie. By the way, what is her name?" (It is Drusie Reubelt Malott; her mother lives in Louisville, Ky., with Drusie's brother.) "I wonder what she thought of Christmas day and if she was homesick?" (Her letter, published last week, did not indicate that she was lonely.) "What has happened to Bertha Beesley? Did she get married?" (No, nothing so dreadful as that I assure you. In other particulars, let Bertha speak for herself, it's time to hear from her, anyway.) "How is Mr. or Mrs. Felix?" (Mr. Felix is as fat and quiet and friendly with the right kind of people, as he can be. I was never acquainted with Mrs. Felix; if there is such a character, she was left behind in Plattsburg, Mo. I can not tell that Mr. Felix misses her.) "I have a cat named Winks. That is, he is Winks on ordinary occasions, but on great days he is Sir Tidley Winks. I would not have any of my cats named Felix, unless it was on old-gold cat." (And quite right you are.) "Well, I must close. After I get started I 'might run too fast.'"

Sadie Pugsley, Woodbine, Ia.: "I noticed in Keble's quotation, as given in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, that the last line read please be still, instead of peace, be still. Was it my mistake or yours?" (I don't know, but I'll claim it.) "It gave me a sense of disappointment after the beauty of the first part." (I am glad; for we can never be too careful about words, our own, and particularly those of other people.) "I heartily approve of an education fund for Charlie, and will try to help, if it is done." (It's done. Mrs. Mary E. Bradfield, New Matamoras, Ohio, sends fifty cents, and kind words about "Week With the Woodneys." E. McLeod Davis, Crawfordsville, Ind., sends eighty-five cents for Drusie, in memory of his daughter. Mrs. G. A. Shirley sends a dollar for our missionary, Drusie, and twenty-five cents for Charlie. Mrs. S. J. Merrill, of Des Moines, and Jean Chambers, of Richmond, Ky., send a dollar each, fifty cents for Drusie and fifty cents for Charlie.) Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo.: "It has taken me twenty-six weeks to get on the Honor List this time. I kept the rules, only forgot twice to read my Bible verse. I received a letter from our China mission and was interested to read about the faithful missionaries. I love to read the letters Drusie and Charlie write for our page." Drusie Malott, South Chih-li Mission, North China, sends the following interesting item about the Chinaman, Chao Lien Hsing, who was converted to the true religion and is now preaching among his countrymen: "Chao was here to meet us last night. He is growing in faith, and is a continual marvel to me. He can talk of nothing but Jesus—nothing else interests him a moment. We intended to go on the street to hold a meeting, but the rain prevented, so we held a meeting in the inn and had a good time. Chao Lien Hsing was so overflowing with the glory and privilege of his work that he could not keep still. We read the sixth and seventh chapters of Acts and he told of having received a beating after we left Kuang Ping Fu. As each blow fell upon him, he shouted, 'Huan his k'wai le' (that means happy joy)! When Chinese told him he would not be punished if he defended himself, he said he was glad to be punished for Jesus' sake. The people here are all devout worshipers of idols. As we notice the wonderful change that has taken place in Chao's life during the past year, we can only exclaim, What God hath wrought!"

Simpson Ely, Joplin, Mo: "I met a young man, Ira Kent, in a bank at Middletown, yesterday. He turned to me and said, 'Here Brother Ely, is a present for you.' 'Thank you,' I said, 'I will make the very best use of it.' Then I thought of orphan Charlie with only one leg, and I resolved he should have the dollar; I send it to you for him. A fellow with only one leg has a pretty bad show in the race of life, but I saw a man creeping along the street to-day without any leg at all. I know a very precious young man who has no use of his legs; but he has a fine head, a splendid heart, a good education, and has accomplished results that put to shame many of us who have all our physical powers. He writes poetry and prose, composes music, is an editor, has been a college professor and has written a number of very interesting and instructive books. I will not mention his name, though it is familiar to thousands. Did you really lose that last chapter of 'The Woodneys'? Mrs. Ely and Lois think you purposed to close it as you did." Mrs. Willmott, of Kansas City, was also skeptical about that missing chapter, for she wrote me she was "awfully glad the horse got out of the house before you stopped!" Now, here is a letter from Paul Moore, the associate editor of The Christian-Evangelist, that will explain matters: "I have just found the missing chapter. I am not going to say who is to blame. That is an easy way of letting myself out." (Oh, yes; perhaps you're afraid of Brother Garrison!) "As a matter of fact, it was in one of my four drawers in which I keep manuscripts, but not in the particular drawer I thought. I think it will be well to publish it, and will try to get it in the paper." (So you see, it was lost. After all, that last chapter doesn't tell much about what became of the characters; and I wouldn't have bragged quite so much about it, if I had known it was going to be found, maybe!)

One of our gifted men thus writes concerning J. H. Garrison's book on the Holy Spirit: "Critics both higher and lower have dealt unmercifully with the book, impugning the motives of the author, using smart phrases and biting sarcasm in places where calm and reverent judgment was in order. The bitterest criticism has come from those who have tried to read into the author's sentences a meaning he does not intend to convey. Is it not significant that the various iconoclasts who have been so harsh in their criticisms have never pointed out a helpful paragraph, nor called attention to the things contained in the book that we need to make our very own? I thank God for the courage of the author and for the privilege of a personal acquaintance and friendship with the man who has made a daily companion of Him concerning whom he writes so skillfully and so reverently."

I have received some personal letters about my story of "The Woodneys," and about the Av. S. work, which have sent much sunshine into my life. I feel that I can not deserve what is said about me, and that I can not be doing the good some think I am doing; but it's mighty pleasant for unknown friends to entertain such delightful delusions about me! These letters are much too sacred to be printed. One was prompted by "the gentleman from Blooming Grove" who did not like "A Week With the Woodneys," and the writer refers to "that dear family, the Woodneys—I know them well, and am proud of their acquaintance!" Another inclosed a letter for me to address to our missionary; I know it will help to cheer Drusie when it is received; a dollar came with this letter, and a request to know my birthday, which is February 11. And Brother Ely sent me his picture—he is one exception of the distinguished "leaders of our church from whom I have never heard." And I have so many more interesting letters! But no space for them till week after next.

Every one write to me, and let's keep up the interest of the Av. S. letters. Here is our New Honor List: Lillie Fisher, Dunlap, Mo. (Forgot to say what quarter); Ada Miller, Rich Hill, Mo. (tenth quarter); Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia. (sixth); Jean Chambers, Richwood, Ky. (twelfth); Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind. (eighth); Sadie Evelyn Pugsley, Woodbine, Ia. (third); Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo. (ninth); Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn. (nineteenth); Harry Buckley, Lawrenceburg, Ky. (second); Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo. (ninth). A registered letter has just come from J. R. Dallas, from that sentimental town in Oregon, named Kissed, but spelled "Kist" for short. It contained a five dollar gold piece, and $1.35 in silver, for Charlie and Drusie. And, to quote Mr. Dallas, "May the richest blessings of heaven be with them, and you!" Charlie's Education Fund now amounts to $24.45. The two prizes for best kept reports will be awarded as soon after February 11 as possible. Next year (that is, beginning with February 11, 1906, and running to February 11, 1907,) three prizes of my books will be given for the three most regular, and best kept Av. S. reports. Come on!

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
  For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

The Centennial's Dawn.

Under the splendid leadership of President W. E. Garrison, nearly $200,000 of the proposed quarter million endowment fund for Butler University has been pledged.

The January receipts of our National Benevolent Association were $9,948.95 as compared with $6,613.18 for the corresponding period last year. It is hoped this rate of increase will be maintained through the year, and not by the Association only, but also by all our church societies.

Never in its history has the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST grown so rapidly as in the past few months. Our other national papers also report rapidly lengthening circulation lists. This is gratifying news, for it is prophetic of the enlistment of new hosts in the Centennial propaganda who otherwise would have been uninformed concerning this great event, and, therefore, passive in the matter of its consummation. With a Christian paper in every Christian home each family becomes a fortress of strength to all our church enterprises. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is thoroughly committed to the undertaking of achievements making this celebration worthy the fathers of this Restoration and the deeds of their spiritual posterity, and will lend every assistance in its power to our ministers and other leaders planning for a celebration wonderfully impressing the world, both religious and secular, with the virility of this movement.

The Christian-Evangelist and Other Evangelists.

We rejoice that this office is deluged with announcements and reports of protracted meetings, for from the beginning they have largely accounted for the wonderfully rapid numerical growth of our churches, and the many in process to-day are evidence that we are not neglectful of this powerful means of extending our Father's dominion of love and righteousness throughout the earth.

We are aware there is prejudice against revival meetings, but it is based on incidental rather than real reasons—the unlovely personality of some evangelists, sensational methods employed, a greater passion for swelling reports than upbuilding the churches.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has always sought to dispel this prejudice; it believes that abandonment of these evangelistic campaigns would be almost fatal to our hopes of making a great impression on the denominational world through numbers and records of speedy conquests over the hearts of millions through the fervid preaching of the simple Gospel; it hopes the protracted meeting and the godly evangelist will be permanent features of our efforts to save the world.

It is fitting at this time to say while THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been the unswerving advocate of our evangelists, it has carefully studied how to so supplement their work as to make the thousands of recruits they bring into our congregations helpful to the church, and their religion a source of joy and strength to themselves. We recommend to our evangelists the advisability of arranging to have THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST become a regular visitor to all homes wherein dwell those whom they have led to the foot of the cross. Perusing its pages they will not be distracted by violent denunciations of brethren, and by petty litigiousness about meaningless distinctions in statements of belief, but will have their faith built up by its fervent evangelism, its unexcelled actual news service relating to the churches, and through the development of a taste for the best Christian literature, by the aid of its carefully edited columns. Evangelistic reports are cordially welcomed, let pastors also write of the new life and joy they bring to the church, and leave there, and the permanent ministerial assistance we may render toward growth in grace and the knowledge of the Lord Jesus will be gladly accorded.

From What Source?

BY LEROY M. ANDERSON.

On my wall hangs a motto, "It is God that girdeth me with strength," and as I read it I consider how many from the great deeps of their heart can say, "that means me." All true strength has its fountain head in God, physical, mental, or spiritual; especially is this so in the spiritual, and this is the sense in which the Psalmist uttered it. As I see men in the busy rush of life, I often wonder who it is that guides them, from what source they are deriving their learning that is so sure to shape their lives and emotions. As the preacher looks into the faces of his audience he often wonders from what source they have derived their strength during the week, whether they have been going over cheap literature or whether they have been feeding their hungry souls with our scintillating Christian papers. Like begets like, and if the preacher can enter his pulpit full of his message of life as a result of his Bible and Christian papers, how much more is it necessary for the people to read in order to be like-minded. Herein is the secret of many a half-hearted church. How any one can read our papers, and especially THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and not be made to partake more of the Spirit of the Master I can't conceive. Paul said, "I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by me." Brethren, if we would attain unto the high standards which we have erected in the various departments of Christ's church by 1909, we must deepen the consecration of the membership by letting them come into contact with our papers, and we can place no better instrument in their hands than THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST, not to the sacrifice of our home papers, because they are very essential.

The piano sends forth its sweet strains only when the strings and sounding board are made correlative, and many a preacher's efforts and pleas for greater things have fallen dead because of a lack of correlative between him and his audience; their minds have been fed from one source, while his was fed from another. Preaching would be easier could we get our membership to read religious literature. May a Christian paper be found in every Christian home is my prayer.

Howe, Texas.

Allow me to congratulate you on the splendid paper you are giving us each week.

Stanford, Ky. L. M. OMER.

---

My mother is an invalid and has been for years, and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is all the preacher she has, but it gets better each year. MRS. LOUIS HICKAM.

---

I herewith enclose $1.50 for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for another year. Have taken it for twenty years. I am now seventy-seven and must have it the rest of my time. I love the spirit it breathes, and the sweet cheer it brings me in my declining years. MRS. J. P. PROCTOR.

---

Allow me to express my appreciation of your noble efforts in deepening the spiritual life of our people. That THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may prosper in its plea for the unity of a divided church, is the earnest prayer of an humble sister in Christ.

Tina, Mo. HARRIET M. MARSHALL.

Heartily Welcome.

We still think THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the paper of all papers and its advent each week is heralded with joy by us all. May God richly bless you in the coming year and give you strength and health to continue your great work, is my prayer. I wish I could get your splendid paper into all our homes here. H. A. WHEELDON.

Church Extension Testifies.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is always enterprising and the good that it has done for our various missionary, educational and benevolent enterprises can never be estimated until all the accounts are examined by our Master in the eternal world. I hasten to express my prayer that your circulation may be speedily increased to 100,000, in order that we may have more people whose hearts will be fired and whose enthusiasm may be nurtured for the tasks which are before us. I congratulate you upon your determination and hope for its achievement. G. W. MUCKLEY.

Congo Reform.

The Congo Reform Association is preparing a monster petition to be presented to Congress in the interest of an international movement to suppress the abuses and inhumanities of King Leopold's regime in the Congo Free State. The facts in the case are now fairly beyond dispute. Not only returning missionaries, but government officials, and finally a commission appointed by King Leopold himself, confirm the awful stories that are told of the reign of terror and cruelty, the purpose of which is to compel the natives to collect rubber and thus pay tribute to the Belgian king, who owns and rules the Congo State. The United States was a party to the Berlin conference which created the Congo State, gave it the misleading title of "Free State," and turned it over to Leopold to rule. His rule has been marked by the greed of the most grasping merchant, the cruelty of the lowest slave-driver, and the power of an absolute monarch. Mark Twain has written a booklet called "King Leopold's Soliloquy," which conveys much information in highly readable form. It is published by the Congo Reform Association, Boston, at 25 cents, in the interest of its fund. The leaders of this reform movement include some of the most prominent and respected citizens of the republic.

The Coal Strike.

After many conferences between the United Mine Workers and the coal operators, there has been no agreement on the terms which shall be in force after April 1, and there is increasing prospect that upon that date a strike will begin which will be one of the greatest strikes in the history of American industry—perhaps the very greatest strike in all history. If it comes at all, it will involve both the anthracite and the bituminous fields. The miners' union is collecting a three-million-dollar strike fund. The civil authorities of Pennsylvania are equipping a force of special constabulary to keep the peace and protect life and property. The operators are trying to get as large stocks of coal ahead as possible. The producers of anthracite have stored up immense quantities especially in eastern Pennsylvania, and it is said that they can stand a siege of a year without serious embarrassment or loss. It is gratifying to learn that their plan is to keep the price of their product about normal, in order that public opinion may not demand a speedy settlement in favor of the strikers. The visible stock of bituminous is very much less, and it is estimated that, in case a general strike is declared, the shortage will be felt within two weeks. The case is not yet to be regarded as altogether hopeless, and many coal men still believe that the matter will be adjusted without a strike.

The Death of Wong Kai Kah.

News has come of the sudden death, in Japan, of Wong Kai Kah. Mr. Wong was Chinese vice commissioner to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. Since the commissioner, Prince Pu Lun, was a purely titular dignitary, Mr. Wong did the work. He did it gracefully and well, and found opportunity to make a great many friends. We have not seen—not even in Minister Wu—a finer type of the Chinese gentleman in whom the learning and culture of the western world met and mingled with the repose and courtesy of the Orient. He came to this country in youth; was educated at Yale. The democratic traditions of that institution made some impression on him. He told the writer that on one occasion his uncle, an old mandarin, who visited him in New Haven, was greatly scandalized to find that he blacked his own boots. In self-defense he said to his uncle: "Why, sir, every man in Yale blacks his own boots." His English style was clear and polished, and he had a good grasp of political and commercial affairs. But this word is written in memory of him as a gentleman whose manners and morals were alike admirable and whose capacity for friendship gave many of our fellow-countrymen a higher opinion of the Chinese people.

Greek as a Universal Language.

The hearts of classicists ought to be warmed by the news of a proposal which has come from Dr. Achilles Rose (note the "Achilles"), a professor in the Post Graduate Medical School. He has been advocating a reform and complete Hellenization of medical nomenclature, and now he takes a bold step in advance by proposing the adoption of Greek as a universal language for all scholarly and scientific purposes, and especially for use at all international gatherings of learned men. He insists that modern Greek is as easily learned as French or German, and that the language is appropriate to the proposed use, since much of the technical vocabulary of modern science is based upon Greek words. As we were saying in a paragraph on this page a few weeks ago, the suggestion to adopt a simplified form of Latin for this purpose has often been made. Is it possible that we may yet see Greek and Latin, or either one of them, rehabilitated in the esteem of this utilitarian age and enrolled among the "practical" studies?

Football and Civilization.

It was suggested that a recent gift of $150,000 to Columbia University was due to the fact that football had been abolished at that institution. Whatever the reason that determined the gift, we are glad that it is to be applied for the establishment of a professorship on the origin and growth of civilization. The purpose of the gift and the reason for its bestowal are directly in line. The game of football as played at our universities can have nothing to do with the growth of civilization; rather is it a return to barbarism in its methods and in the debasing of all the best elements of true sport. It is interesting to note in this connection that the faculty of Harvard, our greatest university, has decided definitely that no intercollegiate football games shall be played by Harvard teams this year.

Unrest in China.

Telegrams announce the looting and destruction of a mission building at a point called Chang Pu, near Amoy, China. This is in Fuchien province and the Presbyterians of England have the principal mission station there. The missionaries, it is stated, took refuge in the palace of the local governor and the revolutionists marched toward the important port of Chang Chow. There seems to be a great deal of unrest among the Chinese at the present time, and in some districts this has been noticeable for the past year. Speaking the other evening at a dinner in New York, Tuan Fong, viceroy of the province to which we have referred, paid the following tribute to American missions and missionaries:

"We take pleasure this evening in bearing testimony to the part taken by American missionaries in promoting the progress of the Chinese people. They have borne the light of western civilization into every nook and corner of the empire. They have rendered inestimable service to China by the laborious task of translating into the Chinese language religious and scientific works of the west. They help us to bring happiness and comfort to the poor and the suffering by the establishment of hospitals and schools. The awakening of China, which now seems to be at hand, may be traced in no small measure to the hand of the missionary. For this service you will find China not ungrateful."

But he made it clear that it would be wise for all missionary boards to discourage interference of their workers in the law courts when their converts are interested parties in the suits. There are signs that the anti-American movement is increasing rather than abating, but the chief reason for this is the way we have treated China and the Chinese, and not any particular action of mission workers.

We have subjected the Chinese visiting this country to all kinds of restraints and have done much to prevent trade relations except where they were distinctly favorable to ourselves. Undeniably the situation is grave, and it is reported that our government is not satisfied with the attitude of the Chinese government. Chinese officials, it is averred, have not done all they could to suppress the boycott, the movement which is largely responsible for the present conditions. Our war department is making preparations with a view to any possible necessity for military action.

Christian Union: An Historical Study.

I. THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

5. Unity of the Early Church Imperiled.

We have seen what a strain was put upon the unity of the Church in the apostolic age by the difference which arose concerning the relation of Christianity to the law of Moses. As the Church spread over a larger territory and included a greater variety of people, other differences of more or less importance developed, of which we can see the evidences in the apostolic letters to the churches. We are not to think of the unity of the Church in that age as consisting of perfect uniformity of opinion, of methods of worship, or forms of organization. We have but to study the internal history of the Church of that period to know that such was far from being its real condition. In his history of the early Church, Dr. Mosheim says of the Church of the first century:

"The Christian Church was scarcely formed when in different places there started up certain pretended reformers, who, not satisfied with the simplicity of that religion which was taught by the apostles, meditated changes of doctrine and worship, and set up a new religion drawn from their own licentious imaginations. This we learn from the writings of the apostles, and particularly from the epistles of St. Paul, where we find that some were inclined to force the doctrines of Christianity into conformity with the philosophical systems they had adopted, while others were as studious to blend with these doctrines the opinions, customs and traditions of the Jews. Several of these are mentioned by the apostles, such as Hymeneus, Alexander, Philetus, Hermogenes, Demas and Diotrephes; though the four last are to be considered as apostates from the truth rather than as corrupters of it."*

Among other false doctrines in the apostolic age was Gnosticism, though it developed itself more fully in the post-apostolic age. Reference to this sect and its false teachings may be seen in Paul's letters to the Ephesians and Colossians. Among the false teachers of this period was Simon Magus, whom ancient writers describe as exerting a wide and pernicious influence after the experience recorded in the Acts of Apostles. Menander and Cerenthus are other names mentioned by Mosheim as teachers of false doctrines during the apostolic age. The Pauline epistles have acquainted us with certain questions which arose among the churches in relation to the eating of meat offered to idols and to other idolatrous practices. This class of questions usually arose in churches composed of both Jews and Gentiles. Where no vital principle was involved the Apostle always advised the application of the law of love and the principle of mutual forbearance, and especially that the strong should bear the infirmities of the weak.

More serious differences, however, arose in the church at Corinth, where they assumed the form of incipient divisions. The root of these differences seems to have been personal preferences. Most church historians are agreed in associating the rise of these differences with the visit of Apollos, the eloquent Alexandrian Jew, who visited that city. "The immediate occasion of this factional development," says Dr. McGiffert, in his "Apostolic Age," "is not far to seek. It was evidently due to the presence of Apollos, who had come to Corinth not long after Paul's departure from the city, and had labored there for some time" (Acts 18:27). Concerning the local situation there, Paul says (1 Cor. 1:12): "Now this I mean, that each of you sayeth, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ." In his "Life of St. Paul" (p. 130) James Stalker describes this factional movement at Corinth as follows: "The body of the members was split up into four theological factions. Some called themselves after Paul himself. These treated the scruples of the weaker brethren about meats and other things with scorn. Others took the name of Apollonians from Apollos, an eloquent teacher from Alexandria, who visited Corinth between Paul's second and third journeys. These were the philosophical party; they denied the doctrine of the resurrection because it was absurd to suppose that the scattered atoms of the dead body could ever be reunited again. The third party took the name of Peter, or Cephas, as in their Hebrew purism they preferred to call him. These were narrow-minded Jews, who objected to the liberality of Paul's views. The fourth party affected to be above all parties and called themselves simply Christians. Like many despisers of the sects since then who have used the name of Christian in the same way, these were the most bitterly sectarian of all and rejected Paul's authority with malicious scorn."

We can quite well understand how a party animated by a purely sectarian spirit might use the name of Christ to accomplish its factional purpose. Such a thing is not unknown in our day. It may well be questioned, however, whether this statement by Dr. Stalker, which we think is held by a number of other Bible scholars, is justified by the facts in the case at Corinth. Paul's treatment of the situation does not seem to favor that view. We are inclined, on the whole, to agree with Dr. McGiffert as to the true nature of this alleged fourth party in Corinth. He does not believe there was any fourth party at Corinth. "Had there been," he says, "Paul could hardly have spoken in the unguarded way he does in his epistle to those who were Christ's." After mentioning other objections to the view Dr. McGiffert adds:

"But the decisive argument against the existence of any Christ-party in the Corinthian church is to be found in 1 Cor. 3:22, sq. In that passage, at the close of his discussion of the divisions, and at the very climax of his denunciation of the party spirit, Paul speaks of three parties, but says nothing whatever of the fourth, or Christ-party, which, according to the common theory, was the worst and most dangerous of all. And more than that, he plays directly into the hands of that party, if it existed, by exhorting all the Corinthians to range themselves under the banner of Christ. 'All things are yours,' he cries, 'whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas; . . . all are yours: and ye are Christ's.' In view of these considerations, it is difficult to suppose that there was a fourth faction in Corinth, calling itself by the name of Christ. And indeed, when carefully examined, the passage in which the parties are referred to is seen itself to imply the existence of only three. The words in verse 13, 'Is Christ divided?' indicate that the fault of the Corinthians was not that they were rejecting Christ, and substituting another leader for him, but that they were dividing him. The implication is, that they all regarded themselves as alike under the banner of Christ, but that some were Pauline Christians; some Apollos-Christians; some Cephas-Christians. It seems clear, therefore, that the fourth term of verse 12 was not, like the first three terms, a party watchword, but that it constituted the cry of other Corinthian disciples who belonged to none of the three factions, and who, disgusted at the display of party spirit, declared against all such divisions and announced their allegiance to Christ alone. With such a course Paul himself must have been in hearty sympathy. It was, in fact, just what he exhorted all the others to do. 'Do not divide Christ,' he says in effect. 'We, Paul and Apollos and Cephas, whom ye are making the leaders of your parties, are only builders; Christ is the one foundation upon whom we all build; we are all Christ's, and ye are all Christ's.' "†

But whatever may have been the cause and nature of these parties in the Corinthian church, there is no evidence that either Peter, Paul, or Apollos were directly responsible for such division. They were simply the occasion of the development of these differences. No doubt they represented different types of mind and each had his own peculiar way of presenting the truth, but they were all loyal to a common Master. These parties never came to an open rupture, though it was perhaps only prevented by the timely and vigorous protest of Paul. These party cries, "I am of Paul;" "I am of Cephas;" "I am of Apollos," however, were prophetic of future divisions which were destined to mar the unity of Christ's Church.

Proposed Basis of Federation in Oregon.

Some one has sent us a clipping from some paper containing a "Proposed Basis of Federation of Religious Bodies in Oregon," together with an "open letter" addressed to the "Brethren in Oregon" by Bro. J. M. Morris, of Eugene. The "open letter" of Brother Morris is an "open" war on Church Federation. The Basis of Federation was sent out to the religious people of the state with the request that it be carefully read and that objections to it be pointed out, if there were any, and something substituted for the objectionable part. Brother Morris objects to the whole idea of federation, and offers as a substitute for it, "that a state committee composed of three or more members from each religious body in the state be organized, whose duty it shall be to meet annually and search sincerely and prayerfully for the true and Scriptural basis of Christian unity," etc. Jut how long it would take such a committee, meeting annually to discuss Christian union, to unite the people of God our readers may imagine. It is the old method of trying to argue ourselves into unity, or to prepare beforehand a platform of unity, instead of going to work together, as far as we can, and advance toward a more perfect unity as fast as the way opens up before us. To adopt Brother Morris' suggestion would be to go backward instead of forward. It is not so much a lack of knowledge of how to unite, that is the trouble, as the unwillingness to put to practice what we do know, and to make some proper use of the unity to which we have already attained.

There are some things in the proposed basis of federation submitted to the religious bodies of Oregon to which, if we were in the state, we would file objection and suggest amendments. The chief objection which we see to it is a phrase which occurs in article V: "The recommendations of the Executive Committee shall be binding upon the denominations forming the federation, except that appeal may be taken to the Council, whose decisions shall be final." This seems to us to conflict with the basis of federation adopted at the Inter-Church Conference in New York City to be submitted to the various churches for their approval. One of the items in that basis is, "This Federal Council shall have no authority over the constituent bodies adhering to it; but its province shall be limited to the expression of its counsel and the recommending of a course of action in matters of common interest to the churches, local councils, and individual Christians. It has no authority to draw up a common creed, or form of government or worship, or in any way to limit the autonomy of the Christian bodies adhering to it." This is eminently wise. The moral influence of reason and of facts is all the authority any council can have, because it is all the church has. If we were in Oregon we should enter heartily into the movement for federation, and insist on the amendment of the article to which we have referred, to bring it into harmony with the article we have quoted from the plan of federation adopted in New York, to be recommended to the various "Christian bodies." Again, the plan of federation submitted for Oregon churches seems to us to attempt to outline, in too great detail, beforehand, the work of the federation. Much will have to be left to practical experience. But it will avail nothing for brethren to stand on the outside and denounce federation wholesale.

The great bugaboo in the way of those who oppose federation in all the religious bodies—for it has its opponents in all the denominations—is that the effort to prevent overlapping, or a surplus of churches in some localities, with a dearth in another, is that it is going to prevent "our church," or "our denomination," from going where it pleases and establishing a church wherever it makes up its mind to. Now, nothing whatever is proposed in this line but that brethren shall take counsel together on a matter which so vitally concerns the progress of the kingdom, and hear what arguments may be offered, bearing upon the subject. In the last analysis, each local church or religious body must decide for itself what its duty is in reference to any given case. That point is made very clear in the correspondence between Dr. E. B. Sanford, the national secretary of federation, and the Editor of this paper, as printed at the close of the published address by the Editor on the subject of Church Federation—a pamphlet, by the way, which just now ought to have a very wide reading in view of the present discussion. We ought to be concerned quite as much as other people about the acknowledged evil of multiplying churches unnecessarily in some sections of our cities, while others are practically destitute. Brother Morris' idea that the adoption of the method of co-operation among the churches whereby they regard each other as co-workers, rather than as enemies, will "provide for the revival, perpetuation, and extension of denominationalism, and will thereby hinder true and Scriptual Christian unity," is a prophecy which has no foundation in fact, and is contrary to all the experience of the past. More progress toward real unity has been made in the last quarter of a century, during the period of interdenominational co-operation through Sunday-school, Y. M. C. A., Christian Endeavor and other forms of co-operative activity, than in centuries before, when the policy was that of hostile isolation.

We know Brother Morris well, and love him, but we sincerely hope that the brethren of Oregon will not follow his mistaken counsel. They are under no obligation to agree to any article that will prevent them from being perfectly loyal to their convictions of truth and duty. Federation does not ask any such a surrender. But let them go into the council with their brethren of other religious bodies, as friends of the movement, and make their protest earnestly and fraternally against any provision that is likely to be a barrier to co-operation. Our brethren in Oregon may be assured that the churches in that state, as in every state, are going to co-operate as Christian churches for the advancement of the kingdom of God. If they prefer to stand aloof from this great union movement that is setting in like an ocean current they will prove themselves untrue to the ideals of our Fathers, and will reap the most disastrous results.

Notes and Comments.

We are glad to publish in another place the resolutions adopted by the ministers' alliance of Kansas City and vicinity touching the living question of federation of churches. It is gratifying to know that so large a group of brethren, including a number of the most representative men of the brotherhood, should act with such unanimity upon a subject which now so vitally concerns us. There will be attempts, as there have already been, to prejudice the minds of the brethren by quoting ill-advised expressions from this and that journal, as if the papers quoted were authority on this question. Why should we oppose federation because somebody should utter an erroneous idea concerning it? We are not so unwise as that in regard to Christian union, in its ultimate form. When somebody says, "Christian union means uniformity, and we must all think alike," we reply, "It means no such thing," and continue our advocacy of it. Why not pursue the same course concerning federation, which is not the binding of churches to do something they can not conscientiously do, but is co-operation of churches, at the present time, in so far as it is practicable without the sacrifice of truth or consience? The latter is precisely as Scriptural as the former. They are the same in kind, differing only in degree. We commend the action of this alliance of ministers, and hope the example will be followed by ministerial alliances in other cities and states. The question at issue affects so deeply our future welfare that we can not afford to be indifferent to it. We can no more oppose the practical use of such unity as we already have, than we can oppose an ideal unity that is yet in the future, and be guiltless.

It is a strange way of forecasting the future which some among us have who profess to believe that we will never consent to federation with other evangelical religious bodies, when our young people are co-operating with those of other religious bodies in Christian Endeavor work. He knows little of the broadening influence of co-operation with other religious forces, who thinks it possible that those now being trained in our Christian Endeavor Societies are going to refuse federation with other Christian bodies in extending the kingdom of God, when they are older. If isolation is our policy we should have begun with our young people and formed them into an independent organization separate from Christian Endeavor. But that is not and never will be our policy. And what of the foreign field? The missionaries see the need of union and are looking to federation as a first step.

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is interesting to notice how much more liberal Jesus was in his views than any of his disciples. One of the most instructive incidents in the life of Jesus is that recorded by both Mark and Luke, where John said to Jesus, "Teacher, we saw one casting out demons in thy name; and we forbade him, because he followed not with us." And Jesus said, "Forbid him not; for there is no man who shall do a mighty work in my name, and be able quickly to speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is for us." Now, John had no objection to having demons cast out of people, but he thought no one had a right to engage in that business who was not of their company. If we knew John's mental processes we would find, probably, that he reasoned in this way: "It is the special prerogative of Jesus and those who follow him to cast out demons and otherwise resist the work of the devil. Now, if every one who desires to do so is permitted to do this kind of work, will it not undermine the influence of Jesus, and incidentally, of course, that of his disciples, and what advantage will we have over these outside workers?" How characteristic of human nature! And how like Jesus it was to rebuke John's narrowness, with a "Forbid him not"! Was he not doing his work in Christ's name? If so, he could not very well speak evil of Christ. It is as if he had said, "Let him alone, John. He is doing the same work we are doing, and he is doing it in my name. If there be some things irregular in his methods, or even in his doctrine, these things will probably cure themselves in time, as he evidently reveres my name and authority; for he that is not against us is for us." The author of "Ecce Homo" says that this reply of Jesus, if it were alone, marks him as infinitely superior to all the religious teachers of his time. There is in it a breadth of spirit and of vision that lifts him far above the limitations of mere partisan teachers and leaders.

What would Jesus say and do if he were here in the world to-day, touching the question of co-operation among his followers? If he were associated with the religious movement having its origin in the early part of the last century for the unity of his disciples according to his own prayer, would he refuse to recognize those Christian bodies who have accepted party names and have made for themselves party creeds, and refuse to co-operate with them because of these errors? Who that has studied the character of Jesus can possibly believe that he would act thus? Such a course would be entirely out of harmony with all that we know of his largeness of heart, his breadth of vision, and his capacity for seeing the good there is in men, and, by recognizing that good, to seek to make them better. All that we need, therefore, to help us to solve some of the problems we are now discussing is to bring the mind and character of Jesus into the discussion, and let his voice be heard and his example be followed. There is absolutely no chance of our going wrong if we will allow the spirit of Christ to control us in our attitude toward others who "follow not with us." To apply the principles of Jesus to present-day problems is the manifest duty of the hour, and it is the constant task of the Church. The moment we are unwilling to allow him to be the supreme Arbiter in all these questions, no matter how much the application of his principles would cut across our preconceived ideas and prejudices, that moment we cease to be disciples of Christ, and should abandon the name. He who taught his disciples in the long ago the "new commandment," to love one another even as he had loved them, would, beyond any conceivable doubt, urge love as vastly more potent than logic in restoring unity to his divided Church.

But some will say, no doubt, "Of course it is right and safe to follow the leading of Jesus in all these questions, but the difficulty is to know what Christ would have us do in relation to this problem of federation, or a closer union among his followers." But if our hearts are attuned to the infinite, we can not remain in doubt as to what attitude Christ would have us take toward other followers of his, who, from our point of view, may be in error on some points, but who, in the most vital and fundamental things, are one with us and one with him. In the first place, we have his prayer that all who believe on him may be one, even as he and the Father are one, that the world may believe. We know, then, that he is in favor of the unity of his followers, and that too in spite of the fact, which he must have foreknown, that differences would arise between them. But we are not compelled to go back nineteen centuries to ascertain the mind of Christ on this subject. What is his own attitude to-day toward the various religious bodies of Christendom? Is he not blessing them, and working with them, and in them, and giving success to their efforts just in proportion to their faith in and loyalty to him? If that, then, is the attitude of him whom we call our Master toward these religious bodies, need we be in doubt for a moment as to what attitude he would have us take toward them? There are some questions that are perplexing and doubtful, but this is not one of them. It is a simple, plain matter of subordinating our sectarian pride and prejudices to the manifest will and example of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Master.

"The call of the wild!" Did you ever hear it? Ever and anon it steals into our editorial sanctum like the music of far-off evening bells. It is well-nigh irresistible. It makes its appeal to tired nerves and reduced vital energies, It opens up a vision of wild, free life somewhere in God's great out-of-doors, where the sun shines and soft vernal breezes blow. It spreads its map of broad and sunny plains, and distant mountain ranges, overarched with clear skies, and invites the weary to rest. Under the magic spell of this "call of the wild" one can hear the music and see the flash of pearly streams in mountain canons, catch glimpses of the wild life of the desert and the mountains, feel the thrill of freedom from the restraints of city life, and the routine of office work, and he is ready to make terms with the railroads at once to carry him hence. Such a call has been heard by the Easy Chair, and it seems to come floating into our sanctum from that great, undeveloped empire known as The Southwest. It offers the attraction of new scenes, new phases of life, untrodden paths in the wilderness, and, over all and enveloping all, a bright, healthful clime. We are all familiar with the man of the parable who had "bought a field and must needs go out and see it." Well, a rich uncle of ours bought a large "field" many years ago out in the great southwest, and he is now about to confer upon it the dignity of statehood, and we "must needs go out and see it." How do we know whether Arizona and New Mexico should be admitted into the Union as a single state until we go out and examine the territories and see just what the situation is?

And so our Easy Chair readers need not be surprised if they should see in the next installment of this department evidences of a migration to the southwest. Just where, we can not tell. Like Abraham of old, we go out, not knowing exactly whither we go. In fact, our life may be somewhat nomadic for a time, after the manner of the Bedouin tribes of the Arabian desert, "dwelling in tents like Isaac and Jacob." What we want is to escape brick walls, granitoid pavements, electric lights (and bills), and all the other conventionalities of a complex civilization, and get acquainted with God's pure air and sunshine, and "just loaf, and invite our souls," as Mr. Riley would say. Of course, however, this "loafing" will have to be taken with a bit of allowance, for there is that editorial serial that is only just getting well under way and must needs go on, and of course the "Easy Chair" will have to appear weekly, even though it be sometimes in an abridged form. But as to correspondents, will they not kindly wait, unless their message is very urgent, until we get back? By the time the bluebirds are singing and the buds are bursting under the influence of the early April sun and showers we hope to be back. The caravan, as it leaves St. Louis, will consist of the Editor and his wife, and the President of Butler College, who likewise has heard "the call of the wild," reinforced by the advice of his physician. But the tribe may increase as we strike the plains, and we may form a company of campers large enough to successfully resist any attack from coyotes or savages. As to Church federation, we may have to "butt-in" occasionally if the brethren do not go right, but for the time being our plan is to form a federation with the sunshine and the open air, with the plains, the valleys, the streams, and with all of nature's children that will be friendly with us. We will recognize their orthodoxy if they will recognize ours!

On the Way to Christian Union in China

Christian Endeavor in China.

By Frank Garrett.

Christian Endeavor is growing rapidly in China. This was evidenced by the size and excellence of the National Christian Endeavor Convention recently held in Ningpo. More than 1,000 were in attendance each day. The hundreds who attended the early morning prayer-meetings, the Bible study classes, the sectional conferences, indeed all the appointments of the convention, proved the breadth of interest and the general wide-awakeness of the Chinese Endeavorers.

Many foreign countries were represented. Reverend Harada, the president of Christian Endeavor in Japan, gave a good account of the life of the Christian Endeavor in his country and their interest in Christian work in China.

Christian Endeavor is now established in all but four of the provinces in China. The National Society has received reports from 344 local societies. These are found in twenty-four different missionary organizations. About 15,000 Chinese Christians are using the Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting topics and attending the Endeavor meetings. The movement is spreading rapidly into country places. The Christian Endeavor movement is destined to have a great influence in uniting and advancing the interests of the growing Church in China.

The three highest officials in the city, the governor of the province, the prefect and the magistrate, attended an afternoon tea with the convention. They then stayed for the evening session. Fortunately it was the "good citizenship meeting." They listened eagerly, followed the Bible readings, of which there were many, with avidity, and were well pleased. They were each pleased to have an opportunity to address the convention. One after the other they exhorted all to good living and faithfulness to the teachings just heard. The magistrate held up the Bible and urged that it be read and obeyed.

Never before had so large a delegate body of Christians been thus addressed and encouraged in their Christian life by high officials in China.

The next day these officials invited all the missionaries of the convention, about fifty, to a feast which was a very enjoyable social affair.

The F. C. M. S. was represented by Miss Lyon and Mr. Garrett. The former gave an excellent address before the women's conference. The latter spoke to the convention on "The Christian Endeavor fundamentals and their application in China." The next national convention meets in Nanking in 1908.

Peking Federation Conference.

By F. E Meigs.

Having been appointed by the mission as delegate to the conference, I decided to avail myself of the privilege of attending. I traveled the overland route, going by steamer to Hankow, and thence by rail to Peking. Five days were required to complete the journey from Hankow. This was owing to the fact that trains do not as yet run at night. This custom will be discontinued as soon as the Yellow river bridge is open to traffic, which will be within a few months, and then the journey will require only about two days.

The conference was, on the whole, quite as great a success as was anticipated. The representative attendance was not large, but quite general. The work that had been done by the committee was most thorough and satisfactory, and there was really little to do but to approve the action of the committee. It was seen from their reports that the desire for union and federation is widespread and enthusiastic throughout the whole of China. There was no dissent in the conference from the generally accepted idea that federation, if not organic union, is desirable and feasible. There was some difference of opinion as to how far this federation should extend, and how it shall be brought about, but all agreed that the time has come for steps to be taken in a practical way. Resolutions were adopted looking to immediately carrying into effect some scheme of federation as an object lesson to be presented to the general conference in 1907, which, of course, must be the final source of appeal. The results of the committee's correspondence show clearly that a large majority of the missionaries in China are agreed already on common terms for the church and for chapels and also for God and the Holy Spirit. If only this much can be accomplished soon, it will be a most important step in the right direction. It is most remarkable that the terms agreed upon are those that our mission have used from the first. This shows that the spirit of our movement is in the line of progress, and we should be very happy. In the near future the Chinese Church will be known only as the Church of Christ, and the designations over our chapel doors that have in them the idea of division will be changed so as to blot out these distinctions. Then if the long and serious discussion about the terms to be used for God and the Holy Spirit can be brought to an end, as I believe it soon will be, there will surely be great rejoicing. With these barriers removed, it can not be long, it seems to me and to most of those who attended the conference that it will not be long, until there will be in reality only one Christian Church in China. The report of the conference will be published so that all may know the results in detail. We may look for great things in the direction of union at the general conference.

Devotion to Heathenism

By William Remfry Hunt

While recently itinerating in the Chu Cheo district, in Anhuei province, it was my privilege to witness an instance of remarkable devotion to heathenism. A Buddhist devotee, travel-stained, footsore and wearied—a would-be hermit priest of more than fifty summers—was traveling alone on a mission to Tai-sham, the high, sacred mountain in the province of Shantung.

One of the strangest things about the old, rugged pilgrim was his patriarchal and dignified bearing. He might have passed for an incarnation of the Hindu Shak-yamuni Gautama. The priest was well marked with the insignia of his fraternity, and on his stolid, yellow face could be read the expression of determination, far away hope, and almost heroism. He paid scant attention to my salutation, for—

> "The vows
> Of heaven were on his heart; nor would he stay
> To chance his hope on other creeds, or play
> With shadows—till the end."

It was a picture for an artist or a theme for a poet. With the golden sunset glow behind the temples on the hills, and the quiet evening landscape, the scene was thought-creating and solemn. In his hand he carried a miniature table, holding an incense urn. Around his neck, and over his loosely folded gown, were beads and seals of secret religious significance. With dignified steps he moves one, two, three, four, five, six paces and then makes a most reverential prostration. This was to be repeated each step of the pilgrimage, six steps and a prostration, for the thousand mile penance tour.

Occasionally the prostrations were longer and the prayers more fervent. Incense was lit and kept burning. It was impossible for me to leave the scene. As he rose from one of these bowings, I politely repeated my salutation, and gaining his confidence by reference to the fact that his religion and mine were not native to China, there was touched a responsive chord in his heart, and we were soon engaged in conversation.

The aged man of Asia and the Christian missionary at least credited each other with sincerity. He told me that his task of thus slowly measuring "worship steps," for three years, through cold and heat, sunshine and storm, from sunrise to sunset, until the sacred mountain in the eastern hills was reached, would secure to him a high rank in the Buddhist fraternity, and a place in the shining ranks of the immortals. With the utmost delicacy, and with the winged prayer to God for guidance and wisdom, we spoke to him of the compassionate love of God and of man's need for salvation. The idea of a mediator (the middleman) arrested him, as well as the story of the character and mission of Christ, as the fully accredited Savior; and as the light seemed at times to dawn on his clouded mind, our hopes were almost raised that he might "turn again and believe"; but he was clinging with tenacious pride to the rites, ceremonies, symbols and traditions of the fathers. He had set his face toward the sacred mountain—where the fathers worshiped—and, to that purpose, and with a persistency and consecration that would put to shame so much of our nominal Christian endeavor, this heathen devotee pressed forward, allured by the fantastic Will-o'-the-wisp lights of pagan creation.

THE GREAT BUDDHA.

There are said to be eight million gods and goddesses in Japan alone. It has been called "The Land of Gods." The largest idol in Japan is the great Buddha, a picture of which appears above. This big bronze idol is fifty-four feet high. At the right of the image is a small door by which you can go inside to a stairway. Thousands of people climb up these stairs to worship at the great shrine placed just back of the big eyes. Buddhism, or the worship of Buddha, has millions of followers in other lands. In China there are 13 Buddhist sects, and it is to this god that Brother Hunt refers in his article on this page. Buddhism is found in Tibet under the name of Lamism. In Ceylon and Burmah it is a mere ethical cult.

Living in a monastery, near Hankow, where we visited her, only a month since, lives an aged Buddhist nun. Lao-ni-gu is ninety years of age. She is known all over the central provinces of China. Her history also is one of unprecedented devotion to her cult. In early life she became a nun, took her vows and entered the monastery. Almost fanatical heroism in penances and journeyings distinguished her. On one occasion when she thought the idol doubted her sincerity she called upon him, with an oath, to test her, even to the mutilation of her body. All at once, said the people, the idol took a deep breath, and commanded, saying, "If you are a true child of Nirvana take a knife and strike off your right hand." The woman, startled by this drastic action, called again to see if the idol actually meant it. The deluded masses, under the influence of demonology, heard the voice again, and in stern tones, she was commanded to cut it off.

At this juncture, many interfered, thinking to appease the idol. But Lao-ni-gu was taking her religion at the cost price, and for her there was to be no looking back. Raising the cleaver, a rude and heavy knife, she struck a steady blow, only half severing the hand from the wrist, the blood being spilled all around the altar. In anguish and pain, she cried, "Is this enough?" When assured that absolute obedience was required, she raised the bloody knife again, and with a well aimed blow, and a piercing scream, she laid the mutilated hand upon the floor of the temple.

It is a quarter of a century since that deed was committed, but the hand still hangs about her neck, suspended by a red cord. She had preserved the hand in rice alcohol, and dried it in the sun and, threading it with the silken cord, has worn it ever since.

Go! and Lo! By David H. Shields

In my judgment the predominating desire of the church to-day is to have a keener realization of the presence of Christ. In other days the church has lusted after temporal power, but now she hungers for power with God. Once she thought that public worship was an end in itself, but now she knows that it is only a means to clear the vision of the spirit, so that it may more fully discern spiritual things. Once her eyes were wholly upon "the mansion in the skies," but now they run to and fro throughout the whole earth seeking those who are willing to be helped Godward.

That the church is yearning for the presence of Christ is evidenced by the widespread and ever deepening interest in a reunited church and in evangelism. When we love a man we strive to do those things that are in harmony with his will. The will of Christ is that his people be one, and that they make disciples of all the nations of the earth. "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments."

We are slowly learning the lesson that if we wish the presence of Christ we must go where Christ is. Once men sought Christ in the cloister, but they found him not. Once they looked for him in scholastic creeds, but they looked in vain. Once they sought his face in the flames that lifted the spirit of the martyr to its eternal home with God, and listened for his voice in the cry of the tortured saint, but they saw not, and they heard not.

To-day we know that where men need God most, there Christ is. Wherever men are hungry and thirsty in spirit, are not clothed in righteousness, are sin-sick, are imprisoned by ignorance and superstition, there Christ may be found. The men and the church that visit these children of God who have gone astray and are in want shall see Christ. Christ is on the burning sands of India. He is in the jungles of Africa. He may be found on the lonely isles of the sea.

If the church desires the presence of Christ it must go. "Go ye," is the command. Back of this command is the power of Almighty God. It is as if the thousand pounds of power behind the steel projectile in the great gun said to it as the fuse was lighted, "Go ye!" It is as if nature said to the lightning's flash as she hurled it to the earth, "Go ye!" It is as if the dynamite said to the mountain as it rends asunder its rocky sides, "Go ye!" "All authority hath been given to me in heaven and on earth. . . Go ye therefore," were the words of the Son of God as he was about to ascend to his throne.

Whenever the church has obeyed this command Christ has been present. History recounts no grander achievements than the triumphs of the church during her early life when she was obeying her Founder's command to "Go into all the world and preach." Few were the years from Calvary till Pan was dead and Olympian Jove was hurled from his high seat. During these years the church was united, vigorous, joyful and irresistible. Soon the heralds of the Cross were proclaiming the glad news on the streets of Antioch, Ephesus, Corinth and Rome, that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to die for it, that whosoever believed in him should not perish but have everlasting life. These were the days when the church was mighty. When she prayed the earth shook; prison doors were opened and shackles were struck from the feet and hands of his servants; tyrants and mobs were rendered helpless; empires were unhinged, and darkness fled before the light.

But when the churches ceased to go, they no longer had the presence of Christ. God struck the church at Jerusalem and scattered it far and wide. He gave the churches of Palestine, Arabia, North Africa and Asia Minor over to the sword of the Saracen, who placed the minaret where the church steeple once stood Division dissipated her force and darkness settled down over her like a pall. Death stared her in the face. Men pronounced her dead and wrote her epitaph. But again she heard the voice of her Master saying, "Go!" She responded, and the door of her sepulcher was flung open, and she exchanged her grave clothes for garments of light and victory.

As well put a lark under a bell-jar in a dark room and exhaust the air with an air-pump and expect the lark to sing, as to expect a non-missionary church to rejoice in the presence of God. The lark must have sunshine and boundless air in order to call forth its matchless song. So must the church have the whole wide world for its heart to throb in if it is to beat with joy.

The evidence of a going stream is life and beauty along its way. Its banks are covered by flowers, and trees flourish from whose boughs the birds send forth their glad songs, and the fields are made fertile and golden at harvest time. As the stream on its journey to the distant ocean marks its way by life and beauty, so does the church that goes to the uttermost parts of the earth. It leaves behind it better husbands and wives; more sacred marriages and happier homes; better business men and statesmen. The flowers of sympathy, long-suffering, self-control, and love beautify and make fragrant the banks of the stream of salvation, while asylums and colleges send their roots down into the life-giving waters.

If the church ever fully learns to go, the saloon and the joint and the corrupt office holder will go also. A thousand evils will be banished from the earth. The hand that guides the plow and holds the throttle and the one that rocks the cradle will be a truer hand when the church learns that the spirit of Christ should enter into all the activities of life and go unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

Let the church once get the enthusiasm that comes from world conquest for Christ, let it catch the epic sweep of its sacrifices and victories, and it will shake the earth on its onward march and fill heaven with glad hosannas, because of the wanderers that have returned home. It will raise the church out of pettiness and provincialism and every other "ism" to the one great passion of saving men. In place of ordering its life entirely by the present it will step into harmony with the universal and the eternal. Then shall go up the final shout of victory, "As it were the voice of a great multitude, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." "Go ye therefore . . . and lo I am with you all the days, even unto the consummation of the age.

Abolishing Wife-Beating.

The reports from Africa are most encouraging. Our Foreign Society planted a church at Bolengi some six or seven years ago. The reports from that field run like the records of the apostolic church. The following statement from Dr. Royal J. Dye will thrill the hearts of every one who reads it. "The work of the native church is constantly enlarging. New towns are clamoring for evangelists to come to them. The native church is supporting one of every ten of the membership. Nine hold the ropes and one goes down. The evangelists voluntarily reduced their allowances that more might go. And now this new section of populous towns is asking for a teacher of the Word of God. If you want to hit some of the lethargic and stingy people at home, just give them the Bolengi Church of Christ for an example. We have not had one wife-beater in two years. There seems to be a halt in that sort of thing. Some are not up to the ideals we have for them, but they are on the way."

A BOY'S BREAKFAST

There's a Natural Food That Makes Its Own Way.

There is a boy up in Hoosick Falls, N. Y., who is growing into sturdy manhood on Grape-Nuts breakfasts. It might have been different with him, as his mother explains:

"My 11-year-old boy is large, well developed and active, and has been made so by his fondness for Grape-Nuts food. At five years he was a very nervous child and was subject to frequent attacks of indigestion which used to rob him of his strength and were very troublesome to deal with. He never seemed to care for anything for his breakfast until I tried Grape-Nuts, and I have never had to change from that. He makes his entire breakfast of Grape-Nuts food. It is always relished by him and he says that it satisfies him better than the ordinary kind of a meal.

"Better than all he is no longer troubled with indigestion or nervousness, and has got to be a splendidly developed fellow since he began to use Grape-Nuts food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A LITTLE PRELUDE.

We are in the electoral rapids. The general election in the United Kingdom has commenced, and already it appears that the long and dark Tory reign is over. In this country a general election of the House of Commons lasts for three weeks, and as the first week is not quite over while I write, it is too soon to dwell on the matter. But so far there has been a rush of Liberal victories in various constituencies and seat after seat is being captured by the Liberals where the Conservatives have long held strongholds. The working people are awake at last. When I write my next the conflict will be finishing and the British people will have fully declared their will at the polls. Chamberlain and Balfour bewitched the nation but are finding their Sedan. Toryism, or class privilege and aristocratic ascendancy, is being deluged by such a tide of Liberalism as never flowed before in the history of this nation. That appears to be the situation.

A NEW VOLUME BY JOWETT.

I delight in the sermons of the Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A., the masterly preacher at Carr's Lane Congregational Church, Birmingham. Many people consider him the prince of living English preachers. He is one of the very few preachers whose sermons lose little in print, rich though the pleasure of the hearer is while they are being poured forth from the pulpit. Mr. Jowett succeeded the magnificent pulpit orator, Dr. R. W. Dale, who long years before followed John Angell James, "the seraphic preacher of the Midlands." Birmingham is the heart of industrial England, and it has for generations throbbed with the fervor of pulpit eloquence. Mr. Jowett splendidly sustains this tradition. He is to Birmingham what Dr. Alexander Maclaren has been to Manchester until his recent retirement.

I see that one of the secular morning papers calls Mr. Jowett, "A Prince of Expositors." This is on account of the appearance of a volume just published entitled "The Epistles of Peter." In subtle analysis of Scripture truth and power to probe into that mystery of all mysteries, the human heart, Mr. Jowett has only one peer, Dr. Whyte, of Free St George's, Edinburgh. There is a very close resemblance in the manner of teaching of these men. This is being often remarked on by newspaper critics and reviewers. The reason is that one is a fine specimen of the survival of the old-fashioned Scottish Puritan of the best type. The other is a magnificent sample of the modern English style of Puritan. I note that a clever critic in the daily press emphasized the Puritanism of both these foremost preachers, one Scottish and the other English, one Presbyterian and the other Congregationalist..

Mr. Jowett and Dr. Whyte in common manifest a certain kind of courage which has of late years not been over common amongst preachers. They cling boldly to the traditional lines of British evangelicalism. For instance, in this fresh instalment of his expository discourses, Mr. Jowett does exactly what his northern contemporary has been for years steadily doing. He takes the apostle and his writings and deals with passage after passage without any tortuous criticism or elaborate and labored exegesis. He neither goes in for higher criticism nor does he inveigh against it. He does not worry himself and his hearers as to whether Peter wrote one epistle or both. I recollect a very eloquent and deeply interesting sermon by the late Dean Farrar, the object of which was to prove that Peter could not and did not write the second epistle which bears his name. I enjoyed the sermon, but—beautiful, learned, devout, and eloquent though it was—I really could not see the use of it. It was utterly inconclusive, and still left the open-minded hearer with the impression that Peter was as likely as not the author, and that Dean Farrar positively knew nothing about the matter, and was conjecturing, arguing, and laboring in vain, and so was lamentably wasting his time and strength. Dean Farrar was greatly given to eloquent and unprofitable speculation. He wrote a very impassioned volume on Daniel, with the object of utterly demolishing the authenticity of the book bearing that prophet's name. That book is on my shelves now, and I see it as I write. But I never can meet with anybody who seems to feel any interest in it. But I expect that Mr. Jowett's Exposition of the Petrine epistles will take a permanent place in the library of the ordinary minister. It is a homiletic masterpiece, full of vivid presentations of views of life. The simple, virile, yet eloquent English imparts a charm to Jowett's preaching which makes the printed sermons supremely attractive.

THE BISHOP OF STEPNEY.

Another of the foremost of the "young theologians" is the bishop of Stepney. Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang is an extraordinary man in all respects. He is one of the very youngest of the bishops, and succeeded in the suffragan see, at the East End of London, the present bishop of London when the latter was promoted to the metropolitan diocese. Dr. Lang is a Scotchman, the son of the learned Presbyterian professor at Aberdeen University, Dr. Marshall Lang. But when he was studying at Oxford he vaulted over to the Anglican fold and so is a lost sheep to the flock in which he was born. I have several times listened to his splendid sermons in St. Paul's Cathedral, where he draws immense crowds. His new book on "The Parables" is a fine performance. The best books on the subject in our language are I think the works of Dr. Arnot and Archbishop Trench. But there was room for something rather of the devotional cast, and this is what Dr. Lang has aimed at supplying. The chapters are eminently harmonious with the ideas naturally suggested by the needs of the age. On the Parable of the Good Samaritan the following occurs: "There are times when the Church forgets its primary duty. Wealth, comfort, ease, enfeeble the energy of its compassion. The smoothness of conventional routine deadens its spirit. Or it becomes over-occupied with its interests and claims as an institution, with the elaboration of its services, with controversy about its doctrines, and its character as a brotherhood of service grows faint and feeble. It becomes the priest and the Levite, and passes by on the other side. Then it is that the Samaritan is sent to rebuke it and to recall it to its true life." This is pointed preaching, and it is of the kind needed.

THE WRONG UNIFICATION.

The Rev. Frank Ballard, M.A., B.D., B.Sc., F.R.M.S., is another of the rising younger preachers. He is a Methodist who is becoming immensely popular as a lecturer on the scientific side of Christian Evidences, and also for his sermons and

BUTTERMILK

A Surer Way Out.

The "buttermilk fad," which its followers insisted was the cure for all the ills that human flesh is heir to, has pretty well had its day.

Buttermilk is a pleasant and healthy drink, but there are a whole lot of desirable things that it cannot do. A Nebr. woman found something much more worth while. She says:

"Three years ago my stomach was in such a frightful condition that I could scarcely bear to take any food at all. Indeed there was once that I went for 14 days without a morsel of nourishment, preferring starvation to the acute agony that I suffered when I ate anything. And all this entailed upon me almost constant headaches and nervousness. My condition was truly pitiable.

"The doctor warned me that the coffee I drank was chiefly responsible for this condition, and ordered me to drink buttermilk instead. But I despised buttermilk and could not bring myself to use it.

"Then I was advised to try Postum Food Coffee. It has completely renovated and made over my whole system. The salutary effect on my poor stomach was simply marvelous, and that straightened out, the headaches, nervousness and other troubles soon vanished. For more than a year I have not felt any distress or pain, such as I once thought would kill me.

"I can truthfully say that Postum has brought me the blessing of the perfect health I enjoy, for I gave up medicines when I began its use." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Christian Endeavor has its past, an honorable one for a quarter of a century. Feb. 2, 1881, was a notable date in the history of our modern Christianity. That was the year Mr. Garfield came to the presidency, and it seems but a little time removed from us, and yet what history has been made in these twenty-five years! From one little society in a New England town what a great blossoming and fruit bearing has come! To-day 67,000 societies, societies in every country on the globe, in every island of the sea, and millions of young people pledged for Christ and the Church. Christian Endeavor's past is secure, but Christian Endeavor has a future It stands now, as always, for progress. It has laid well its foundations, what shall the superstructure be? It has reached millions, shall it have its scores of millions, its hundreds of millions? It has done mighty things for many lands, shall it go forward until all lands become Immanuel's land?

The past proves its vitality. Such growth, such achievement, has not attended any young people's movement in the world's history. But Christian Endeavor has only begun its work. It has no disposition to rest on its laurels. Spain held both sides of the Mediterranean at the straits of Gibraltar. She stamped on her coin the Pillars of Hercules and on a scroll thrown over them put the words, "Ne plus ultra," and we still have them in our dollar sign ($), but Columbus sailed beyond these pillars, crossed the seas, discovered a new world, doubled the vision of his generation, and Spain wisely changed the motto to "Plus ultra," "more beyond."

Christian Endeavor has never felt its end was attained. It is of the spirit of Paul, who said, "Forgetting the things that are behind, we press forward" The better a man is the better he is forced to be. Every upward step makes another needful. Progress is the law of Christ's kingdom, of society, of youth. A great thing in the world is to know not where we stand, but whither we are moving. Macaulay compares the motion of the public mind in English history to the sea when the tide is rising. Each successive wave rushes forward, breaks, and rolls back, but the great flood is coming in. One looking on the waves for a moment might fancy they were retiring. One looking for five minutes might fancy they were rushing capriciously to and fro. But when he keeps his eyes on them for a quarter of an hour and sees one seamark disappear after another, it is impossible to doubt the general direction in which the ocean is moved. Such is the history of the English-speaking people, such the history of society. Compare the centuries.

So of Christian Endeavor. Take its photograph as you would the photograph of a boy at different ages, and see. Take it at five years, when the first convention was held outside of New England, and the first issue of the "Golden Rule" came to us, and there were but 850 societies.

Take it at ten, when the first big convention was held, that of Minneapolis, with 14,000, and the number of societies was 16,274. Take it at fifteen, when the hosts came up to the capital, 40,000 strong, representing 43,490 societies. Take it at twenty, when the great meeting was held in Cincinnati, and we had 60,851 societies. Take it at twenty-five, "when the world bloomed again at Baltimore," and 67,480 societies were reported. Or take the picture when the two-cent-a-week plan of giving to missions was introduced, or the mission extension work, or when the good citizenship and temperance emphasis came, or when the tenth legion and quiet hour enrolment was started. They are steps of progress, milestones which mark advancement, a regular series of unfoldings, like the growth of a mighty oak in the forest, a path which "shineth brighter and brighter even unto the perfect day." And what measure this stands for of the world's betterment, of national uplift, of social cleansing, of church quickening, of individual development, eternity alone can tell. God inspired the movement. God has been with it. God has used it. God has blessed it and made it a blessing.

What of to-morrow? He is a wise man who always knows what to do next. The next quarter of a century must be fourfold as fruitful from such sowing and planting and watering. There is much land yet to be possessed. Christian Endeavor, from its very genius, must go forward. It has the enthusiasm, the vigor, the enterprise, the battle-spirit of youth. It must be to every incoming generation what it has been to that of the present. It has the same blessing to give to the young people of to-day and to-morrow as to those of yesterday. And because of the ever multiplying hosts of the young, and the regions and races yet unconquered for Christ, it must move down the avenues of usefulness that stretch before us on every hand.

Here are the great mission fields, vast unevangelized multitudes in China, India, Africa, Japan, Oceania and South America. To give even one missionary to every 25,000 unreached by the Gospel 25,000 young people must spring to the front and say, "Here am I, Lord, send me!"

Here is the great battle against intemperance. Some one figures getting born in the United States costs people $225,000,000 annually; getting married, $300,000,000; getting buried, $75,000,000; while getting drunk costs them $1,427,000,000; that is, two and a half times as much as getting born, married and buried put together. "As yet the world is not a garden of Hesperides, where we have only to raise our hands and pluck the golden fruit of progress. Progress is everywhere the golden fleece, to be won only by hard contention, by taming fire-breathing bulls of stupidity, by slaying dragons of malignity and by victoriously withstanding hosts of slanderers sprung from the teeth of venomous serpents."

Here is the service of good citizenship. How shall we keep this land in the ways of righteousness unless our young men and women, as they come to the front, shall be servants of righteousness? Patriots they should be, Christian patriots. Let our young people speak in everything that concerns the nation. Let religion and morals, the ten commandments and the sermon on the mount have a place in this government. Let reverence for law, as Lincoln said, be taught in our schools and colleges. written in our primers and spelling books, published from our pulpits, proclaimed in our legislative houses, and enforced in our courts of justice; in short, become the political religion of the nation. Let Christ, above all, be the final King as he is the adorable Redeemer. Around him men and things, rulers and nations, must take their places, and to make this nation Christian, to work all moral reformations in his name and to convert the world to him, is the high aim of Christian Endeavor.

Here are the possibilities and the perils of youth ever before us; and here is one of the great methods by which the first may be realized, and by which the last may be overcome. As these lines are written we are in a fine C. E. Institute at the Broadway Tabernacle, N. Y. The words that come to the trustees from Dr. Clark and the United Society are full of encouragement. There is a steady gain in numbers and in power for good, and the prospects are bright for the next quarter of a century. Seattle secures the next convention. Whether Washington will get the national headquarters remains to be seen. I leave before the matter comes to a vote, and will not hear till I reach the old world. A good-bye to my readers for a time. You will hear from me at the Pillars of Hercules. God keep those that go and those that stay.

TO EVERY WEST THERE IS AN EAST.

By John S. Martin.

To every west there is an east,
To every north a south;
But those who have a constant feast
Have little thought of drouth.

When summer's sun is in the sky,
And all the heavens are bright,
'Tis then the hope of man runs high
With little thought of night.

But when the sun is in the west,
And shadows longer grow,
'Tis then man longs for home and rest
Where tears may never flow.

A Personal Religious Experience

By E. S. Ames

I have received many replies to the questions concerning personal religious experience which were sent out last summer. They show an interesting variety in reference to the experiences of mature life, and quite a degree of uniformity in the earlier periods. Perhaps in later articles I may indicate the answers to some particular questions from a number of respondents, but at this time I shall give the reply of one person to all the questions. This case is above the average in sensitive imagination and in the originality and vitality of the experience, but it would doubtless be duplicated in its main features many times over.

I. CHILDHOOD.

My father died when I was three years of age. Of his religious beliefs and experiences I know nothing, but I have always felt I missed a great deal out of my life by having never known a father's protecting care. The thing I envied most in my chum's life—a life surrounded by everything that money could provide, while my own was most meager in comparison—was her father's love and companionship. Perhaps it is this which has made my dependence upon God as a Father so real.

My mother did not give outward expression to her religion, never attended church, rather laughed at professing Christians, and her criticisms of and sarcasms about what I thought to be religious, used to make me afraid she would laugh at me or think me weak should she know how I felt. So my longings, aspirations, hopes and ideals were kept to myself. I attended Sunday-school year in and year out, at one time a Methodist, then an Episcopal, and later the Presbyterian, and I presume I got most of my ideas and imagery there, though I can remember nothing very special in regard to that. I can remember reading the Book of Revelation very studiously when about nine years old, and some of my pictures were doubtless obtained there. I believed most devoutly in heaven and hell and had vivid pictures of both places. The lake of fire and brimstone with Satan and his devils torturing his victims was very real and I've writhed many a time with the worm that dieth not. The day of judgment when the great book would be opened and my sins should be laid bare before the assmbled host, troubled me and often I felt that I had committed the unpardonable sin, though I knew not what it was. I felt this even after I was twenty years old. I read "The Romany Rye," by George Barrow, I think, in which the principal character thought he had blasphemed the Holy Ghost and I entered very deeply into his suffering, thinking I understood his agony.

I can not remember when God was not very near, I loved him, and prayer was a very real thing to me. I can remember distinctly kneeling behind my crib, getting under the bed, or into a dark closet to pray. I did not want others to know it, however. Even later in life I shrank from having any one know I prayed, for I felt my unworthiness keenly, and I thought it reflected upon God that I was not better when he helped me.

When quite young, not more than seven years of age, I was impressed with my sinfulness and thought in order to obtain forgiveness I must offer sacrifice. I was deathly afraid some one would find me out, so I would steal away from the rest of the family, sometimes behind a big cottonwood tree, sometimes behind the barn. Then I would build an altar of twigs and stones and thereon sacrifice beetles, June bugs, spiders, or angleworms, any form of life I could manage in proportion to the altar. I had an eye for proportion in those days, for one day, when a green frog was about to yield his life, he looked so large, I let him go. I also had feeling in regard to the creature sacrificed; the blacker and more repulsive he was, the more nerve it required of me to handle him and the more unsavory the odor, the more symbolic of my sins. I don't know how long this idea possessed me, but many scores of "bugdom" yielded their lives to my fetich.

Edward S. Ames.

A little distance from my grandmother's house, in a ravine, was a spring where I went to pray when I visited her. I believe now it was the natural beauty of the spot that attracted me, but I thought then I felt religious. I wore low-necked dresses at that time and many a time I've filled my hand with the cold spring water and applied it to my "heart." The chill it gave me was a sign the "charm had worked"; my sins were forgiven. I think I must have been eight or ten years old.

The clouds were my special delight. In them I saw everything that ever "Alice in Wonderland" saw, but the fleecy white ones, with gold lining, inspired me with awe and reverence. I thought they floated past the throne of God and took their radiance therefrom.

Stars were the eyes of the departed ones, and when one of my little playmates was taken away, I climbed out of my crib night after night to gaze into the starry sky trying to distinguish Mary's eyes from the others. The bright stars were those who had been in heaven longest. I prayed earnestly to join the stars.

II. ADOLESCENCE.

I can not recall that this period of my life was marked by more "storm and stress" than before or since. Seems to me I have always been struggling, subject to "fits" of exaltation, followed by deep depression. I joined the Methodist church when thirteen years of age, urged strongly to do so by the superintendent of the Sunday-school, a man of high standing in the community, an intimate friend of the family, and my brother's partner in business. I knew he was most anxious concerning my brother, and I felt ashamed that my brother did not respond, and I yielded "to redeem the family." It was a matter of great sorrow to me, nobody knows what I suffered for several years, to think that my life did not influence the rest of the family to do likewise. I always felt it was my fault and I was responsible for their not coming into the church. I think I have never doubted God. My doubts have all been in regard to myself. I have always been sensitive in regard to my lack of beauty, and intellectual ability, and during this period of my life it most drove me crazy. This has been a serious drawback all my life, this mistrust and distrust of self, rising sometimes to the point where the temptation to make away with myself was most strong. I seem not to be able to change this mental attitude, though I fight it desperately. I sometimes think this feeling of inability to do is the adult form of my childhood idea of sinfulness.

I think my temptation is emotional and suggestible, and my imagery largely visual, though not entirely. At one period of my life I became disgusted with church observances, and for several years did not attend, thinking it would be hypocritical. Change of conditions, environment and activities brought about gradually a change in that respect, and I became interested in

Our Budget.

—We hope to begin in the course of a week or two a series narrating the occurrences at a meeting of ex-preachers, called the Elderburg Association. We believe this series will be of interest to the members of the churches generally—not to preachers alone. We will make further announcements in our next issue.

—As these lines are being written, the Editor-in-Chief, his wife, and President W. E. Garrison, of Butler College, are speeding toward the great southwest in search of rest and health. With his chief away the assistant may kick over some traces. He has some feelings that he would like to express about the ways of certain journalists who live in the east, and about some people who believe that they are the "only Christians," and a number of other things. If he does not, it will be because he has had a good training in self-repression, and a very sincere respect for one with whom he has been so closely associated.

—But with his chief away the assistant can mention here a very delightful little dinner party which the heads of departments of the Christian Publishing Company enjoyed at the home of the Editor and his wife recently, to which the briefest allusion was made in last week's "Easy Chair." It was quite an informal occasion, and all the more pleasant for that reason. The Editor, far from being a man with no burdens to bear, has a share of these of which few people know. At a time when the burdens were unusually heavy we gathered at the hospitable board. We did not "talk shop" or discuss plans, but the Editor was inveigled into telling some reminiscences of the early days of the Christian Publishing Company and its struggles. We thought the more of his helpmeet when we heard how she had many a time wrapped The Christian-Evangelist and carried it to the mails, and done some of the hard part of the work in a newspaper office, as well as inspiring and cheering the Editor and publisher, with bills to pay and no money in sight with which to pay them. Dr. J. M. Philputt voiced the opinion of a great many people when he said that the work of the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist had never been more important than it is just now, when clear heads and brave hearts are needed in the guidance of the Reformation movement.

—The more missionary spirit a church has the less ice cream and oyster soup it will take to run it.

—A faithful use of March offering supplies, it is said, will always insure success.

—"Preach the Gospel to every creature." Is there one left out, a little one, a black one, a yellow one? What omissions mark this census? Not one.

—F. D. Power, the writer of "As Seen From the Dome," is now on the ocean in company with B. B. Tyler, and others, to visit the Holy Land. We shall expect some very interesting letters from Brother Power and we invite our readers to bring others in to the feast, which will begin in about two or three weeks' time, for we can not hear from the scene of action before then. This will be an excellent time for new subscribers to begin reading The Christian-Evangelist.

Fountains and Pumps.

This strange letter has just come to the centennial office:

"Dear Brother: I am enclosing a check for $100 for missions, which I wish you would kindly distribute for me, as I am not posted as to where it is most needed at the present.

"Yours, ———.

"P. S.—I have done very little for the foreign work in the last year; some of it should go there.

"———."

This young man is living where we have no church. The needs of his family are increasing, and opportunities for profitable investment are thick about him. How can he afford to give so much?

Several years ago he began laying aside a tenth of his income for Christian service. Throughout 1905 he gave cheerfully and liberally at every opportunity, and yet found such a balance in the tithe treasury January 1, that he had to ask help in its distribution. This is a glass of water from an artesian well.

More will follow and without care, labor or expense. Most people give only as the forcepump of exhortation, argument, demonstration, pathos, entreaty and amusement is worked upon them. It is dangerously near being "grudgingly and of necessity."

Tithing is the readiest entrance into the way of the cheerful (hilarious) giver whom the Lord loveth.

Let those who tithe, or are willing to commence tithing, in every church in the brotherhood get together and systematically set about getting others to adopt the plan.

Let your March offering for foreign missions be a real offering, and not a collection.

W. R. Warren,
Centennial Secretary.

[Good! Let us have more artesian wells and fewer pumps. Let our offerings flow from an underground reservoir of systematic, conscientious giving, rather than from a pump that has to be "primed" at least once a year.—Editor.]

—W. R. Motley, the pastor of our church at Montague, Prince Edward Island, has just entered upon his fourth year's work with a handsome increase in salary, and the good will and hearty co-operation of all the members. He and his wife were recently the recipients of a number of personal gifts.

—C. C. Davis has resigned after nineteen months' pastoral work at Iowa Falls, Ia., for the reason that his wife's parents at Packwood both require her presence and care. He relinquishes this field with regret, for the work has been pleasant and the people loyal. G. E. Purdy will, for the present, take charge.

—F. Elmo Robinson has just entered upon the pastorate of the Rodney Avenue Church, Portland, Ore., and believes there are brighter days for our cause there. This church has had its share of discouragements to contend with, but Brother and Sister Esson did much for it in the four years of their faithful ministry.

—A debate has just occurred at Lincoln, Kan., between Neal Overman and Professor Whittaker on the question, "Does the Church of Christ offer a practical and Scriptural basis for the union of all Christians?" It is said that no event in the recent history of Lincoln has awakened so much interest.

—O. P. Spiegel, who will complete a fifty days' meeting in Pensacola, Fla., next Monday, where the membership has been more than doubled, will follow with a meeting at Plainfield, N. J., under the auspices of the National Board of Evangelization, with J. E. Sturgis as singer. Phil. A. Parsons is the pastor at Plainfield.

—Melancthon Moore has, by unanimous request of the members of our church at Garnett, Kan., entered upon his fifth year of work there. According to the local paper, this is one of the leading churches of the city and its influence for good is felt in almost every home. Its growth, both financial and spiritual, during the year has been marked.

—J. H. Wood, writing from Shelbina, Mo., speaks highly of the preaching of Charles H. Caton, of Blandinsville, Ill., who recently held a two weeks' meeting for them. He says: "He certainly is a remarkably strong and vigorous thinker. He has the best hearing of men and of people who usually do not attend church."

Bro. J. A. Cunningham of Tupelo, Miss., has ready for delivery two volumes of "Sermons," pronounced "best of all," and his "Blue and Gray" book of poems, all for $1.

—Judge A. M. Woodson, of St. Joseph, Mo., who was nominated in 1904 by acclamation for supreme judge, is again in the field for nomination. Judge Woodson is known to a large number of our readers in Missouri as an upright judge, an able lawyer, and a citizen who is above reproach. We wish the Judge success in his worthy political aspirations.

—"The new Christian Church hymnal, 'Gloria in Excelsis,' is all-sufficient for the needs of any church. Its large collection of the best hymns, and the careful culling of the 'Gospel Songs,' gives us a hymnarium dignified, reverent and worshipful. The Responsive Readings are calculated to enrich the worship, and should be used everywhere."—ALVA W. TAYLOR, Eureka, Ill.

—"You are quite right in your suggestion that we drop the numerical designation of our churches, as the 'First Christian Church,' the 'Second Christian Church,' etc., and designate the local churches by the street upon which they are located.—H."

We thought so, but we are glad to have somebody second the motion. A good suggestion, like a crying baby, should be carried out.

—Arrangements have been made for a union revival meeting of all the churches at Wellington, Ohio, to begin in March. M. B. Williams will be the evangelist for the Christian church. H. F. Reed, the pastor, writes, referring to the fact that the church has adopted "Gloria in Excelsis" as its hymnal, "We are exceedingly proud of our new book and it is growing in favor. It is just the thing for church worship."

—"I want to tell you that I am pleased with the new Christian Church hymnal, 'Gloria in Excelsis.' It fully meets all requirements. Its size, no less than the quality of the sentiment, is suggestive of dignity. I like the Responsive Readings, and I believe it would be an admirable custom to adopt them in our congregations. I have seen no hymnal that pleases me so greatly."—E. L. POWELL, Louisville, Ky.

—"I have taken time to play and sing every piece in your new hymnal, and I am delighted beyond expression. In a work of this size it seems impossible that so little undesirable material should appear. This reveals great care, taste and discrimination. For this compilation, Your praises will be in all the churches, where it is used, and it should be used in all."—R. C. SARGENT, Pullman, Washington.

—The card of welcome of the Central church, Huntington, Ind., where the brethren are meeting in the theater, says: "We are glad to see you among the worshipers in our church, and if you are not a member or regular attendant elsewhere we extend to you a very cordial invitation to make this your church home. It would give the pastor pleasure to meet you at the close of this service, and our members, to become personally acquainted with you."

—S. R. Maxwell has been holding a successful meeting at Kennett, Mo., where the whole community seems to be stirred, many who had been prejudiced against the Christian church being now favorably disposed toward it. The Christian union sentiment has been strong in Brother Maxwell's preaching. Having come out from Methodism himself, he preaches by example as well as by precept. A preacher will probably be located there at an early date.

—Sister Yancey, corresponding secretary of the Kentucky Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Lexington, writes: "The contract for our new dormitory at Morehead has been let and the excavation begun. The building will cost $5,500 and the furnishing probably another $1,000." The degree of enterprise which our sisters in the Christian Woman's Board of Missions are putting into their centennial plans is very inspiring, and we are sure they are going to accomplish great things, whatever the brehren may do."

—We have received an invitation to the opening of the Highland Christian Church, Denver, on February 11, and of course regretted that we could not be present with Bro. J. E. Pickett, and those who are interested in this work, at that time. Wm. Bayard Craig preached in the morning. There were addresses by L. G. Thompson, A. E. Pierce, J. F. Harris, and Wm. Ross Lloyd in the afternoon, while Flournoy Payne gave the communion address, and in the evening the sermon was preached by L. G. Thompson, the state secretary.

—Bethany College has, for the first time in her history, an enrollment of more than two hundred and fifty. The growth of the college has led to a waking up among the townspeople. Many material improvements have been made in the way of electric light installment, the inauguration of a water system, and increased building. A trolley line is to be built from Bethany to Wellsburg. The new library building will soon be started, and it is hoped to be in use by the opening of the fall term. A movement has been started to repair and preserve Bethany church.

—W. H. Pinkerton has given such satisfaction in the two meetings he has held at Kenton, Ohio, that he will probably be asked to return again next year. He is a brother of the present pastor of the church at Kenton, T. W. Pinkerton, who has led that people for the past ten years with the exception of about two and a half years that he was in Salt Lake City. Bro. W. H. Pinkerton, as we have already announced, is going to give all his time of the evangelistic field. M. P. Kendall, of Columbus, Ind., who assisted as singing evangelist, is now helping C. R. Scoville in his meeting at Anderson, Ind.

—The first response received for the meeting at Manchester, N. H., is a check from W. M. White, who has recently gone to take up the financial work of Kentucky University. In sending his dollar and a half, Brother White expresses the wish that he could send many times that amount. He writes: "If the meeting continues longer than expected, I shall be glad to contribute again. I shall pray for the blessing of God to rest upon Brother Yeuell and those associated with him in the work of establishing a church, to be known as simply a Christian church, in this, the last unoccupied state of the Union. God bless you for leading!"

—J. H. Hardin, of Kansas City, state superintendent of Bible school work in Missouri, is at present conducting a series of Bible school institutes in St. Louis. He will visit most of the churches in the city, spending about half a week in a place. These institutes are intended to enlist the schools in efforts to secure larger numbers of scholars, and to induce the teachers to take up methods for more thorough training for their work. The series will close with a central rally of all our people in St. Louis at the First Church. A similar campaign was very successfully conducted in Kansas City during January. As spring opens the work will be extended to the towns, villages and country places by Brother Hardin and his assistants.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

—Ministers of the Christian churches of Pittsburg and Allegheny and vicinity are leading in an opposition to the Calderhead bill which will come up in Congress in a few weeks and which proposes to take the duty off alcohol. J. F. Futcher, pastor of the Fourth Church, Pittsburg, has sent letters to all the ministers of the vicinity and at the last meeting of the ministerial association a committee was appointed to investigate the merits of the bill and make a report. C. L. Thurgood, pastor of the Central Church, Pittsburg, said that the liquor dealers favored the removal of the duty so that a cheaper alcoholic drink can be provided. The action of our churches in Pittsburg may lead to united action on the part of the various ministerial associations.

—Elsewhere will be found "An open letter to the churches," from Brother Lichtenberger of the Lenox Avenue Christian Church, New York. It deals with a problem that is very vital to the welfare of our churches in New York City, and indeed in all the great cities of the country. We were surprised to learn, on a recent visit to New York City, of the large number of Disciples that move into that city annually, and were still more surprised to learn how many of these are lost to the church by their removal. It does seem that, since there are odds enough against us in a great city like New York, where we are comparatively late comers in the field, we ought to have the benefit of such increase as comes by removal of members there. Brother Lichtenberger asks the co-operation of the churches in trying to prevent this loss, and we trust that he, and other New York pastors, will receive such co-operation.

St. Louis Missionary Rally.

The annual foreign missionary rally for the Christian churches of this city and vicinity will be held in the Union Avenue Christian Church, corner of Union and Von Versen, Friday, Feb. 16. The services will begin at 10 o'clock a. m., and continue until noon. They resume at 2 and continue until 4. Luncheon will be served in the church. The first address will be made by President McLean, of Cincinnati, followed by addresses by J. L. Brandt, F. N. Calvin, G. E. Ireland, S. B. Moore, L. N. McCreary, E. T. McFarland, F. A. Mayhall, W. Daviess Pittman, G. A. Hoffmann, George L. Snively of St. Louis; Edward Owers, of Farmington; C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, and Dr. C. C. Drummond, of Harda, India. No address will exceed ten minutes in length, and they will be interspersed with appropriate music. President McLean will be in charge all day and will have a large collection of charts and maps. If you can not spend the whole day here, spend at least a part of it.

In Favor of Federation.

At the meeting of the Chistian ministers' alliance of Kansas City and vicinity on February 3, the following report of a committee appointed at the preceding meeting was unanimously adopted, and its publication requested:

We, the ministers of the Christian churches of the greater Kansas City and the towns and cities near by, desire at this present epochal time to make public our sincere thanksgiving for the fast multiplying signs of the approach of that glad day when the prayer of our Savior shall be answered, that all his people might be one. It is our firm conviction that greater strides have been made toward this union within the past few decades than in all those preceding centuries since division first marred the peace and unity of the church of God.

We gratefully recognize as factors in this mighty movement the Y. M. C. A., the Y. P. S. C. E., the International Sunday-school series of uniform lessons for all Bible schools, union evangelistic meetings, co-operation of the churches in charitable enterprises, civic reform and other kindred forces. As steps toward this ultimate union, we rejoice in the union of those churches of kindred doctrines and polities believing that the obvious gains of every union of Christian forces will be provocative of yet other unions, a final union of all the churches of Christ, wearing, alas, at the present hour names alien to the New Testament church!

In this same spirit we are moved to commend the aim and spirit of the great federation movement toward which, as churches of Christ, we must take some intelligent and unmistakable attitude. Because of our profound conviction that this movement, yet in its tentative and initial stages, a movement that attempts to bind no church either in doctrine or polity, but seeks the rather only to bring into closer co-operation in righteous undertakings all churches of the Master toward union, we earnestly implore our churches, our ministers, our editors, and all makers of thought among us to give it their cordial and prayerful support. We regard this as a great providential ordering, and we would plead for a broad recognition of its general aims and purposes; its boundless possibilities as a unifying agency in these great and almost pentecostal days.

Let it be borne in mind that if in some matters we would change either phraseology or method of this new movement we can count for far more in such reconstruction as earnest workers from within than as mere captious critics from without.

The outside world is lookin~ with interest and concern upon the attitude of the churches toward this movement. As the world reads it—and we believe the world reads rightly—co-operation with this movement means a triumph for Christian union; aloofness and hostile criticism, a victory for separatism and denominationalism. Shall we, as pioneers in this great enterprise of the unification of God's people, be elsewhere than at the very forefront of the battle? Shall we, spiritual descendants, we humbly trust, of Campbell, Stone, Scott and all their great compeers whose lives were laid upon the altar of this holy apostolate, give forth an uncertain sound in this hour of testing and of opportunity? God forbid!

Our earnest prayer to the Father is that not only we, but all that mighty host whose hearts go out in love to "our plea," holy plea for the union of all Christ's own, may by heart, and voice, and hand speed this great movement sent of God.

EASTER GLORY!

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

An Open Letter to the Churches.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

For the sake of the hundreds of Disciples among the 1,087,000 unchurched Protestants in Greater New York, who are not only being lost to our brotherhood but to the cause of Christ, I am endeavoring to arouse your interest and enlist your help.

One not familiar with the conditions by actual contact with them can not know the seriousness of the problem. Every year sees an increasing number of Disciples coming to New York with that ever widening stream of immigration from the middle west where we are strong.

They are often the brightest and best who are coming for better economic opportunity. The second ten or twenty years of their Christian life would mean much more than the first if it could be saved to the cause. Many are active members of the church at home and should enlist at once in the work here. But they are in a city of strangers. No one knows them or cares about them. Conditions are new and of absorbing interest. They are uncertain of the length of their residence here. They do not know the location of our churches and are in no hurry to look them up. For a while they prefer to drift about; gradually interest declines and finally they sink into the current of worldliness and commercialism and are added to the great multitude of the church-forsaking and Christ-forgetting. There are notable exceptions and we rejoice in them but for the many who are drifting and in danger, we seek to enlist interest. We need their strength. They need the church.

Seldom do they come to the city without the knowledge of some pastor or member of one of our churches. Here is our opportunity and the occasion of this appeal. Bro. Chas. Reign Scoville will hold a meeting for the Lenox Avenue Union Church of the Disciples in March. His name is known to all our people. Unattached Disciples living in New York would delight to hear him if they knew of the meeting. We have no means of reaching them among the millions with this news. Our request is this: Will those who read this letter, pastors and brethren, who know of Disciples coming to New York or who are now residing

The Progress of the Rally.

Receipts for the last week were $60; previously reported, $664; total amount up to date, $724 in cash; $300 in pledges, which will be paid if we raise the whole amount. We appointed our committees to make a vigorous canvass of our own people to raise the $1,000 among ourselves. If we are successful, and I believe that we will be, this will leave us only $976 to raise from the brotherhood to successfully close this rally. We ought to be able to do this, and could if the brethren who contemplete aiding this work will respond at once. Brother Muckley's suggestion that two hundred send us $10 each is a good one, but we do not need two hundred to send us $10 each. If one hundred would do so we would be in sight of success, or if two hundred sent $5 each. Already more than fifty ladies' aid societies have sent us contributions ranging from $1 to $10, and there are hundreds of other societies, I am sure, that would gladly aid if their attention were called to the work. Can you not, and will you not, do this much? A few moments next Lord's day spent in conversation with the leaders of these organizations, soliciting their assistance, would give us helpful results. Suppose you try it and I will report the results later on.

A Tremendous Emergency.

There is much more than an ordinary emergency upon us in the approaching annual offering for foreign missions. The work has widened in every direction in the past few years, and especially during the past twelve months. It is not too much to say that our obligations were never before so far-reaching and imperative as they are at this time. New cities have been entered; new churches have been planted; new converts have been won. Men and women have been baptized in communities where the solemn scene was never before witnessed. The table of the Lord has been observed in the presence of his new born children where it was never before spread. New schools and colleges have been planted. Great triumphs have been won in every direction. Our hearts are thrilled as we survey the forward movement of the Lord's hosts in all lands. At this March offering, obligations with mountain weight press upon us.

Let this be a season of preparation. A stirring missionary rally in your local church Sunday night, February 18, or February 25, will help to lift the membership to heights of interest. God's eternal purpose concerning all men, as expressed in the Gospel, should be thundered forth in sermons prepared with great labor and delivered with unction and mighty power. It is a time to cry unto the God of nations for help. The churches should be brought to their knees in earnest, devoted supplication for grace and strength. How helpless we are in the presence of the teeming heathen millions without the divine guidance and aid!

We are hoping the churches will take more time and care in the canvass for offerings before the day. Please set your mark high. If possible enlist every member in the gifts.

We have reason to believe that more churches will give and that the offerings will reach a higher mark than in previous years. Let us join hands and hearts for a mighty forward movement and insure not only $300,000, but more. Whatever is done must be done quickly.

Another Business Man Interested.

A prominent business man in the central states has become so thoroughly interested in the living link plan of doing home missionary work that he has undertaken the support of his living link missionaries.

When a business man can see results from the expenditure of his missionary contributions, his interest will be enhanced proportionately. The home missionary work being done under the direction of the American Christian Missionary Society in the west and south ought to inspire a whole army of business men to give their support to such practical operations.

---

A gift of $2,000 on the annuity plan from a sister in the central states, is reported by the American Christian Missionary Society. The sister who makes this generous gift is not wealthy at all, but is desirous of disposing of her possessions in such a manner that her intentions may not be thwarted, as is possible when disposition is made by will. There are thousands of wealthy brethren among us who could make such a gift to the Lord's work without feeling it as much as this sister.

For Church Building.

During the past two weeks the Board of Church Extension has received three gifts on the annuity plan: $1,000 from a friend in Maryland, $300 from a friend in California and $400 from Nebraska. For particulars concerning the annuity feature of church extension you should address G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo.

The receipts for church exension show a handsome gain in January of $2,844.79 over January of 1905, the total receipts for January this year being $6,052.76. The receipts for the first seven days of February, 1906, were $1,483.56, a gain of $1,413.49 over the first seven days of February, 1905. The gain from the churches was $408.49.

Our church exension board is in a fair way to reach the $1,000,000 by 1909. The net gain for the first four months of this missionary year over the first four months of last year was $7,967.18. The net gain for January, 1906, was $7,545.63. This is encouraging news for our centennial department in our church extension work.

GAMBLING WITH DEATH.

What Many Of Us Are Doing Three Times A Day.

For everything we get something is taken away. Every act pulls two ways. Some men in power dole out their souls for it. They can't have soul and power at the same time.

And so, in this quick-living age, most of us can't have energy and health at the same time. One or the other must be lost, and it is usually health.

We know we are doing wrong and would like to reform, but we have a morbid fear of being laughed at if we aim to live and eat according to conscience and good sense.

Some of us break away for awhile and enslave ourselves to a diet. We read about the hardy Scotsman being fed on porridge and oatcake, making soldiers of muscle and dash, and how Cæsar's army was fed on corn. But the diet doesn't last long. We quickly swing back into the great line, eating and drinking to fulness like the rest, eating anything and everything, at any time, and any way we find it. We say "what is a stomach for if it isn't to obey the palate."

But there is really no one rule applicable to everybody's stomach. What one man may eat another may not.

But the dyspeptic should remember that the death list has a dark shadow over it with a long bony finger pointing to "died of heart disease." Physicians will tell us that there are few cases of heart disease that do not come from a stomach derangement.

At every meal we may be brewing for ourselves a terrible case of dyspepsia. It may come upon us after breakfast to-morrow morning, or after that oyster supper to-morrow night.

Acute indigestion means that you have even chances for death or life. That's the gamble you are taking. That precious gastric juice decides, as a rule, whether you continue to live or not.

Therefore, if you feel your food lies like a "lump of lead" on your stomach, beware! Your gastric juice is weak. It can't dispose of the food in time to prevent fermentation. Take something that will do it effectively, and at once. Take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, the most powerful tablets in the world for the relief of all kinds of stomach trouble, nausea, indigestion, the worst cases of dyspepsia, fermentation, bloaty feeling, sourness, heartburn and brash.

One grain of an ingredient of these tablets will digest 3,000 grains of food. Your stomach needs a rest at once. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will relieve your stomach of more than two-thirds of the work it has to do, digesting perfectly whatever food there is in your stomach.

You can't do your work well, or be cheerful, or have energy or vim or ambition, when your stomach is bad. Make yourself feel good after a hearty meal, feel good all over, clear your mind and make you enjoy life, by taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Give your stomach a rest, so it can right itself, then you need fear nothing. You can get these tablets anywhere for 50 cents a package.

Howard C. Rash.

Many of our readers are well acquainted with Bro. Howard C. Rash, the manufacturer of the Natural Body Brace, an advertisement of which appears in this issue of The Christian-Evangelist. Some, however, may not know him, and to these I take pleasure in introducing him as a gentleman, a Christian and an active and interested member of the Christian Church. From long acquaintance with Brother Rash I am glad to be able to recommend him as one in whose truthfulness and reliability the fullest confidence may be placed.

His Natural Body Brace has been on the market for many years and is recognized as a thoroughly practical device.

Write to him about it; and it will not be to your disadvantage to say that you are a reader of The Christian-Evangelist.

Divinity House Endowment.

The Divinity House of the University of Chicago completed the raising of an endowment fund of $30,000, January 1. This was the time set for meeting the conditions of the proposition made by Mr. Long, who led with a subscription of $15,000. The largest subscription by one person, next to Mr. Long's, was $2,000 of which there were three. There were five subscriptions of $1,000 each; one of $750, $500, $300, $250; two of $200; seventeen of $100; two of $50.

This fund is the consummation of fifteen months of effort bestowed directly upon the task of raising it; but of five years of effort, the most of which was of the nature of plowing the soil and sowing the seed, and waiting for the harvest. Up to this time the House has had no source of revenue of support aside from the annual contributions of friends. This fund gives the officers of the House a feeling of security.

Besides this fund the House owns, free from debt, a lot across from the university quadrangle, which is worth $30,000. The holdings of the institution now aggregate about $60,000. This is but the beginning of our plans.

writings, all of which are shot through with his immense scientific learning. This accomplished preacher and author has just produced a great volume of over 600 pages, entitled "Haeckel's Monism False." In his chapters he furnishes the most elaborate examination that has yet appeared of all the notorious infidel works of the famous Jena professor. Sir Oliver Lodge and others have made great onslaughts on Haeckel, and now Mr. Frank Ballard has made an assault which carries the very center of the citadel of this vaunted edifice of monism. I would just here observe that there is one, and only one, feature of the monistic philosophy with which I might feel some sympathy. For it is undoubtedly Haeckel's primary aim to establish a theory of the unification of the universe. But he does this by endeavoring to prove the eternity of matter under the form of "Urstoff," whatever that may be. This theory of accounting for all the origins of all physical phenomena he endeavored to propound in his book, "The Riddle of the Universe." Now "Die Weltraethsel," or "The Riddle," was a book which in England appeared in a cheap sixpenny edition, and has had an immense circulation. It has done harm by unsettling multitudes of young and unformed minds. Haeckel's other famous works, "The Wonders of Life," and "The Confession of a Man of Science," have attracted almost as much attention. The fascinating style of Haeckel is accompanied by a measureless dogmatism which overwhelms weak souls. Therefore the splendid rejoinders which are appearing both in Germany and in England are of the utmost value.

GEO. H. SPRINGER, Manager, 256-258 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

There is something to the devout mind exceedingly repellent in the bold and scurrilous enunciations of Haeckel. He ascribes the birth of Jesus to the paternity of a Roman centurion who made the acquaintance of Mary of Nazareth, and even familiarly gives the name of the centurion. The easy and airy manner in which this Teuton professor attacks anything and everything that is revered by the people of Christian faith is painful to serious souls. And to this profanity there are no bounds set. Haeckel is an absolute atheist. There are no softening modifications in his freezing and hopeless materialism. But Mr. Ballard deals with the negations of Haeckel in two ways. He uses logical weapons with great power in demolishing the hollow and specious arguments of monism, and he shows how ridiculously the German contradicts himself.

The aim of Mr. Ballard is to oppose Christian dualism to atheistic monism. We live in a universe of dual basis. Matter and mind exist alike. And these two elements must forever be regarded as distinct. They coexist but are absolutely distinct from each other in nature, in origin, in laws, in action, and in the qualities that inseparably and eternally characterize them.

A Personal Religious Experience.

Christian Endeavor work, and joined the Presbyterian church, because my friends with whom I was living attended there. It was a deliberate act upon my part; no especial pressure was brought to bear, except I wished to be identified with some church. I've had no "sudden awakenings" of permanent sort; my professional study was the result of necessity to do something, and that sort of thing appealed to me.

II. PRESENT TIME.

I think the most vital element of my present religious life is interest in the educational side of church work, and desire for the growth of certain ideas and principles for which a certain little church stands. Sometimes I wonder if my desires are religious, because I am not sure whether my interest in such things would continue should circumstances remove me from the present influences, but I think it would.

Devotion to Heathenism.

Such instances afford side lights on the actualities of pagan life. These pagan systems, with all their delusions, are still venerable, established and defiant; but they are slowly passing away! The real citadel to be won is the soul and its sympathy. The youth, rulers and even the priests are coming to see that it is sympathy with them in their lost estate that is bringing us from the dear homelands into these nightlands, in order that we might win them to the truth. The recent martyrdoms of the native Christians showed their splendid devotion to Christ. Let the millions of China only see Jesus and know him, as we know and love him, and their loyalty and character will cause the Church of Christ to sing a new Te Deum laudamus.

Nebraska.

The Wilson-Lintt meeting at Fairbury has resulted in a large ingathering. O. A. Adams' meeting at Litchfield closed with 85 baptisms, 30 by letter, 14 otherwise. The church is organized with 129 members, has $800 for a new house and will proceed to build as soon as possible. Brother Adams will preach for the infant church a few Lord's days until the work is settled. The Ansley church and the state board joined with Brother Adams in supporting this meeting.——R. F. Whiston's meeting at Table Rock closed with 15 baptisms, three letters, four reclaimed, not formerly members at this place; $410 were pledged to have preaching every Lord's day instead of every two weeks. E. L. Kechley is the regular supply. Brother Kechley is highly esteemed in the church and community.

The state evangelists are now at Mitchell, in Scotts Bluff county, where we have a number of brethren. We hope to organize a congregation there, and will go thence to Gering.

Edward Clutter reported 39 confessions, four from denominations and one by statement as the result of the Florence meeting about the middle of the week and would run till Lord's day, January 28. No report since then. This has been a good meeting, and we hope has resulted in the formation of a live congregation. Brother Clutter will continue to preach for them each Lord's day, as he speaks at Irvington in the afternoon. This meeting is partially supported by the state board and more largely by Mrs. S. A. Bates, who is responsible for Brother Clutter's work at Irvington. The Northside, Omaha, church workers have been largely instrumental in starting the work through a Bible school operated by them.——The Hendley meeting, conducted by J. S. Miller and the pastor, resulted, to last report, in 19 additions through evangelists' work, and four by the pastor. Brother Mitchell was continuing the meeting.

Charles E. Cobbey supplied at Wymore January 28. He will be in Cotner University from this time forward, and may locate with Wymore.

Geo. M. Weimer has been called to the pastorate of the North Platte church, to begin February 18.——Leslie B. Cox, of Canton, Mo., has accepted the Belvidere work and was to begin January 28.——T. L. Young is located at Ulysses.——J. B. White has been recalled at North Bend and reports five added by statement and one reclaimed January 14.——Geneva, where E. M. Johnson ministers, reports four baptisms and one confession January 28. The church is conducting a lecture course.

D. S. Domer was unanimously called to remain at Beaver City another year, but, owing to continued ill health, necessitating two very important operations during the year, he is compelled to rest from his work for a while. He will close there soon.——H. C. Williams, who has been living in Omaha for some time, has accepted a call to the Fairfield church and is on the field. One confession there on January 28.

D. C. Kratz will begin a meeting under the board at Gross, in Boyd county, February 6.——There were eight baptisms as a result of the meeting at Dorchester, where F. S. White is the minister. The church has been unified. Brother White also has had an addition to his family in the person of a baby girl.——E. C. Tuckerman has been with J. W. Walker in a meeting at Miller.——D. A. Youtzy went to Arnold on January 20, called by the impending death of the veteran preacher, L. J. Correll. No word has come as to the issue of his illness. Brother Correll was the first preacher at Hebron. His latest work was to induce one of the brethren at Arnold to write this office for assistance that the work at Arnold might be re-established. His zeal for the cause did not grow faint as his body became enfeebled.

T. C. McIntire supplied at Wymore on January 21 and at Ansley on January 28. We hope to locate him in Nebraska.——J. T. H. Stewart, of Ohio, is in a meeting at Broken Bow.——The meeting at Hastings. conducted by O. E. Hamilton, has added 54 to the church in two weeks, 24 on Lord's day, January 28. They have had to take the Sunday evening meetings to the opera house. Will continue two weeks longer, H. S. Gilliam is the pastor.

Southern California Items.

The work grows apace in this land by the sunset sea. Many eastern visitors who were present at the Long Beach convention last August showed a substantial interest by subscribing funds for our state work. These will note with interest the following resume of the work thus far in our missionary year:

Fifteen small, pastorless congregations have been visited by our superintendent of missions, encouraged and supplied with permanent ministers and arrangements made for their maintenance. Three of our old mission fields have been placed on a basis of self-support. Three new church buildings have been dedicated on fields where new congregations were organized last year. Eighteen mission fields have had regular preaching and pastoral care by virtue of the help of our treasury. Evangelists De Forest Austin and Young, with their splendid tent equipment, are preaching the Gospel on new fields, heartily endorsed, if only partly financed, by our board. J. Walter Wilson, singing evangelist, is kept busy assisting pastors in meetings. Two new churches have been organized, Huntington Beach and Rialto, and two more are in process of formation, South Main Street, Los Angeles, and South Pasadena, and forces are now in motion to enter other unoccupied fields.

The charter roll of the new South Main Street Christian Church, Los Angeles, now contains about 50 names. The meeting is just entering its fourth week. This work was begun by our state board leasing a lot for a tent and announcing to "all and sundry" that the Christian Church was entering that part of the city to do a permanent work for the kingdom of Christ. De Forest Austin and Young, of Nebraska, ably seconded by E. H. Kellar, who will be the permanent minister, compose the preaching force. Lots for building are being secured and as soon as possible a tabernacle will be erected. This magnificent tent equipment, with its working force, is facing great opportunities in the metropolis of the great southwest. Another new field is awaiting them, into which they will move, when the South Main Street meeting closes.

The First Church, Pasadena, in a recent board meeting, definitely and unanimously committed itself to the policy of expansion for the kingdom of Christ, when it decided to hold a meeting in South Pasadena, with a view of organizing a second church to serve the needs of that rapidly growing community. Many devoted Disciples live in that section. Sumner T. Martin, assisted by J. Walter Wilson, is already in a good meeting. The work at the First Church prospers greatly. J. V. Coombs is to hold a meeting with them in March.

W. E. Crabtree, permanent minister at San Diego, is leading his congregation in a great work. They now propose to build a new house of worship, which is greatly needed. Recently $11,000 were raised at a single service for the building fund. They are now in a good meeting, with George Ringo, of Ocean Park, doing the preaching.

Many visiting friends helped to fill the new, neat chapel at Monrovia on Jan. 21, and took an active interest in its dedication, when $1,100 were raised in a few minutes by C. C. Chapman. Clark H. Marsh is the minister.

Charles Reign Scoville has been definitely engaged to come to California in the spring and lead in evangelistic work at Long Beach and perhaps other places. He is expected in April.

South Kentucky.

The summer and fall campaign was one of the busiest and most successful of my life in every way. Ten meetings held and 160 added to the local congregations.——J. S. Rowe moves from Cave in Rock, Ill., to Marion, Ky., preaching one-half time at Marion, one-fourth time at Cave in Rock, and one-fourth time at Salem, Ky.——W. G. Eldred is at work at Princeton, and J. C. Read, returned from the Indian Territory, is now located at Fulton. We welcome him.——The Martin family just closed one of the best meetings at Henderson ever held there. They will hold a meeting in April at Russellville.——Our South Kentucky work is now in fine condition. Sixteen months ago the present corresponding secretary and treasurer took up the work. Then the South Kentucky Christian Missionary and Sunday-school Association had a debt of not less than $1,000, or about that. Now we owe not one dollar, and all expenses are being met as they mature. We have a balance on hand. We are planning for greater work the coming convention year. Our convention meets at Murray, May 21-24, 1906, and we are looking forward to a splendid and most profitable convention. G. H. C. Stoney is already planning to do all he can to give every one a hearty welcome.

Ohio.

John P. Sala has been holding a meeting at Wellington, with good results.——Victor Dorris began a meeting with Brother Sala at Elyria, Feb. 4.——D. Webster is now preaching for the church at Brunswick. Brother Webster recently changed his name from Baptist to Christian. He will probably preach for some other church near by.——I. H. Durfee held a good meeting with D. W. Miller and the Solon church. There were 50 additions and a general stirring up of the community. Brother Miller has done excellent service at Solon. Brother Durfee is now helping Brother Walker at Killbuck.——John E. Pounds is with C. E. Taylor and the Sebring church in a meeting. Brother Pounds began this meeting and was called home by the death of his wife's mother.

Splendid missionary rallies have been held in several parts of Ohio in the interest of the foreign offering. The interest in these things is deepening as the months go by. There is a hopeful outlook throughout Ohio for a greatly increased offering.

Herbert Yeuell and Pastor Burt have been doing things at Niles.——F. M. Fields is being assisted by the Saxtons as musical directors in a meeting at Geneva. The outlook for good results is promising.——Walter Mansel held his own meeting at West Fourth Avenue, Columbus, which resulted in several being added to the saved.

In the last Ohio letter we omitted to say that the Fourth Church, Akron, presented Pastor McDonald with a gold watch for Christmas; also that the basement of the church has been fitted up for Sunday-school work. By the misplacement of the letter conveying the news it was omitted.——The Ætna Street Church in Cleveland had the motto, "As many men as women," for this year. While Pastor Butchart persists in remaining a bachelor he will help the realization of the motto.

By the time this is in print Ohio will have a 2-cent-a-mile railroad law. It has passed the senate without a dissenting vote. The house will now rush it through. We also have information from a representative that the most stringent anti-cigarette bill of all the states will be passed. It is also almost certain that a "search and seizure" temperance law and a new district option law will be enacted. The new district option bill provides for the settling of the question by petition without the expense of an election. The W. C. T. U. is pressing the bill to give women the ballot at local option elections. It may pass, but it is in doubt yet.

Toledo Jottings.

We are all planning for the work of the year, hoping that we may be able to achieve something great this year. We are in a union campaign, all the churches of the city engaged. For three months we have been conducting meetings in the shops of the city, also a down-town meeting for business men, together with special prayer-meetings in the different districts.

We hope all this may bring the desired results and that thousands may be won to Christ. I am chairman of the shop meetings. All the churches of the city are progressing. We recently organized a men's meeting that includes all our churches and promises to be a splendid power in uniting the forces and in assisting in many ways.

Our churches all improved the missionary collections, but we hope to be able to do more this year. We do not know what the results will be in the union service, but we are certain we shall bring our church into closer fellowship with the other churches of the city, and give us an opportunity to get our plea before them.

At the last meeting of our city union, composed of all the churches of the city of all denominations, the writer was elected president for the coming year.

J. O. SHELBURNE.

That the church is doing a good work among the student body is evident from the fact that out of a class of eleven all but two are Christians. The principal of the school is an earnest Christian worker and much of our success is due to his work and influence. Our mission study class of fourteen members is doing fine work, not only in the class room but in the circulation of missionary literature among the members of the congregation. All are enthusiastic over the work.—L. E. Chase.

Whitten, Jan. 30.—Closed our twenty-three days' meeting, with 70 added. There is force enough in the new membership to make a self-sustaining church if it were necessary. There was only one collection taken for the evangelist and we had the privilege of receiving more than we had asked for our work. At least eighty per cent of the additions are adults. A church was organized with 129 members; a Sunday-school with 100 members; a ladies' aid society with 30 members and a Y. P. S. C. E. with 40 members. The people showed their appreciation of the work done in their midst by their liberality in giving for the expense of the meeting. Kenton, Feb. 9.—Our meeting, conducted by W. H. Pinkerton, of Paducah, Ky., and P. M. Kendall, of Columbus, Ind., as evangelists, closed with 52 additions—37 by confession and baptism and 15 by letter and statement. ### OKLAHOMA.

Enid, Feb. 2.—Large audiences; 6 additions, making 135 in one year. I am now in a revival meeting at Ames.—Scott Anderson.

TEXAS.

San Antonio, Feb. 5.—The largest audiences yesterday, since my coming, a month ago. There were 3 confessions.—D. D. Boyle.

Mineral Wells, Jan. 29.—Have just closed a three weeks' meeting here. When I came, the church, not having a preacher for some time, was much discouraged, and thought that the cause was hopelessly gone. But the meeting revived the members, gave them fresh courage and inspired them to hope for greater things. There were 55 additions, about half of whom were by primary obedience, and the others were mostly reclaimed. The church and Sunday-school have new life and a great hope. Money was raised to employ a man of ability, and negotiations are going on between the church and one of our best pastors and preachers, and it is confidently believed that he will accept. Mineral Wells is a growing city. Thousands come here annually to drink these healing waters, and thousands are permanently cured. Its possibilities are great. A preacher, preaching to a Mineral Wells audience, is preaching to people from almost every state in the United States, hence the necessity of having a preacher of ability.—B. B. Sanders, Austin, Texas.

JESUS' POWER TO FORGIVE.—Mark 2:1-12.

Memory Verse, 5.

Golden Text.—The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins.—Mark 2:10.

The day of miracles in Capernaum, which formed the subject of the last lesson, was apparently the beginning of a somewhat extended tour of preaching, teaching and healing throughout the towns of Galilee (Mark 1:35-45). On this tour Jesus made it his practice, as he had done in Capernaum, to use the synagogue as his place of preaching.

This first preaching tour in Galilee contributed largely to the establishment of the fame and popularity of Jesus, both as a teacher, and more especially as a healer. In spite of his efforts to keep the latter phase of his activity somewhat in the background, the cures which he wrought upon lepers and demoniacs created what amounted to a sensation, and he was compelled to retire for a time into less populous regions. It was always necessary for Jesus to guard against superficial popularity and to prevent the people from following him as a mere wonder-worker.

Coming again out of the brief retirement which followed this preaching tour, he entered Capernaum and was again beset by crowds eager to see his marvels and by some, perhaps, who were eager also to hear his words. As he was teaching in a house, there was brought in to him the paralytic who was let down through the roof. The healing of this man gratified the crowd and doubtless met their expectations, but the words which accompanied the healing aroused surprise and criticism: "Son, thy sins are forgiven."

In the criticism which the scribes on this occasion thought, but did not utter, we see the real beginning of the attitude of hostility which they soon came to assume toward him. The incidents immediately following this showed the growth of this enmity and the clear development of the issue between Jesus and the scribes. The call of Matthew, the publican, outraged Pharisaic ideas of orthodoxy and patriotism. The dispute about fasting and the question of the proper observance of the Sabbath, as illustrated in the incident of the plucking of the grain and the healing of the withered hand on the Sabbath day, further illustrate the growing hostility.

Jesus answered those who criticised his assumption of power to forgive sins by reminding his critics that the cure itself, to say nothing of the forgiveness of sins, was an indication of divine power. For one of them to forgive sins would have been no more impossible than to perform the cure. Both acts stand together in the category of things impossible to men, but possible to God. If, then, he is able before their very eyes to do one, they can not reasonably accuse him of blasphemy if he assumes to do the other.

MISSION WORK IN THE FOREIGN FIELD (JAPAN).—Isa. 50:4-10.

That Word that is a lamp to our feet and a light to our pathway never glows about us with such ethereal and prophetic radiance as when being borne into the darkness to guide others out of sin and fear and sorrow home to the Father's home.

---

"Tell me the size of your world and I will tell you the size of your heart. The most fundamental thing that is to be accomplished by the centennial agitation is to bring all the Disciples of Christ to behold all of the world that God himself sees—all that was contemplated when he gave his only begotten Son."—W. R. Warren.

---

Mrs. Fox, proud mother of four little canines, spoke disdainfully to her neighbor, the lioness, with but a single whelp in her lair. "I know I have but one, but this one is a lion," she replied with the hauteur of a true queen of the forest. So may our missionaries say while laboring among those marvelous islanders, we may not have many converts, but what we have are Japanese, the true lords of the Orient.

---

We can as easily interpret Jesus out of the trinity as to so interpret, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," as to make it mean anything less than our imperative duty to bear or send the everlasting Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth.

---

Right now is the nick of time for Disciples to evangelize Japan. Her people are going to accept some form of Christianity, and are apt to take that readiest at hand. Why let them first be schooled in sectarianism? Let us cultivate the virgin soil. Let us treble our missionary force there each year till the centennial, and then present sensational statistics for the emulation of other religious bodies. Let us enable Jesus to look on Japan, see the travail of his soul and be satisfied.

---

There is that about Christianity which makes nations masterful. The dominant powers of earth are Christian, and the more uncorrupted their Christianity, the mightier they are. The subtle-minded Japanese long since observed this, and, prematurely perhaps, by a resolution adopted by their parliament, declared Japan to be a Christian nation. We may smile at their naive way of "Christianizing" their empire, but their legislation is at least a tribute to the greatness they had seen imparted to other lands by faith in the Nazarene.

---

Japan is a striking illustration of the variety of blessings that come to paganism through the preaching of the Gospel. Not only are her people freed from their terror of the cruel divinities superstition had created for them; not only are their spiritual natures being revivified and made to thrill with the knowledge of the higher life and yearnings for it, but material blessings are following in its wake. To it is due their increasing commercial importance, with its gainful employ, meaning better food, homes and clothing. And but for it, Japan would to-day be ground under the heel of Russian despotism.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION. – Luke 2:52; 1 Thess. 5:23.

Received aright, and all our disappointments and sorrows, our temptations and failures, our weaknesses and remorsefulness, our triumphs and rejoicings, our vision hours and spiritual elations are elements in the curriculum of Christian education.

---

Its Scripturalness: Samuel's school of prophets, 1 Sam. 19:19; Elijah and Elisha's Bible college, 2 Kings 2:1-15; Gamaliel's school for the rabbis, Acts 5:33-40; 22:2; Jesus a Teacher, Matt. 5:1; John 3:1, 2; Paul sought to win students, Acts 19:9; Timothy trained at home, 2 Tim. 1:3-5.

---

We rejoice with justifiable pride over the excellent colleges and universities under the auspices of our churches, but still our greatest hope for Christian culture is in the homes where saintly Eunices and Loises are teaching young Timothys, and Hannahs are dedicating little Samuels, and Josephs and Marys are rearing the sons of God in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

---

Jesus, the world's greatest preacher, grouped about him a band of disciples in whom he inculcated knowledge of the kingdom and love for it. Saul, who stands next to the Master in ministerial achievements, was seldom without an understudy—Luke, Mark, Timothy, Titus, Silas or Barnabas—whom he was filling with his own spirit for the multiplication of the Gospel. This suggests to us opportunities for becoming factors in Christian education, even if, like them, we are too poor to endow colleges or wholly support students there. Let us invite into our company some less informed than ourselves and inspire them with zeal for knowledge and love for God and the lost.

There is little to interest one in the alphabets of the various languages. The beauty of the classics appears only after we catch the spirit of their historians, poets, and orators, and on swift wings follow them without stopping to spell out words and study their translation. Too many of us are so perfunctory in our efforts for Christian education that we are, after many years in the school of Christ, still perplexed by the mere alphabet employed for telling of the joys and triumphs, the crosses and glory of faith and hope and love. When we graduate into some of the higher classes, the Book will be no longer a task, but a thrilling delight, and time for reading it a coveted treasure.

No matter how many Bible colleges we establish, they are useless without students. The institution of the school is not the first step in the process of making a preacher. The youth selects his school after the purpose of giving his life to the ministry is already formed in his heart. Rarely does the college president know of his intention till the future preacher presents himself for matriculation. The initiative of giving us an educated ministry is taken in the home. We pray that in many prayer-meetings to-night parents will resolve to give at least one son to the ministry of the Word and bring to bear upon them influences that will ultimately enroll them among the student body of one of our best schools.

Jesus had acquired such proficiency in sacred learning at twelve years as to astonish the wise men frequenting the temple, and he never quit increasing "in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." The trouble with so many is they cease adding to their religious education too soon after this period. Many still under middle age are dependent on what they learned in childhood for all their knowledge of the Scriptures. If Christians, whose chief employ should be fitting themselves and others for the skies, would give as much time to searching the Scriptures daily as they do to the perusal of secular papers, how wise unto salvation they would become, and how successfully Bible study would be commended to those younger in the faith! To the middle aged and older we address this special plea to honor God more by greater present day familiarity with his commands and promises, and the histories of the great dispensations of his saving grace.

Prayer for the Holy Spirit.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Has the Christian a right, divinely given, to pray for the Holy Spirit, to guide, console, comfort, and lead us? I profoundly regret that such a question should have been raised among us. Our success numerically is of no avail, unless those who come to the church come with their minds and hearts imbued with the love of Christ and influence of the Holy Spirit upon their future lives. If the Spirit helps us only in getting into the church—if this is the limit of his influence and help, then I have made the most serious mistake of my life; and, more—I have lived in rebellion all these years, for if I have been praying contrary to the will of God, I have not only been praying without a promise, but have been treating the authority of Christ with disrespect. This matter becomes more serious as we seriously contemplate it. This may all be true, some one may say, and the fact still remains true that I have no right as a child of God, to ask him to help me by the "supply" of his Holy Spirit (Phil. 1:19). Paul, at the time the above was written, was passing through new trials and suffering, and under the pressure of this sad state of things, he writes: "For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ." It would require, it seems to me, a great effort to place the "supply of the Spirit" alluded to by Paul in the above, to the Spirit received by new converts on the day of Pentecost. The word "supply" signifies, in modern use, a continual resource. It can hardly be affirmed that Paul means a supply of the disposition or mind of Christ, as in Phil. 2:5, as has been claimed. It may mean this, but surely means more.

In the teachings of Christ, in the first books of the New Testament, before the church was established, he gave the manner or way in which the disciples were to receive the Holy Spirit. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him" (Luke 11:13)? I have always transferred this passage to the established church of Christ, and applied the language of Christ to the members of that church. It certainly had a meaning and a place, in the then future church of Christ, and it is equally certain that it does not find its place on the day of Pentecost.

Nor does it find recognition in our manner of receiving persons into our fellowship. On the day of Pentecost, the Holy Spirit was not received by asking for it, but through obedience to the commandments of Christ, made known by Peter. It can not be that the passage alluded to was addressed exclusively to the apostles, as is often claimed, for the reason given by Christ, in the tenth verse in the same chapter: "For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." This settles the point of apostolic exclusiveness Our people are evidently correct in making the reception of the Holy Spirit conditional upon obedience through a sincere faith in Christ, so far as relates to the unconverted; and, just as true is it that the continued supply of the Spirit depends upon our continued obedience to Christ in the observance of the "all things" connected with the great commission.

It has not been my pleasure to read your recent work upon the Holy Spirit, but I hope to soon. If the conclusions in this letter conflict or correspond with the views expressed in your work, it is entirely without intent, for the reason that I have not read the work. JOSEPH LOWE.

Union Effort in Texas.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I am greatly interested in your articles in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on the subject of Christian union, historically considered, and I very much enjoy reading them. I am sure that no other religious paper published is advocating union in such strong terms as is THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

A recent incident connected with my ministry here will be of interest, too, I am quite sure. In my work I am more or less associated with Rev. George Eaves, pastor of the Central Congregational Church of this city and a very brainy and cultured gentleman. He is advocating, everywhere, Christian union. A few days since I was talking with him on this paramount subject and he said to me that he was advocating "real union," and that he was "in this movement up to his neck." As a result of our conversation we will exchange pulpits next Lord's day—he in the East Dallas and I in the Central Congregational. The two pastors have formed an "admiration society" seeking to bring about "real unity" among the churches with which we are connected and the respective congregations are saying "howdy" in no uncertain terms. Brother Eaves said to me that his church would listen to me gladly.

East Dallas joins with you in the great plea for Christian union and she expects to do her part in the "Four Years Crusade."

CRAIG.

Minerva Stephenson Craig, wife of Joseph Craig, elder of Central Christian Church and superintendent of the Sunday-school, passed away on Jan. 9, 1906, after a ten days' illness. Sister Craig was born in 1860, at Maryville, Mo., where she grew to womanhood, was married in 1885, where her son, Roland E., the only child, was born in 1888, and back to Maryville the body will be taken to its final resting place. During all her married life our sister continued an invalid, and it was to help her that the family came to San Diego in 1898 to reside. The house of poor health, however, she converted into a realm of service, and pain and confinement constituted a background before which played the bright colors of Christian patience and unselfish ministry to those who came within. A devoted wife, a doting mother, a considerate neighbor, she dispensed the sunshine of good cheer to all. Surely "she hath done what she could." Seldom has it been given to a community to see the testimonials of sympathy which came to the bereaved ones. The funeral services, conducted by the writer at the church Jan. 14, were attended by hundreds of heartfelt mourners. Besides husband and son, Sister Craig left two sisters to mourn her loss, Mrs. John M. Holt, of Miles City, Mont., and Mrs. H. M. Turner, of Chicago, Ill.

STRATTON.

Mrs. Cynthia M. Stratton (wife of the late Dr. F. M. Stratton, well known in Illinois, Texas and California), died in San Jose, Cal., Jan. 8, 1906. She leaves two sons, Dr. J. A. Stratton, an eminent physician at Newman, Cal., and F. M. Stratton, Jr., of San Jose. She was born in St. Augustine, Ill., educated at Abingdon College, obeyed the Gospel and became a member of the church at Abingdon, Ill. Two brothers, Samuel H. and John M. Bradbury, and three sisters, Mrs. Eli Fisher, Mrs. Mary Pennington and Miss Ida Humes, survive her. This family of Bradburys were distant relatives of the noted singer, W. B. Bradbury. Mrs. Stratton and her husband were always active church workers and strong supporters of our mission work in California. She was in her 62nd year at the time of her death.

Life's Purpose.

By Helen B. Young.

Are you lingering 'neath some shadow
That was made by human mind?
Are you waiting for the sunlight
That you know lies far behind?
Do you know that all the torment
You are conjuring as you wait,
Is not worth an empty bubble,
And will meet with equal fate?

'Tis the weak who need the courage
To go on when all seems dark,
Not the strong who've faced the battle,
And have passed beyond the mark.
Count yourself among the strong ones,
With a helping hand to give,
Rising 'bove all limitations,
Cheering others while you live.

Working then without the merit,
Or the baubles others seek,
Bringeth to your life a mission,
To go on with patience meek.
Strive then ever to be foremost
In this work of human care,
Questioning no more the purpose
That your mind feels in despair.

For in time you'll lift the shadow
That engulfed your soul at first,
You will know Life's every purpose,
At her Fountain quench your thirst,
Know that all leads up the mountain,
To the pathway unto God,
Save yourself by saving others,
Wait not for the world's applaud.

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of the First Four Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either one of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. A consultation of the kind-hearted people of the town is to be held to decide upon what to do with the two children. In the meantime they are cared for by Miss Glory Aggency, a maiden lady, who lives with her brother, Mr. Merlin Aggency, who is considered "queer." The consultation about the children is held, but comes to no definite conclusion. This leaves the twins still on Miss Glory's hands, who has absolutely refused to keep them longer.]

CHAPTER V.

It was with real alarm that Raymund Revore hurried after old Mr. Merlin Aggency. He had never known of the venerable little man's being upon the streets, and he did not know what might happen, on account of the scattered wits of the ex-superintendent of the county-schools. Poor Mr. Merlin Aggency was indeed in a perfect maze. There were all the trees to be counted, as he hurried along, the houses to be classified and summed up, the very telephone-wires to be distinguished. His brain hummed with the enormous amount of work thrown upon it. When Raymund overtook him, they had come to the main part of Crawley.

"Oh, Mr. Aggency, let us go home!" pleaded the youth. "Your sister will be so uneasy."

"No, no," said the other hurriedly. "Let us go in here." He bustled into a grocer's store, and Raymund followed in helpless perplexity. "Here is work to do!" cried the old man, rubbing his hands with satisfaction. "Look at the cups, boy; look at the plates—and so many kinds! And the vegetables—shall we count the cabbages first?"

The grocer was Mr. Walker. He came forward and, after a curious look at Mr. Merlin Aggency, said to the anxious companion, "Say, Raymund, when do you think you can settle that little bill with us? I have been looking at the books. Your mother owed us $35.27."

"I will pay every cent of it, Mr. Walker," said Raymund, distressed, "just as soon as I can make the money. Could I work it out for you? Maybe you could use me as a clerk. I am only twelve years old; but I could do lots of things—and I would always be here at the right time." Raymund, in his eagerness, half forgot his uneasiness over Mr. Merlin Aggency.

"Nine head in this basket," the latter announced. "I wish I had my ledger here."

"I might find something for you to do," said Mr. Walker, a heavily-bearded man in a long drab-colored apron, "but I couldn't afford you over $1.50 a week—not high wages. It would take you a long time to work out $35, and in the meantime, what would you live on? I understand all your furniture is mortgaged, and you have other debts as heavy as mine."

Raymund hung his head. "I will pay when I can," he murmured.

"I never refused your mother," said Mr. Walker, "nor let her think herself unwelcome. She was a poor widow. But I can't afford to lose that $35, and I want you to keep it in your mind. But you are only a child—you'll never think of it when you are grown."

"Indeed, I will pay every cent of it!" cried Raymund, lifting his head.

"Well, well," said Mr Walker gently, "I oughtn't to trouble you about it, I suppose. Only I hate to lose $35. If I hadn't had it, it wouldn't be so bad. But having it and losing it, always galls me. Here—take this candy to Rhoda—it's all right—don't feel bad—you haven't got anything and I have—"

Miss Glory and Rhoda now entered the store. The old lady darted one reproachful glance at Raymund, and took her brother's arm. "I must count these cups, sister Glory," said Mr. Merlin Aggency feverishly. "But my mind is burdened. There are nine head of cabbage in one basket, a dozen in the corner—thirty-six colored plates—I can not carry all this in my mind."

"We will go home," said Miss Glory softly, "and you shall write it all down, and that will make your mind easy."

So they went home; but it did not ease the old man's mind. He had been too excited by his unwonted experience. His brain was crowded with figures that refused to be assorted. He was obliged to be put to bed in the darkened room, while Miss Glory, though still in the relentless grasp of her sick headache, waited on him, and sat by his side, stroking his hand as tenderly as a mother. It had all been caused by Raymund's letting the feeble-minded gentleman escape his watchcare. Miss Glory blamed him bitterly, but she did not blame him in speech. Not one reproachful word did the old lady utter. That night Mr. Merlin Aggency was so ill that Raymund had to sleep in the company bedroom. He did not appear at the table the next day, and in answer to Raymund's penitent inquiry, Miss Glory replied briefly, "He is quite ill."

Three o'clock was the hour set for the meeting of the ladies to decide about the disposal of the twins. None of them, to be sure, came at the time set, and Raymund and Rhoda, who were to be present, found the delay almost unbearable, from their suspense about the orphan home. Since the meeting was one purely of kindness, no blame could be attached for unpunctuality. The children found that the ladies, all of whom they knew quite well, were in an indefinite sense different from what they had seemed to be. In fact, Raymund and Rhoda, when they had a mother to take care of them, had been rather popular with the neighbors. It was pleasant to see the pretty children pass the window, their faces lit up with smiles, and their light hair giving a quaint effect of silver in the sunlight.

But now, it was different. The twins were orphans without a cent in the world, and somebody must see to their support. Each lady felt that there was too much work and care in her life to assume such a responsibility, and each feared to be too friendly to the orphans for fear of arousing false hopes. After the ladies had assembled, there was a wait of at least an hour until Mrs. Omer came. By some means, perhaps by no means that could be set forth in such a material way as ink or type, Mrs. Omer had come to the position among her friends of "leader." Mrs. Omer's clubs never ventured to transact any business unless Mrs. Omer were present, although the lady would never under any circumstances allow herself to be elected to an office. Perhaps she felt that such a thing as a treasurer or president is discernible and capable of analysis and dissection. But being a leader quite baffles attempts at explanation. Until she came, the ladies sat for the most part in painful silence, or spoke in constrained, small voices. The effect of the presence of the orphans in their straight-backed chairs was not unlike that of the coffin at a funeral. Raymund and Rhoda had ceased to be ordinary human beings with sensibilities, desires, aspirations. They were simply orphans whose mother had been a respected church-member, and whom it would never do to send to the poor house.

When Mrs. Omer came, Miss Glory announced the situation. "Now, ladies, these children have nothing in the world—the very clothes on their backs are owed for. Let us speak plainly. I believe in calling things by their names, and the name of this thing is dire, abject poverty. The children can not do hard work, they have been brought up like the children of well-to-do people."

Mrs. Walker, the grocer's wife, smiled kindly at Rhoda, and said "I think Rhoda is a little cook. Didn't I hear that she cooked for her mother while she was sick?"

"I cooked for mother," said Rhoda, her eyes filling. "She always seemed pleased."

"And it was pretty good," said Raymund staunchly. He added, "There are so many things you can get already fixed, you know."

The ladies smiled—all except Miss Glory who remembered Rhoda's dinner—and Mrs. Omer; Mrs. Omer did not smile because she was a leader. They discussed the question from every point of view, even from that of Miss Glory's keeping the children.

"No," said Miss Glory firmly, "I am willing to have them here one week; but I do not understand children; I tried them, thinking perhaps I might find them of use. They meant to help me; they are good children; but they are not for me."

"I have five children of my own," said Mrs. Walker, "and I find my hands pretty full."

"I have no children to care for, now that the last has married and gone west," said Mrs. Grice, a grey-haired lady of refined bearing, "but my health is not good—"

"In fact," interposed another, "none of us could burden ourselves with the care of additional children. Are there not homes for such orphans where they may be kindly treated and made to feel happy?"

Mrs. Omer now spoke. "They are too old to be regularly admitted into an orphan home of our knowledge. But there is a certain home known to me—in fact I am intimate with the leaders of the official board of the organization—in fact I have many acquaintances among influential people both in the larger cities and in smaller towns—"Mrs. Omer swelled. It was a physical manifestation which could not be unobserved. Mrs. Walker secretly nudged her neighbor; but though the ladies might squirm under Mrs. Omer's evident highness of spirit, they never came to open revolt.

"This is what I will do," Mrs. Omer finally announced. "I will myself go to Kansas City, and I will myself call upon these influential members of the executive board, and I will myself urge the pitiful case of these children. I will myself plead with them to give the children room until they can find homes. I do not think it will be long before some good heart will be touched, believing he can get enough work from Rhoda and Raymund to pay for their care. They are no longer helpless children. They are intelligent. They can be taught to work."

"In the meantime," said Miss Glory, "what is to be done when my week is out? Who will take them till these 'influential members' can meet and decide?"

There was no answer. Rhoda and Raymund, pale and uncomfortable, sat stiffly in their straight-backed chairs, trying not to look at any lady in particular lest their glance be construed as an appeal.

"Suppose," Mrs. Grice said finally, when the silence had grown painful, "we make a collection to pay Miss Glory—"

"No," Miss Glory interposed, "I do not understand children. I can not possibly keep them longer than a week. It seems to tear up my home and make everything different. I am an old maid, set in my ways, and I can not keep them more than a week."

"What can we do?" murmured Mrs. Walker. The leader offered no suggestion.

"Let us adjourn, then," said Mrs. Walker, "for I sat here an hour waiting for the meeting to begin, and my children need me at home."

"Why, yes," said the ladies, rising brightly. For a moment, clouded by the sorrow and need of the situation, they had forgotten that they could adjourn, go home and, as it were, escape from the orphans. They did so as quickly as half a dozen ladies can separate from a meeting which has the least tinge of social interest. Rhoda and Raymund, feeling that the world had little room for them, were oppressed with unutterable sadness. The death of their mother overwhelmed them anew, as if it had just taken place—as if they had not already wept through long, solitary hours.

Washing up after a Missionary.

An old woman at Jhansi, in North India, is a Brahman of strictest sect. She is also mother of a princess who is very ill, and has called in Dr. Blanche Monro of the Woman's Union Missionary Society. She dismisses the lady doctor each time with smiles, and thanks, and rich rewards. Then she grimly orders her servants to wash everything that the foreign lady has touched—the floor, the table and chairs, her own clothes, and finally herself. After she has taken a bath, she feels pure once more. We can now imagine the tremendous determination required by a Brahman who dares profess faith in Christ.

Born that Way.

A member of the House from New England tells of an occasion when he overheard an amusing colloquy between the late Thomas B. Reed and a darky barber.

The "tonsorial artist" was inclined to be talkative, but to all his efforts at conversation the big man from Maine returned only a monosyllable or a grunt.

Finally, the barber patted the cranium of the speaker, whereon reposed one or two stray locks, saying:

"De hair's gettin' pretty thin, sah. Been that way long?"

"I was born that way," dryly returned Reed.

Moans Have Language.

The "London Lancet" has been discussing "The Language of Moans." Says that publication:

"There is no doubt that there is considerable mental comfort and relief obtained from a series of long drawn sighs during a period of sorrowful depression, or from noisy ejaculations of the nature of groans and moans made by a sufferer from such a painful disorder as acute dyspepsia, or violent toothache.

"Sobbing, sighing, moaning and groaning are as it were sentences in a monosyllabic language. These sounds are really the vocal representation of certain overwrought physical or mental states consequent upon a longer or shorter period of inhibition of the rhythmic discharge of the respiratory centers situated in the spinal bulb; the diaphragm has been fixed, the breath either voluntarily or involuntarily has been held or has been shallow, while breathless introspective attention has been paid to some absorbing pain or sorrow."

Eighty Per Cent of Man is Water, Says Professor.

Prof. Vivian Lewes, of London, is authority for the statement that man is made of dust and water, at least 80 per cent being water. In a lecture before children on "Our Atmosphere and Its Wonders," he declared that modern science could go almost as far, though not quite as far, as one ardent physiologist, who described a man as being made of a few handfuls of dust and six buckets of water. Professor Lewes mentioned the fact in order to prove that such substances as carbon dioxide and water vapor, instead of being impurities, were necessary constituents of the atmosphere. Without water vapor in the air the 80 per cent of liquid in the human body would be insidiously abstracted. Man's shadow would rapidly grow less, the final result being a small piece of jerked meat, resembling a diminutive mummy.

Martha of Valley Forge.

A Romance of the Revolution.

BY GILBERT PATTON BROWN.

During the latter part of the colonial period and throughout the war of the Revolution there lived in Chester county in Pennsylvania a certain family known for its piety, honesty of purpose and devotion to its faith in Deity. It is Sunday in the year of 1778 in the rough old warrior, February. There is to be held at the little old Quaker Temple, "ye Friends Meeting-house," a special service "in honour of ye Son of ye living God." Occasionally a number of Continental soldiers attend Sunday service at this old landmark of Valley Forge.

"Didst thee see any of the "rebels" at the meeting this morning?" said Mrs. Hannah Clough to her eldest daughter, Martha, who, as she had supposed, had been attending service at Cedar Hollow.

"I did not go there, mamma, dear, and thee must know that I heard a preacher of Mister George Washington's army."

What, thee attended a 'rebel' meeting?" quickly asked the aged mother, whose silvery gray hair shone by the old open fireplace, in that drawing room of generations.

"Yea," replied Martha, "and George Washington prayed; he did not pray alone for the 'rebels' but he asked God to be merciful to all the human race."

At this time the young girl's words summoned the attention of the entire household.

The snow is deep, the day very cold, and but a short way from the Clough homestead is the encampment of the patriots of the "Thirteen Colonies," in whose midst are three hideous figures—disease, starvation and nakedness. The sympathy of the Clough family is with the king and his cause. It is while Lord General Howe and his well drilled soldiers are enjoying the banquets and balls of gay Philadelphia that Martha Clough fully realizes the most critical situation of the Continentals. It has for some time been in her heart to visit the freezing defenders of American liberty.

"Didst thou really hear George Washington pray?" asked the father of the family.

"Yea, father, and he sent you his love," quickly answers Martha, who is happily surprised to learn the family's attitude toward her independent and brave action. As she continues in her description of the critical situation, the family becomes more and more interested, and when the shades of night draw near, farmer Jonas Clough, in a wagon loaded with provisions, with Martha by his side, starts for the patriot camp. It is a cold night in the latter part of the month.

As they are on their journey from this old-time mansion amid the white hills of historic Chester county their minds are yonder where sits in a spacious chamber an American patrician of forty-six years, whose attire is black velvet. This gentleman patriot is praying for the cause of his countrymen; he is kneeling, with bowed head.

"Didst thee think, father, I had transgressed against God by attending a rebel meeting?" asks the fair Quakeress as they slowly drive toward the freezing soldiers. A moment of silence prevails, then the aged Quaker replies, "Thee must remember that they have rebelled against the King."

"And yes, father, dear," continues the petite maiden, "and thee must remember that Jesus rebelled against the old law." The father's heart has at this time become softened and he too is now praying for the "rebel chief, Mister George Washington."

The moon looks down upon the eastern hills of the land of Pennsylvania, when they are met by an outpost of Washington's Guard.

"Who comes here?" asks the guard.

"Martha Clough with provisions," is the reply. "I want to see Mister George Washington. I heard him pray this morning."

The young soldier is deeply interested in the new aspect, and as he remembers her from the service in the morning, conducted by Chaplain Evans, he places the yard picket at his post and endeavors to bring Washington in person to the spot. In a short time the great-hearted Virginian is at the side of the farm wagon, when the Quakeress of Cedar Hollow introduces her aged father and says:

"This morning, Mister Washington, I heard thee pray, and here's what father and I have brought thee."

A religious silence dwells about the headquarters of the Continental army. The aged Quaker stands with bowed head; at last he speaks, "Friend Washington, trust in Christ, he died for thee, yea thee, a rebel chief." Martha stands near her father, she is dressed in the garb of her faith, a beautiful girl, lately ripened into perfect womanhood. Her deep blue eyes, together with her clearly defined brows and impressive forehead, combine in an expression of an intellectual Anglo-Saxon.

Tears flow down the cheeks of the Virginian planter as he welcomes them on this bitter cold night to the Potts mansion. The doors of the giant barn are opened and the team cared for. And this is how fair Martha Clough and her venerable father became guests on a winter night at Washington's headquarters.

Before the company retires for the night she hears a second prayer at Valley Forge. The next morning they depart for home, and the young soldier who was on picket the night before wraps his army blanket around the fair Quakeress.

The following Sunday the Clough family attend divine worship with the chiefs of the Continental army, and the belle of Cedar Hollow sits next to James Randolph whose homespun blanket she returns with a shy courtesy, which causes the brave soldier's heart to beat as fast as it did the hour when he won his first battle. From that day young James was a welcome guest at the Quaker dwelling.

Thus began the friendship of James Randolph and Martha Clough, and from that moment sweet Cupid camped on their youthful trail.

Soon the patriots broke camp and moved on to Barron Hill, where a fierce battle ensued, in which James Randolph fought with distinguished valor.

The fourth day of July (1778) finds the Continental army near Morristown, where "vast numbers of our men fell down with heat," "and some died" and where "was celebrated the anniversary of the Declaration of the American Independence by the whole army being turned out under arms, and the artillery being interspersed through the whole army except thirteen pieces, which were placed on the right of the army seconded by running fire, first through the front line of cannon and musketry and then the second line, succeeded by three cheers from the whole army, after proclaiming perpetual and undisturbed independence to the United States of America." The army had moved with great rapidity. The celebrating of Independence day had been framed in the winter quarters of Valley Forge and in the army lodges of Free Masons. Large numbers of farmers had followed the army on their march from Monmouth toward Morristown, and fair ladies, too, in whose breasts there beat a heart true to the cause of liberty, assembled around the patriot host, and Martha, togther with her aged father, came along.

"Didst thee think I could remain behind, James?" asked Martha, as the morning sun came peeping o'er the eastern hills and as James was making ready for his part of the day's program. "Martha, dear," replied the boy-volunteer, as tears flowed down his fatigued face, "King George may crush out the American cause, but I thank God for his presence with us, and that you, the fairest one in all Chester county, have come into my poor life."

"James, my dear," replied Martha, "thee must know that the God of battles loves a Christian and an honest man." The hour of the day's celebration had then arrived; the friends of the soldiers were gathered in the shade of clusters of oaks, on the brow of a small hill.

Manly there mounted a white horse, the slender form of a son of the Old Dominion state. "Private Randolph, as my aid-de-camp for the day, you will convey these valuable papers, together with my respects, to General Washington." Upon the fifth day of July (his term of enlistment being ended) he was mustered out.

They were married at sunrise, and "ye drums beat for ye wedding march."

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Israel Evans, chaplain of the famous New York Brigade, and none other than the soldier-preacher whose sermon (together with the prayer of Washington) had won to the American cause the tender heart of a fair Quakeress.

The scene was a most unique and beautiful one, the patriot chiefs assembled at the headquarters of General Washington. An army of twelve thousand weary and heart-worn soldiers stood in the morning sun with uncovered heads. "Swear ye upon the King James Bible," spoke Chaplain Evans, in distinct tone, concluding, "I now declare you husband and wife, and may the blessings of heaven rest upon you both, Amen." The army moved on through New Jersey; farmer Jonas Clough found himself the happy recipient of a new son-in-law.

The couple spent the remainder of their lives amid rural surroundings and in the land where was first reared the holy altar of religious toleration. In Mrs. Martha Clough Randolph's declining years she took pleasure in telling her neighbors and many friends of the prayer of the immortal Washington at Valley Forge, how her tender heart was charmed by the manly face of her first and only lover, and how she was won to the cause which was instrumental in establishing the world's greatest republic. In a rural spot in Chester county are two lonely graves, hidden from view by wild flowers there growing in abundance. Within these sacred mounds rest all that is mortal of this couple to whose lives no story was dearer than that of the life of Jesus of Nazareth, the once shepherd boy of the land of David.

Gleanings From the Magazines.

Spring for the Shut-Ins.

If you wish to know a few trees and shrubs intimately and personally, there is no better way to accomplish it than to cut a few twigs, put them in a vase of water in a sunny window, and watch the development of the tightly closed and frozen buds from the first indication of their awakening to the opening of the flower and unfolding of the leaves. The February "Garden Magazine" has an article on this subject, and tells what shrubs are most suitable to use.

To Conciliate the Gods.

Just at night, if you happen to be within the gates of Canton, you will witness one of the little performances that is supposed to deceive the prowling spirits of the night bent upon evil intent, the while conciliating them should they penetrate the deception. Each little and big shop possesses a miniature fireplace built into the side of the entrance. Prayers printed on rice paper form the fuel with which to offer up incense to the "bogy man" who is supposed to make the nocturnal visits. Beholding the smoke, he is supposed to assume that no one lives within, and therefore passes by; but should he "catch on" and stop to investigate, he finds that the prayer papers on the altar bear inscriptions attributing to him such virtues and magnanimity that his wrath is appeased and he turns from his evil intent.—Edwin Wildman in the Chautauquan.

Lincoln's Hat His Favorite Receptacle for Letters and Papers.

There was nothing mechanical, precise or methodical about the man, and in all those housewifely virtues which characterized the careful, orderly, exact solicitor, he was utterly deficient. He never knew where his papers were, and apparently the only attempt he ever made to better the disorder was to write on one of his bundles of papers which littered his desk, "When you can't find It anywhere else, look in this." But that was long after the firm of Stuart & Lincoln had dissolved, and even then we find him explaining to a correspondent that he had placed his letter inside an old hat and had thus neglected answering it, which shows he had not wholly outgrown the habit of his post office days. Indeed, his hat continued to be his favorite receptacle for papers as long as he lived, and he never acquired any sense of order.—Frederick Trevor Hills in the Century.

A Twisted Text.

"Be not overcome with evil but come it over evil with good," little Faith Gardner repeated slowly and earnestly as mamma was tying on her hat for Sunday-school.

How brother Howard did laugh over this new version of the "golden text," but mamma comforted the little maid by saying, "Never mind, dear heart, I think you have voiced the spirit of the words, and that is the important part. If my little son and daughter live the thought of the text all this week how many times they can make things pleasant in one little place."

Faith kept thinking about mamma's words as she went trotting along beside Howard, and pretty soon she said, "Let's us try it this week, Howard, and see if we can't do as mamma says."

"All right, Muggins! I will if you'll agree to help me, but you know it's lots harder for boys to be good than for girls."

Faith didn't see why, but was very willing to agree that they would help each other remember if one forgot, and so the compact was made and sealed.

That very morning in Sunday-school Fred Miller whispered to Howard, "What you going to do after school, to-morrow? I've got a dandy scheme on hand; will tell you all about it when teacher isn't looking."

Now Howard didn't like to be thought a "prig" any better than the average small boy, but he knew very well it would hurt Miss Blake to have them whispering when she took so much pains to make the lesson interesting, and, besides, it wasn't courteous, not mentioning the highest reason of all, that it was wrong.

He had a keen sense of justice, and one Sunday Miss Blake had stopped in the midst of her teaching because some of them were whispering, and said quietly, "Boys, will you please tell me how many hours in the week you have for school?"

A little mental arithmetic soon brought the answer from ten surprised boys, "Twenty-five." "And how many for sleep?" "Seventy." "How many left for play and other things?" A little more arithmetic and the answer came, "Seventy-three." "Then," in an earnest tone, "don't you think it a little unfair not to give one individual hour to your Sunday-school?"

Of course they all felt ashamed, and promised to do better, but Fred Miller was like another small boy who defined his memory as "the thing I forget with," and Howard said quietly, "All right! But let's wait till to-morrow," and that ended the whispering.

There was a "new boy" in the class who looked and felt very lonely, so after Sunday-school Howard said, "Won't you come and sit in our pew? I'd like to have my mother see you."

And the boy felt all in a minute as though it was another world he had gotten into; and when "mother" shook hands with him and invited him to dinner with them so Howard could take him to "Junior League" in the afternoon, the look on his face was something good to see.

Faith had carried a "bee-yu-tiful" red rose (the very first from her own bush) to give to her teacher, but a tiny girl with such dreadfully shabby clothes was in the class, and no one tried to be nice to her, and Faith couldn't think of anything at all to do for her till she looked once more at her lovely blossom.

Flowers seemed almost human to this little maid, and she often told mamma she was sure they must have souls, so it meant a real sacrifice to her when she gave them away except to those she loved, but she remembered the golden text and thought it surely was an "evil" to be poor and shabby and lonely, and the rose was the only "good" she could offer, so she shyly reached it over to the stranger, saying, with her sweetest smile, "Do you like roses? I do,"

The look of surprise and delight that came into the brown eyes was beautiful, and Faith felt glad she had not saved it for Miss Hall.

Next day at school Dora Gray was "so cross" and accused Faith of borrowing her arithmetic and not putting it back, and she started to reply just as crossly, "I never did," when the thought of her text checked the hasty words, and she said in a merry voice, "I haven't seen it, dear, but I'll help you play policeman, and hunt it up," and you can guess how quickly the ill-nature vanished.

One morning mother waked with one of her blinding headaches and Katie, (the maid) had so much to do she was (according to Howard's version) "a regular old snapping-turtle," and he was just getting ready to snap back, when Faith quoted softly, "Come it over evil with good," and he gave a long whistle and said, "Thank you, Muggins, I forgot," and while Faith took care of the twins he slipped out and asked Katie if he could do something to help, so when she admitted she had the "nooralgy" in her face "just awful," and hadn't time to go to the drug store for the medicine which always cured it, he jumped on his bicycle and was back in no time with the magic bottle.

And so they went through the week, doing little things to help, in such kindly ways they made sunshine for every one around them, and several times the remark was made, "How thoughtful and unselfish those Gardner children are!"

Of course they didn't always remember. They were not angels—just average, everyday children—but they honestly tried, and the "forgots" were not nearly so thick as the "remembers," while the most beautiful part of it was, in every case where they "helped a little" it made that one help somebody else, and so the good kept growing just like a snowball which grows larger every time you roll it over in the snow.

When they were talking it over with mother Saturday night at "cuddling-time" each declared it had been "the very nicest week that ever was," and mother smiled, with such beautiful lovelight in her dear eyes, and said she knew some one else who thought so, too.—Grace Pettis in the Junior Herald.

In a Japanese Sunday-School.

"I am sorry my little boy has made you so much trouble but I could not refuse to let him come to Sunday-school; it is his only pleasure. Just the other day, when the priest came to the house, he took out his box in which he keeps all his cards and lesson-papers which you give him. But now that his sickness has overtaken him here, of course you will not want him to come back; the children would be afraid of him."

He had fallen over in an epileptic fit during Sunday-school, and the lesson was stopped, the children taken from the pleasant room, while a bed was hastily made on the mats for the sufferer. The poor afflicted body was still quivering, while the anxious mother bent over him, and with many words tried to make sufficient apology to the missionary. Two hours passed, the paroxysm was over, and he was taken home.

Some weeks later, when the whole Sunday-school was gathered together for a review after the lesson had been taught, the kind superintendent was talking to the little children about Manasseh. Before them hung the picture of the great king, a prisoner in chains in a foreign land. The uplifted head and hands showed the humble king at prayer.

"Why was the king in prison?" asked the superintendent.

The little lad who a few weeks before had been so ill said bravely,

"He sinned."

"And do you know, my boy, what sin is?" —for the idea of sin is not clear in the minds of many more mature Japanese minds.

"It is giving up to the evil one," came in clear, quiet tones.

Later the question was asked, "What is the king doing?' and again the little one said, "He is praying"; and again the questioner, knowing how dim the idea of prayer is in the minds of most of his people, said, "And what is prayer?" The answer was given in quiet confidence, "It is talking to God."

It is in this way that God is revealing himself to some of the little ones of Japan, and if this frail little sufferer continues to know him as he now does, what a warm welcome awaits him in the dear homeland where "there shall be no more pain," and where he shall "talk to God" face to face!—Maud Bonnell, in Sunday-school Times.

One of the most interesting serials yet published will begin March 1—the Elderburg Association (of Ex-preachers). This will be richly suggestive not only to those concerned about the ministerial "dead line," but to all interested in the crowding of young men into positions of responsibility in all realms of activity. Tell all ministers and church officials of this, that they may start in with the first number. That the authorship is anonymous will not detract from its worth. It is by an Illinois preacher, and we vouch for its value.

The new fast mail service being inaugurated between St. Louis and the great southwest will make The Christian-Evangelist the "neighborhood paper" for Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas. Let our friends assure readers that at the furthest they may hereafter enjoy their favorite paper under their Saturday evening lamp the week of its publication. This, too, will enable us to hold our forms open for the latest news longer than any other national paper entering this territory.

A Story of Lights.

One night when the sun had disappeared and birds had tucked their heads beneath their wings to rest, one of the night birds flew close to an electric light.

"Of what use are you?" asked the bird. "You give so little light compared with the sun!"

"I do the best I can," said the light. "Think how dark this corner would be if I were not here. People walking and driving might run into one another and some one might get hurt."

"That's true," said the bird; and away he flew. Then he came near a gas light standing apart from houses and busy streets.

"Of what use are you?" asked the bird. "You do not give as much light as the electric light!"

"I do the best I can," said the light. "Do you not see that steep bank just beyond? If I were not here some one might fail to see it and fall."

"That's true," said the bird; and away he flew. Soon his sharp eyes spied a lamp in a window.

"Of what use are you?" asked the bird. "You do not give even as much light as the gas light!"

"I do the best I can. I am in the window to throw light down the path, that Farmer Brown may see the way when he comes home. I do the best I can."

"That's true," said the bird; and away he flew.

But again his sharp eyes spied a light—a tiny candle light in a nursery window.

"Of what use are you?" asked the bird. "Your light is so small. You do not give even as much light as a lamp!"

"I do the best I can," said the candle; "and I can be easily carried from room to room. Nurse uses me when she gives the children a drink of water at night, or sees that they are snugly covered up in bed. I do the best I can."

"That's true," said the bird; and away he flew, thinking, as he saw the many lights here and there, little and great, "All are helpers!"—Harriet S. Warren, in Kindergarten Review.

The Reason.

A teacher in a public school of Boston once had great difficulty in imparting to a boy pupil of ten certain elementary principles of grammar. In class one day the instructor experienced more than the usual amount of trouble with the lad. In desperation, the teacher finally blurted out the question: "At least you can tell me why we study grammar?"

"Yes, ma'am," returned the pupil, "we study grammar so that we can laugh at the mistakes of others."—Harper's Weekly.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

The Christian Woman's Centennial Offering.

BY IDA W. HARRISON.

The report of the Centennial Committee, which was adopted at the national convention at Omaha in 1902, recommended that the keynote of our centennial celebration in 1909 be practical Christian living and giving, which should find expression in the advance of all the great interests of the church, missionary, evangelistic, educational and benevolent.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions presented its plan for the observance of this great anniversary to the San Francisco convention in 1905 in the following committee report, which was adopted unanimously:

"We recommend that our centennial offering rally cry shall be, 'One hundred thousand dollars for one hundred years,' this amount to be sought from persons entirely outside our auxiliaries in one-dollar offerings. (The large pledges may be in the form of notes, that will stand against an estate, should the donor be called home before the pledge be paid.) We recommend that active work on the centennial offering be commenced as speedily as possible, and be continued until the close of the centennial year, 1909.

"We recommend that the $100,000 be apportioned among the states, the larger offerings being over this amount. These are to be sought as you and the state officers may deem best.

"We recommend that the centennial offering be apportioned among the fields that we now occupy, and that one new field be entered. It is understood that this fund is to be held apart from our regular offerings, which must apply to the support of our regular work.

"We suggest the following apportionment of fields and amounts: Jamaica (an orphanage), $10,000; India (Calcutta mission home and enlarged force of workers), $10,000; Mexico (the establishment of a station in the City of Mexico), $10,000; Porto Rico (a church and mission building for San Juan), $10,000; South America (a mission building for our new work), $10,000; the United States (a definite work in Utah, $10,000; enlargement of the negro work, $3,000; new mountain school, $7,000; Chinese mission building, Portland, Ore., $10,000). New Work.—To open a station in South China, $20,000.

"We urge as a centennial aim for our workers a doubled membership in our auxiliaries. This is to be obtained by enlarged efforts of organizers, by increasing the number of field workers, by personal work of auxiliary members and by appeals from pastors.

MRS. EFFIE CUNNINGHAM,
MRS. HELEN E. MOSES,
Committee.

A missionary training school and office room, to be located at Indianapolis, has since been added to the ten centennial missions, named in the above report. This is to be the special work of the Indiana Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and in order to accomplish it their state board has voluntarily increased Indiana's apportionment of $15,000 to $25,000.

In accordance with the committee's report the $100,000 has been apportioned among the states, and the news received from them is most encouraging. Most of them have accepted their apportionment, over $97,000 being thus provided for, and are entering with enthusiasm upon the work of reaching the mark that is set before them. As this offering is to be sought outside the auxiliaries, so as not to interfere with the regular work of the board, we ask the interest and co-operation of the pastors and churches in this effort to raise centennial monuments worthy of so great an anniversary. We would honor the memory of our fathers in the faith at this time by trying to bear our part in answering the world's cry for Jesus, the Christ—for we believe that the best memorial to the dead is service to the living.

Lexington, Ky.

This is my twenty-seventh annual renewal. I can not do without THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Best wishes for its prosperity. A long life for its useful Editor.

Dunlap, Mo. MRS. S. M. FISHER.

I shall be proud to go on serving THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as long as life lasts. I read it with increasing pleasure. You manage to secure many fine contributions, and I like the tone—neither too broad nor too narrow. W. DURBAN.

May the Lord bless and be with you in your new work with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. May you have wisdom and help from on high in your great work of spreading the light of undivided truth. Will do all I can for you and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. J. P. HANER, evangelist.

Enclosed I send you a club of ten new subscribers. There has been work here against THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST by partisans of another paper, but I hope to send other names later. One of the most enduring works the preacher can do is to get the people to read good religious papers, and I consider THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST far and away our best paper. There is a growing appreciation of papers that are really Christian in spirit. E. S. ALLHANDS.

Approves Federation

I very much enjoy THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and think your attitude toward the federation movement is correct throughout. W. E. CRABTREE.

A Practical Well Wisher.

Enclosed find list of new subcribers. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST grows better every year, and I am going to push it and place it in every home I can. Yours for 100,000 and more too. JEWELL HOWARD.

Speaking in Time.

I direct you now to secure a lower berth in a tourist car for myself and wife in THE "CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special," for the centennial celebration at Pittsburg in 1909.

La Belle, Mo. J. E. THROCKMORTON.

Familiar Friend.

Enclosed find $1.50 for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It has been a welcome visitor at our home for more than twenty years. I can not keep house without it.

Marion, Ill. MRS. BUNDY.

Other Papers Helpful, Too.

I must congratulate you over THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The matter has always been good, but is now even better than ever. I regard it, taking it through and through, as the best exponent of our plea, although most of our papers are doing fine work in behalf of the old Gospel.

Roanoke, Va. W. G. JOHNSTON.

A Continuous Feast.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a veritable feast of good things nowadays, in fact, I do not think it could well be improved upon, and yet I hope to see it grow in goodness and power and live to see the one hundred thousand limit reached, for when that number of our people shall read the paper, imbibe its spirit of catholicity, loyalty and love of truth, the church will at once be a power never before realized.

T. J. RICHARDSON.

Dignified and Wholesome.

You are associated with a great paper, the best in the brotherhood, in my judgment. I sincerely hope THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will always maintain its dignified and wholesome course in all matters dealing with individuals and companies. I have read THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST steadily for years and years and have found it so rich in all that is good, so little to condemn and so much to commend.

Mr. Bryan on Tainted Money.

Mr. William J. Bryan has resigned as chairman of the board of trustees of his alma mater, Illinois College, because the rest of the board was almost unanimously in favor of accepting money from Mr. Carnegie. The money has not been promised or offered, but Mr. Bryan contends for the principle just the same. In the letter accompanying his resignation he regrets to see the college "converted into an ally of plutocracy." He asserts that "our college can not serve God and mammon," and that, "it can not be a college for the people and at the same time commend itself to the commercial highwaymen who are now subsidizing the colleges to prevent the teaching of economic truth." We do not for a moment doubt that Mr. Bryan is acting in all good conscience in this matter. He is not the only person who believes it to be both wrong and inexpedient to accept money which has been accumulated by monopoly or under the fostering care of the protective tariff. But when Mr. Bryan or any one else talks about "subsidizing colleges to prevent the teaching of economic truth" he has not the justification of either established fact or fair probability in support of his statement. It has never been shown in even a single instance that the economic teaching of any college has been affected by the receipt of funds from trust magnates and monopolists. It may be difficult for Mr. Bryan to believe, but there are some professors of economics in the country who are honestly opposed to free coinage and who do not need to be "subsidized" to teach a different doctrine.

Rate Regulation.

The railroad legislation which the administration is trying to bring Congress to enact—for which, indeed, the President is so solicitous that he is unwilling to allow any other measure to stand in the way of it—includes two separate matters, viz., the prevention of rebates and the regulation of rates. The first aims to secure uniform freight rates to all shippers, without discrimination against any patrons or any locality; the second aims to guarantee that this uniform rate shall be a just and reasonable one. All good opinion is in favor of anti-rebate legislation. Nobody dares to say a word in support of the rebate principle. It is realized that uniform rates are even more important than low rates. The fight is over the proposition to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix rates in place of those which it finds to be unjust and unreasonable. The Senate is now devoting itself to this question. The bill under consideration provides that a rate fixed by the commission shall go into effect after thirty days and shall remain in force unless suspended or revised by the commission or by a court of competent jurisdiction, and that the courts shall have power to set aside a rate fixed by the commission if it is found to be confiscatory. Two issues are suggested by this: first, whether the new rate should go into effect at once, pending review by the courts, or should be suspended until confirmed; second, whether the courts should be empowered to revise a rate established by the commission if found to be unreasonable, even if it is not so unjust as to amount to confiscation. The friends of rate regulation in the Senate are more or less divided on these points. Senator Lodge has made a speech in support of the President's policy which, in the opinion of many, amounted to wounding it in the house of its friends. He summarized European conditions and showed that rate regulation had generally issued unsatisfactorily. In England, where regulation has been of the mildest type, its chief result has been to prevent the reduction of rates. France has high rates fixed by the government and showing the manifest operation of local and political influences. Germany, with public ownership, has made a profit on her railways only by virtue of high rates and poor service. By these citations, Mr. Lodge gave much aid and comfort to the opposition.

Coal Investigation.

Senator Tillman has introduced a resolution, which has been adopted by the Senate, authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate the relation of the railroads to the coal industry. It is a matter of common knowledge that certain railroads, popularly known as the "coal roads," are the real owners and operators of the most important coal mines. By the adjustment of freight rates they can weaken their competitors without injuring themselves, for, since they are paying freight to themselves, they can afford to make it as high as they please. By keeping up the rate, too, they can make the profit on the coal appear small and thus justify the maintenance of high prices for it. Other shippers of coal, who are not in this ring, complain that they have difficulty in getting cars in which to ship their product. Important results are expected from this inquiry. It is significant that the investigation is to be committed, by joint resolution of the Senate and the House, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, instead of to the Department of Commerce and Labor by a simple resolution of the Senate.

The Pennsylvania legislature has adopted a resolution looking to a similar investigation of the relation of the coal roads to the coal business in that state.

Constitutional Liberty in Russia.

A recent proclamation by the Czar providing for the election in the spring is an assurance to the world that he has not, as some predicted he would, revoked his former manifesto offering constitutional liberty to the people, but that he intends to carry it out in spite of the recent popular disorders. Since the putting down of these disorders by armed force, the world has heard but little of the internal condition of things within the Russian empire. It is reassuring to learn that preparations are going on to give the people a voice in the management of the affairs of government. That autocracy is dead in Russia is evident to the balance of the world, and it is gratifying to have evidence that it is also apparent to the Czar himself. If the Russian people are wise enough to see that, if they do not get all they want at first, the opportunity of constitutional agitation is at least given to them and that they may reasonably hope for additional concessions through such agitation, there is reason to believe that we may soon see constitutional liberty established in the land of the Czar.

Reform in Divorce Legislation.

It is a hopeful sign that leaders in both Church and State are realizing the need of additional legislation relating to divorce. Marriage is the foundation of the family, and the family is the main foundation of society. A conference on the subject is being held in the capital of the nation this week to promote uniform legislation on the question of divorce in the several states. A dispatch from Washington announces that delegates from forty-two states have been appointed by the representative governors thereof to attend the uniform divorce law convention which is to be held at Washington, beginning Feb. 19. It is expected that a large number of state executives themselves will be in attendance. Governor Pennypacker, of Pennsylvania, who inaugurated the movement for the national conference, will make the opening address. The delegates will call on President Roosevelt in a body on the first day of the convention, and it is expected the President will express himself on the subject sought to be accomplished. One of the features of the convention will be a report from a committee representing the Inter-Church Conference on marriage and divorce. The committee consists of Bishop William C. Doane, of Albany, Rev. Dr. William H. Roberts, of Philadelphia, John E. Parsons and Francis Lynde Stetson, of New York, and Judge William M. Lanning, of New Jersey. The conference has a most difficult task before it, because differences of opinion exist among those who alike seek the well-being of society; but the task is none the less important because difficult.

The Demand of the Brewers

Columbus, Ohio, apparently has a mayor of the familiar type to whom the word of the saloonists is of more importance than the will of the people as expressed in the law. Columbus has a law requiring Sunday closing of saloons. By a silly usage, which has become tolerably common, this and other ordinances of a similar sensible nature have come to be known as blue laws. They have not been enforced. Recently the mayor, moved by what pressure we know not, sent to the chief of police a copy of the Sunday closing law, together with a message that the duty of the police was plain to any one who could read the English language, and that any one who could not had no business on the force. Then the brewers were heard from and the mayor threw up his hands. The order was revoked and the word was passed out that there would be no radical change in the Sunday regulations. It seems, after all, that ability to read the English language with ordinary intelligence is not the sole requisite for understanding how Sunday closing laws should be enforced. One must also learn what the brewers think about it and get their permission to proceed.

Christian Union: An Historical Study.

I. The Apostolic Age.

6. "I am of Christ."

We have already expressed our concurrence in the opinion of Dr. McGiffert that the brethren in Corinth who said, "I am of Christ," did not represents a fourth faction equally partisan with the others, but were making a rational protest against the tendency to divide up into factions designated by certain favorite leaders. The rebuke of Paul—"Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptized into the name of Paul?"—is favorable to that view, as is also the fact that there seems to have been no ground for a fourth faction either in doctrinal divergencies or in personal leadership. Those who claimed Peter as their leader were probably Jewish Christians of the more conservative class, while the more liberal, who treated with perhaps too little respect the scruples of the conservatives, claimed to be followers of Paul. There would be certain to be Greeks, in Corinth, who would be carried away with the eloquence of Apollos, of Alexandria, who, not unnaturally, might have mingled some of the Alexandrian philosophy with the Gospel. These were the three leaders who, innocently perhaps, or at least, unconsciously, had stirred up this factional feeling. Is it not probable that there were, among the wiser heads and more irenic spirits of the Church, some members who, possessing the gift of knowledge, were able to see that all the saving truth preached by these three leaders came from Christ, and who would protest against these divisions based on partial views, and express their attitude in contrast with that of others by saying, "I am of Christ"?*

But, after all, there is a more important and fundamental question than the above. Regardless of the historic question as to whether or not there were, as a matter of fact, a part of the Church at Corinth who occupied the common catholic ground, taking Christ alone as their Leader, was not this the very position that ought to have been taken by the Church, and is it not precisely the position which Paul did take and which he urged the whole Church to take? That is the real question which vitally concerns us. Even if it were granted that those who said, "I am of Christ," were the worst partisans in the Church, it would not follow that their position was wrong, but only that their spirit was wrong, and we could only regret that there had not been those in the Church in Corinth who, in sincere loyalty to Christ, and with due appreciation of all his faithful ministers, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, would have planted themselves upon the "one foundation" other than which no man can lay, protesting against parceling out his truth among jealous and warring factions.

There seems to be but one possible answer to the question we have raised: There should have been in the Church at Corinth, if there were not, just such a class of Christians as we have described—Christians who were broad-minded enough to accept the truth no matter by whom spoken, and whose loyalty to Christ's teaching and Christ's Spirit would have led them to stand like a rock against these divisive tendencies. They could not have done this by occupying a partisan position themselves. They could not have said, for instance, "We are of John," and made a successful protest against those claiming to be of Paul, or Peter, or Apollos. They must choose a non-partisan Leader who embodied in himself all the truth preached by all his ministers, and whose name would be honored and respected by all his followers. They should not, of course, have said, "I am of Christ," in any boastful spirit, or in any tone of personal superiority, but in profound humility and gratitude, and with unfeigned sorrow that any of their brethren, who also were "of Christ," really, should be willing to allow that fact to be obscured by placing even an apostle as their leader.

It is not to be supposed for a moment that those who said, "I am of Paul"; or "I am of Apollos"; or "I am of Cephas"; intended thereby to reject Christ. It was not the sin of rejecting Christ for which Paul rebuked them, but for dividing Christ. They had allowed their zeal for some particular truth, or phase of truth, preached by their favorite leader, to obscure other truths, perhaps no less important, and had made these partial views of truth their rallying centers instead of Christ, and so were torn into factions. They were not only, by this course, producing divisions in the body of Christ, but they were impoverishing their own souls by limiting themselves to the truths preached by their particular leaders. It was this folly of building on the partial truth in the person of Christ's ministers instead of on the whole truth incarnate in Christ, that led Paul to that magnificent outburst of catholicity: "Wherefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's."

THE TRUE FOLLOWER.

Not he who utters lip-born prayers,
Nor he who mouths a time-worn creed,
But he who Christ's meek spirit shares
And day by day the Christ-cross bears,
Doth follow him indeed.

"Are They Scriptural?"

Read the article elsewhere from the "Christian Standard," under the above title. It is a very pleasant little discussion we are having with Brother Lord. True, he complains a good deal about our misrepresenting him, or not understanding him, but that is not uncommon in discussion when one gets slightly pressed. But in spite of that, we are having a very fraternal interchange of ideas, and it is bound to do good in helping to clear away the mists, if we both "keep sweet." We are getting right down now to a clear-cut issue. We call attention to a few things in the article referred to.

1. "We said nothing of federation with the Baptist denomination, if there is such a body."

But our brother did say something about federating with Baptists and Free Baptists. They have conventions, just as we have, and their conventions voice the sentiment of their respective denominations. Their local churches have probably not voted directly on this question, any more than have the local churches of the Presbyterians, Methodists and Congregationalists. Are we to understand then, that the "Christian Standard" will refuse to federate with Baptists and Free Baptists provided that their national conventions approve the basis of federation proposed at the New York Inter-Church Conference, and should appoint their delegates to the Federal Council?

2. "But we have never conceded the legitimacy, or Scripturalness, of any denomination."

That, of course, is hard on the denominations, but they still decline to go out of business. We wish our contemporary had been a bit more definite in its meaning. Does it "concede the Scripturalness" of The Christian-Evangelist or its Editor? Hardly, we fear. And yet the editor of the "Christian Standard," in the abundance of his charity, does not refuse to co-operate with us in Christian work. Does the "Christian Standard" concede the Scripturalness of that part of the brotherhood who own Daniel Sommer as their prophet and leader, and who call themselves "Churches of Christ"? We do not think so. And yet we have seen no signs that the "Christian Standard" would refuse co-operation with them, or any of the anti-missionary society brethren, because of their "unscripturalness." Why, then, should it make this fact a reason for refusing to federate with the Congregationalists, Presbyterians, etc.?

3. "Are the Presbyterian, Episcopal, and United Brethren Churches, with their human creeds, and affusion for baptism, Scriptural, and Churches of Christ?"

Of course, the "Christian Standard" does not mean to ask us, seriously, whether we regard human creeds, and affusion for baptism, as "Scriptural." Its only question is whether we believe that the churches named, and others having human creeds, and practicing affusion for baptism, can be regarded as churches of Christ, in spite of these errors. We think so, and we so affirmed, unequivocally, in the very article to which the "Christian Standard" replies. We will go even further than that; we believe that most, if not all, of the churches mentioned are far more loyal to Christ's teaching and spirit, as a whole, than many of the churches calling themselves "Churches of Christ," which the "Christian Standard" recognizes as such, and with which it would be perfectly willing to federate. On what ground of justice and equity, therefore, can we refuse to recognize these evangelical Protestant bodies as Churches of Christ, in spite of their errors, while we freely accord such recognition to those having even worse faults, who call themselves "Churches of Christ"?

*An interesting question emerges at this point: Supposing that the incipient division at Corinth had ripened into open schism, and that Paulinians, Apollonians, and Cephasites had set up as independent denominations, each having formulated a creed to express its particular views, and the protesting members had stood fast on the common foundation, owning Christ alone as Leader, what would have been the status of this part of the Church occupying the original ground? Of course, the world would have regarded it as one of the four denominations; but in its essential characteristics it would certainly have been different from the three parties mentioned above. Should any body of Christians to-day put themselves wholly upon the original New Testament basis of faith and fellowship, in order to clear themselves of the sin of schism, although they would be popularly regarded as a denomination, being only a part of the general body of Christ, yet its chief distinguishing feature would be its undenominational, or non-partisan, character.

This seems to narrow the issue down to the single question. Are we justified in withholding recognition and co-operation from religious bodies which we believe to be in error in some things, but with which the Lord is evidently co-operating in the work of saving the world? On this question, as we understand, the "Christian Standard" affirms, and we deny. That is the plain issue.

A Family Skeleton.

We have over eleven thousand churches. To one widely acquainted with what is being done by foreign missions and who realizes their immense value to the home churches, it seems that there ought not to be any need for an editor to urge every church to have a part in so great a work. But—there is a family skeleton. To look at things in the face is sometimes the only way to get rid of them. The black spots on President McLean's chart show that only twenty-eight hundred of our churches contributed to the Foreign Society's work last year. Two-thirds of our churches have no part in the work. In fact, here has been a decrease of two hundred and thirty-three in the number of contributing churches within the past five years, though we have planted more than double that number of new churches in the same period. It is really necessary for us to urge that we must change this condition on March 4.

Notes and Comments.

This from the "Herald and Presbyter":

> "The January number of the 'Record of Christian Work,' claiming to be undenominational, and the organ of the Northfield movement, seeking support from all Christian denominations, has in its comments by Dr. A. T. Pierson, on the Sabbath-school lesson for last Sabbath, on the Baptism of Jesus, a reference to Christ's 'descent into the baptismal waters' and 'his baptism with water.' Of course, if the 'Record' wishes to be known as a Baptist publication it has the privilege of inserting such teachings as these. But let it be known as such, and not as non-denominational."

Is not that a curious, not to say archaic, idea of what it is for a man or a paper to be undenominational? If the "Record of Christian Work" wants to be really an undenominational paper, according to the "Herald and Presbyter," it should suppress its convictions on any Biblical fact, if its convictions do not happen to agree with those of other religious people; nor should it allow its contributors to express their views on any controverted subject. Have we not really gotten beyond that cramped idea into the larger conception of the freedom which we have in Christ? If undenominationalism means slavery, who of us would not prefer denominationalism? Besides, does not our venerable contemporary know that the view of Jesus' baptism presented by Dr. Pierson is held by scholars without any reference to their denominational connection? Baptists have no monopoly of Scriptural facts. They are the common heritage of all Christians.

What, then, is the real undenominational attitude? It is to look for truth and to receive truth, without reference to denominational creeds or practices. It is to hold no view that would not willingly be surrendered as soon as it is discovered to be out of harmony with God's Word. It is open-mindedness to the truth and the willingness to follow it wheresoever it may lead. If it finds Jesus was immersed, though its affiliations be with affusionists, it declares the fact. If it finds that he was sprinkled or poured, though its affiliations be with immersionists, it declares the fact as it sees it. It is in this spirit of supreme devotion to the leadership of Christ that men are lifted above denominational limitations into the larger fellowship of loyal spirits, in all religious bodies with whom Christ is more than party creed, and obedience to him is the law of their life. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

An aged brother of another faith, who begs to be heard in our columns, after expressing some true ideas about worship, such as the spirit and purpose of worship, comes to the question, "What things should we worship?" His reply to that question is as follows:

> "We should not worship God as a personal being, but the moral and spiritual principles which he represents, and which are personified under the name of God. We should make this distinction for the reason that we are so constituted that just in proportion as we concentrate our minds and hearts on one thing we become oblivious to other things; and when we concentrate our minds on God's personality we become oblivious of the moral principles he represents, when it is really these moral principles that bring our characters into the likeness of themselves by the law of assimilation, as I have said."

That is a strange confusion of thought about personality. Did our correspondent when he fell in love with the woman he married separate between her character and her personality, and love only the former, lest he might lose sight of her character in loving her personality? We love God and worship him because of his character, that is, his love, holiness and righteousness. But moral character can be affirmed of persons only. Jesus Christ is lovable because he embodied in his own personality all truth and goodness. To worship things is idolatry. Only God—a glorious personality—can be worshiped.

At a recent forenoon Lord's day service in the Union Avenue Christian Church, this city, the ordinance of baptism followed immediately the ordinance of the Lord's supper. When the cloth was spread over the table of the emblems by the pastor, the curtains parted at the left of the pulpit revealing the assistant pastor and the candidate, standing in the water. The formula was pronounced, and the candidate was buried with Christ in baptism. A verse was sung and the benediction pronounced. The two ordinances had borne their joint testimony—one to the death and the other to the burial and resurrection of our Lord. A devout lady, member of another church, was present, who had never seen it after that fashion. She was so profoundly impressed by the scene, and by what she had heard about the baptism of Jesus in the Sunday-school lesson explained by Dr. Philputt at the Wednesday evening prayer-meeting, that she came forward at the evening service to make a renewed consecration of her life to Christ, and was baptized "the same hour of the night." Properly attended to, these ordinances testify of Christ in a most impressive way, and vindicate the wisdom of their divine symbolism to all reverent, believing souls.

A brother from Anaconda, Montana, sends us an editorial clipping from a local paper of that city purporting, at least, to give the religious statistics gathered by Dr. Carroll, as published in a late number of the New York "Christian Advocate." After giving the gain of several of the leading religious bodies, the article says: "The Disciples of Christ report a very small gain of members." Our correspondent wishes to know if this is a correct report. The statistics purport to be for the year 1905. We have not seen the report of Dr. Carroll, but we quote this statement from the annual report of our statistical secretary, G. A. Hoffmann, made at the San Francisco convention:

> "The gain in membership is fully thirty thousand. This is not shown in the above table, as large reductions were made in several states where statistics had not been carfully gathered."

The last sentence perhaps explains the statement quoted from Dr. Carroll's report. There has been no falling off in the actual rate of increase, but an apparent reduction in increase is caused by the reduction of the membership in several states through the correction of statistics. This emphasizes the importance of getting correct statistics from all the states and of keeping them correct.

Editor's Easy Chair.

As Kansas City many years ago was a sort of frontier outfitting post, where the caravans made their start for their long journey across the plains, so even now, one going from St. Louis to the far west or southwest, is likely to run over to Kansas City during the night and make his real start from that enterprising city at the mouth of the Kaw. So did our little caravan. We spent most of Monday there, putting up at the Hotel de Richardson, which, though not listed among the popular hostelries of the city has been for several years a favorite inn with us. We not only like the cooking, but the cooks who, with their culinary art, have other accomplishments. And then the proprietor and proprietress know how to make their guests feel that they are welcome. The male members of our party attended the weekly ministers' meeting of our Kansas City pastors, and spoke briefly, after hearing interesting reports from the various churches represented. We have a fine body of ministers in Kansas City and vicinity, and the cause is growing under their labors. There was but little additional outfitting to do, and by 2:35 p. m. we were aboard the Sante Fe train, ticketed for Las Vegas, Santa Fe and Albuquerque, the immediate terminal points of our journey. Once aboard the Santa Fe, the vacation is on. The Pullman sleeper, on a well-ballasted roadbed of a well-managed railroad, whose employes devote themselves to the comfort and welfare of their passengers, with a line of Fred Harvey eating houses, offers all the necessary conditions for a vacation on wheels. The Sante Fe System has spent not less than six million dollars annually for several years in improving its lines, and expects to spend not less than fifteen millions in improvements during the fiscal year. That means a comfortable ride. Let us lean back and rest.

The Kansas landscape conduces to rest. There is nothing striking or heroic in its scenery, but its history is not lacking in the heroic element. Since the time when its billowy surface was the bed of a vast inland sea, on through later eons, when colossal wild animals roamed its plains, down to the modern period when savages lived their wild, free life, on its wide prairies, with the chase and the war-dance, to give place in time to the white man who came on the scene with his traditions and civilization to establish a free commonwealth, what tragic and historic scenes have here occurred! But the modern traveler rides across this ancient sea bed, this playground of mastodons, this hunting ground of Indians and battle ground of freedom, where the pioneers fought drought and grasshoppers, in his steam-drawn palace, and grumbles if a delay of his train makes his dinner 30 minutes late. During the night we glide across the state line and the morning dawns upon us on a plateau of southeast Colorado, 4,000 feet above sea level. If it were spring or early summer, the Arkansas Valley which the train traverses from Holly to La Junta would be green with alfalfa and melon patches; but to-day it is sleeping beneath a white coverlet of snow, which grows thicker as we go westward. At Trinidad, where we paused for dinner, the scene was decidedly wintry, and now as we ascend through the Raton Pass up into the mountains, we seem to be entering the very fastnesses of winter. The fresh, white snow blankets mountain and ravine and every tree and shrub bends under its burden of "the beautiful." No track of beast or bird is to be seen. No sign of life is visible, except an occasional Mexican hut, from which the smoke ascends through its snow-mantled roof. And yet we are in quest of sunshine and vernal breezes! "Beyond the Alps is Italy." Perhaps beyond this mountain range we may find our Italian skies and sunshine.

The Santa Fe train enters New Mexico through a tunnel at the crest of the mountain range and descends gradually to the city of Las Vegas, where on account of some delay we landed at 9 p. m. The snow was sifting down through a wintry air as we stepped out of the car at our first stopping place in search of shelter from the winter's storms! Strange to say, however, the people here do not say this is "unusual." They have such spells of weather occasionally, they say, during the winter; but there have been more of them the past winter than usual. They think this will be of great advantage to the country. Las Vegas (meaning the meadows) is spread out on a plain and rimmed about with mountains, or spurs of the Rockies, only a few miles distant. The day after our arrival the sun shone out with all his splendor, and in this high altitude (6,400 feet above sea level) the snow melts very rapidly. We visited by street railway the "old town," with its plaza and its Mexican adobe houses, its curio stores, with a few up-to-date mercantile houses. In the afternoon we enjoyed a ride on the electric railway to the hot springs, about six miles to the northwest, at the mouth of a canon, through which flows the little Rio Gallinas, a sparkling stream of melted snow, which furnishes the water supply for the city. On a bench of the mountain side, near the hot spring, and beside the rollicking Gallinas, the Santa Fe road built a few years ago a magnificent hotel and bath houses, which it has recently turned over to a board of trustees, representing a number of fraternal orders with an insurance feature, which are to run it as a fraternal sanitarium for the benefit of their members. Las Vegas has a population of 8,000, mostly Mexicans, with excellent school buildings, banks, hotels and mercantile houses and one daily newspaper, "The Optic," whose editor, Mr. McNair, showed us every courtesy. Las Vegas is the business metropolis of northern New Mexico and is growing in favor as a health resort. The fraternal sanitarium is bound to add to its fame in this respect.

To-day we go on to Santa Fe, the capital of the territory, where we will make a brief stay. We shall probably continue our journey so far as Phoenix, Ariz. We may turn south to Roswell. All of this country is high altitude. It has been estimated that if all its mountains were cut off enough to fill up all its valleys the level plateau would be higher than the highest peak in the Catskills or the Adirondacks. The air is pure and rarified, and a little experience yesterday showed us that we must take mountain-climbing in small, broken doses. The "strenuous life," to use an overworked phrase, is no part of our present program. We shall try to take the natives out here as our models in this respect, as they seem to have time enough and to spare. We find the sentiment in Las Vegas, as elsewhere, divided on the question of statehood. An intelligent gentleman, engineer of the city, and graduate of Lafayette College, with whom we talked yesterday, did not believe the territory was ready for statehood, even with Arizona included. The Mexicans, he said, would outvote the Americans and elect their own men to the offices. They are divided among themselves by party lines, but as between a Mexican and an American, he said, they would all unite on the Mexican. But even Mexicans may learn something when they are made to feel that the responsibilities of statehood are resting upon them. The two classes of people are here together, and they must learn to live together and share the burdens and duties of citizenship. They can not stand aloof from each other and work out successfully the destiny of their state. Assimilation to a common standard of citizenship can come only through their mutual co-operation as citizens of the same free commonwealth. It is true, in politics as it is in religion, that united effort is the condition of success.

* * *

As we mail this installment of the Easy Chair we are about renewing our journey further to the southwest. Speaking of health resorts, we have never found a place yet where the residents do not send their sick some other place to get well. Climate works no miracles. People who come here "ready to die" generally die. A poet from Chicago, who is seeking health in this great southwest, uttered a "plaint" recently in which he truly remarked:

"I have heard of certain places where they've got such splendid air
That you'd think no undertaker could eke out a livin' there,
Where it seems as if kind Nature kept diseases all away
So that man might, if he wished to, live forever and a day—
Mind, I ain't got no intention to give anybody blame,
But I've noticed that these places all have graveyards, just the same."

And these "graveyards" grow more rapidly because the doctors in the east send people to these health resorts when they are too far gone for anything short of a miracle to save them. This is an evil under the sun against which the citizens in these regions justly complain.

Up the Great Congo

By Kenred Smith

[This gracious tribute from a stranger about our mission work at Bolengi, Africa, will be read with interest by thousands.—EDITOR ]

Some months ago I arrived in England from the Congo, after a term of service at the Baptist missionary station at Bopoto on the Upper river, and spent a day at your mission station at Bolengi on my way home. It has occurred to me that you might welcome an account of my impressions of the Sunday I spent with your missionaries on the equator. I intended writing you earlier, but a multiplicity of engagements has prevented me hitherto.

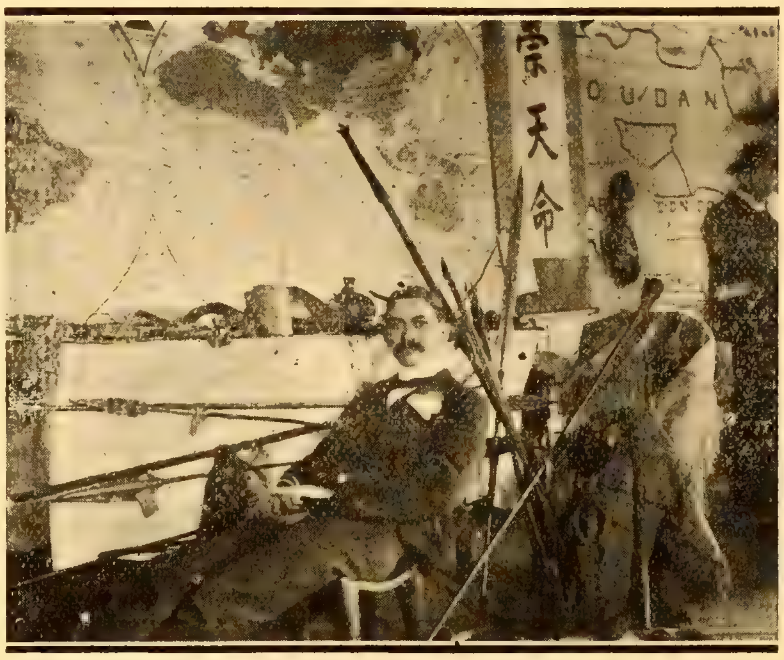
Bolengi station, built on a good high bank, looks very picturesque as one stands on the deck of the mission steamer, the "Goodwill." The grassy lawns, the beds of flowers, the houses and other station buildings peeping out among the palms and other indigenous trees, not only make an attractive picture, but also show that this is one of those too rare spots in Congoland where God's servants are trying to help the degraded natives and lead them sympathetically to God.

To the right of the steamer beach, huge boulders of conglomerate rock strew the strand, but happily there is a sufficient space clear for the steamer to anchor between these masses of rock. A spring, welling up out of the beach and covered with a brick well house with a palm thatched roof, supplies the station with an abundant supply of pure and clear water, so different from the wide coffee colored stream flowing constantly by, known to the world at large as the Congo river.

The house inhabited by Dr. and Mrs. Dye is at the top of the rising ground which forms the river bank, and is seen to the left or east of the station, and near it is the memorial hospital, which also serves as the dispensary for Dr. Dye in his all important medical work. The iron store is about halfway between Dr. Dye's house and the house inhabited by Mr. and Mrs. Eldred. At the top of the bank the ground is level and here one finds a well laid out station. A palm avenue skirts the mission grounds, making a beautiful and pleasant walk, more especially as the stems of nearly all the palms make a perfect fernery of green.

The school chapel, recently log-rolled by Mr. Eldred from its former site, now occupies a central position, and can be easily approached from all sides. The girls' house is being erected toward the east of the station at a little distance from Dr. Dye's home, while the sheepfold and the carpenter's shop are found in convenient positions, the former toward the east and the latter toward the west of the station. A grove of sweet orange trees adds a fresh beauty to a fine station, while a well cultivated vegetable garden supplies the missionaries with the green food so conducive to health on the Congo.

At a corner of the station near some palm trees one approaches with quiet reverence, for here are four mounds of earth telling of four lives given up to God. A mother and sisters wept in England when they heard of the death of J. W. Cole, of the Congo Bololo mission, whose grave is represented by one of these mounds, while relatives and friends mourned the loss of one of the best of the missionaries of the mission. A husband and father was the mourner at the grave of Mrs. Badfield and the little one, who rest side by side near the grave of Mr. Cole, while an affectionate son and daughter mourned the loss of the father of Dr. Dye as he was laid to rest to await the resurrection of those who through faith and patience inherit the promises. Flowers and plants will grow on those graves, not more fragrant or beautiful than the lives of those who now rest under the palms in far-off Africa.



Dr. Royal J. Dye, our medical missionary at Bolengi, Haut Congo, Africa.

The station staff at Bolengi is all too small. Dr. Dye is bright, energetic, skilful, busy yet withal tactful and wise in his dealings with the natives and all those problems which come before him on the mission field, hospitable and brotherly to a passing missionary, and possessing in the person of his wife a true helpmeet, a woman whose brightness and sympathy endear her to all who come in contact with her, one to whom native women come in their troubles and difficulties, and one who has gained their love if one may judge by the bright and happy faces which look up into hers with such trust and affection beaming out of their eyes.

Mr. Ray Eldred, "Eldred the Elder," or "Big Eldred," as he was called at college, is a man with a big heart, overflowing with sympathy, who, amongst his manifold building operations and general work, finds time to share in the spiritual work of the station and share in it with all the force of his tender and compassionate nature. Mrs. Eldred, unfortunately, is hindered to a great extent from joining the others in their ever growing duties and responsibilities, by domestic cares and very indifferent health.

The ringing of the station bell on Sunday morning told me that the day's duties had commenced. I went up from our mission steamer to find more than 60 women and girls gathered on the veranda of Dr. Royal Dye's house, and Mrs. Dye, with face aglow with Christlike love, beamed on these women as she spoke to them in quick and forceful tones in their own language the words of eternal life, and of the Christ she herself loved and served. I just stood and watched from the inside of the house, and saw with pleasure middle-aged women, mothers with infants, drinking in the life-giving message as eagerly as the little ones were drinking in their mothers' milk. An old dame sat with eyes fixed on Mrs. Dye, anxious not to lose a word, while from the whole crowd would break again and again murmurs of assent, as some point was made.

Following the service for women came the preaching service in the school chapel. The people gathered, women to the left, men to the right of the speaker, while some married couples with others occupied the benches in front of the platform. What a congregation! Men and women from the village in native costumes with hair braided and dressed in the peculiar fashion of the African natives, others dressed neatly and decently in garments made under the supervision of the lady missionaries, but all alike seemingly anxious to worship quietly and reverently the God they had learned to honor from the teaching of their missionaries. The Doxology was sung (of course in their own language) all standing. Prayer followed, these erstwhile savages closing their eyes and bowing their heads reverently before the All-Father. A portion of Luke's Gospel was read by Mr. Eldred and then followed a discourse punctuated by grunts of assent by the whole congregation who seemed intelligently to follow the address.

Mr. Eldred had prepared a design on the blackboard to illustrate some of the points in his teaching, thus endeavoring to reach his audience by the two avenues, the eye and the ear. After hymn and prayer the general congregation was dismissed and the communion service held. The church numbers over a hundred members. On the Sunday I was present

The American Boycott in China

By W. P. Bentley

Kwang Hsu, Emperor of China.

The monotony of our eastern life was varied last summer by the experience of a real live "boycott," carried out upon the most approved western models. First, there was the "grievance"—the mal-treatment of Chinese at the ports of entry into the United States. Then, there was the "occasion"—the enactment of a new treaty with China. And lastly, there was the inclination to "make it warm for somebody."

This combination resulted in producing a situation that was, for some months, very "interesting," and for a time threatened to be serious. Popular agitators appealed to the public through the press. Public meetings were held, and largely attended, in Shanghai, and other places, although forbidden by the English authorities in Hong-kong.

The Chinese have a special genius for "mob-ology." Everything is here done in, by, for, or through a mob. And so the boycott was soon a "going-concern." The Mongalian ukase went forth that no native should buy or sell any American goods that had not been bought from America before June 15. The disobedient were threatened with heavy fines, and other dire penalties.

The leaders had not counted on the too ready support given the movement by the proletariat. All at once the common people discovered the most violent animosity to everything American. They would not smoke American cigars, or wash their "celestial" bodies with American soap, or burn the American "midnight oil." Here was a surprise for the leaders of the movement, who had thought to dispose of all their present very heavy stocks of goods. But the people were "out of hand." The leaders were "hoist with their own petard." The country was flooded with vile anti-American placards and literature.

The boycott has shown:

1. The power of the Chinese native press;
2. The growth of public opinion in China;
3. The development of a spirit of true patriotism, based on nationality;
4. The spread of knowledge—the Chinese action was based on the known fact that Chinese were the only nationality excluded by our laws;
5. A danger point—the tendency of Chinese reforms to go to extremes. The movement was led by western-trained students;
6. A sense of justice and power of discrimination among the leaders. No attack by them was made on the persons of Americans, nor upon their schools or chapels. Efforts were made to prevent harsh personal feelings.

The boycott threatened a financial panic, and worse, and the danger is not yet over.

What It Must Represent.

To justify a centennial celebration, it will not be sufficient that we shall have raised a half million dollars for foreign missions in the year 1909, but that half million must represent the apostolic faith, primitive zeal, and universal love of the majority of our people. Let every one who reads these lines, even if he be neither a minister nor a deacon, see to it that every member of his church has an opportunity this year to give cash expression to the little or great missionary interest that is in his heart, and let him also see that the three churches nearest his own likewise observe the annual festival of foreign missions.

Missionary Spirit of the Religion of the Prophets

By G. A. Peckham

The golden thread of God's love runs through the religion of the prophets from beginning to end, revealing his gracious plans and purposes for the salvation of humanity. The beginnings of this religion may be seen in the inspired utterances of God's prophets recorded in the Old Testament, its crown and perfection in the teachings of Jesus the divine Master and his apostles—the same religion in different stages of development. We may learn its true character from two short quotations: "There is no God else beside me, a just God and a Savior; there is none besides me. Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth" (Is. 45: 21, 22), and "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation."

In both of these Scriptures we have the living Word of God quickened by his Spirit. Both are proclamations of his infinite love for humanity. In the one a holy man of God speaks as the Spirit gives him utterance; the other contains the words of the greatest of all the prophets, whose coming was desired for centuries by the Jewish nation with eager expectation, in whom as a man divinity and humanity, both in perfection, were united, the Savior of the world. When these words fell from his lips, all authority had been given to him in heaven and on earth. In him prophecy reaches its perfection and has its richest fulfillment; he is the goal of all prophecy.

His message with his spirit in it is the power of God unto salvation to all that believe. So we may say that the of the religion of the prophets is its missionary spirit. Its mission is worldwide, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth"; "It is too light a thing that thou shouldst be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel; I will give thee also for a light to the Gentiles, that my salvation may be to the end of the earth." Its splendid optimism fills us with enthusiasm. It sees a glorious destiny, not for the rich, not for the educated, not for the few, not for a single nation, but for the race. Gentiles shall come to thy light; salvation is to reach the end of the earth; the Messianic King is to have nations for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession.

Jesus sounds the keynote of the religion of the prophets in the commission, "Go ye into all the world," an order intended for all who are to have any part in carrying out his plans. This is but the repetition of a call often made by God in the Old Testament with the same object in view, man's salvation.

Abraham, the friend of God, hears the command, "Go unto a land that I will show thee," obedience to which meant not only enlargement and honor for him, but blessing for all the families of the earth. In this scene Abraham is a representative servant of God. In the light of New Testament teaching a like call comes to all Christians as the spiritual seed of this man of faith, and if we are to receive the richest blessings, we must make the fullest use of our opportunities.

Again God appeared to Moses in the burning bush at Horeb for the purpose of sending him into Egypt that he might free Israel from the oppression of the cruel taskmaster crushing out hope and making spiritual development impossible. It is interesting to note the part played in the conversation between Jehovah and Moses by the two words go and send, and how they supplement each other. God says in one place, "I will send thee," and in another, "Now therefore go." Moses heeded the call and a nation was redeemed from slavery to become the bearers of God's truth to the world.

Once more we turn the pages of revelation and read the messages of Isaiah full of hope and promise for the redemption of humanity. With vision purified by the Spirit he sees Jehovah upon a throne high and lifted up and hears the seraphim singing, "Holy, holy, holy, is Jehovah of hosts; the fullness of the whole earth is his glory." As he listens, the voice of the Lord sounds in his ears, saying "Whom shall I send and who will go for us?" and at once he replies, "Here am I, send me."

When we open the New Testament, we read a continuation of the same story, God's messengers go forth to preach salvation. One eternal purpose of God runs through the whole Bible, the redemption of mankind through the sending out of missionaries. This purpose is seen again in the words of the glorified Jesus when he calls Paul to enter his service: "Unto the Gentiles I send thee, to open their eyes, that they may turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive remission of sins and an inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith in me."

The source of its missionary spirit is the life breathed into it by God, the author of all life. The religion of the prophets is not only living, but it is also life-giving. Like the sparkling springs of water that burst forth among the eternal hills of God and with their ever-flowing streams refresh man, beast and vegetation, it is always fulfilling its mission in this sin-cursed world of ours by pouring out in rich abundance life and blessing upon humanity. Its messages are "seen to tread the ages" like the fabled goddess under whose beneficent footfall sprang beautiful flowers wherever she went. Hospitals and asylums, colleges and universities and hosts of other philanthropic institutions spring up to bless and enlighten.

The spirit of this religion says, "Bring home to every man's heart the knowledge of God, with whom is the fountain of life," to whom the divine Master said, "And this is life eternal, that they should know thee the only true God, and him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." Many examples of its vitalizing power are recorded on the pages of history. It touched the literature and art of ancient Greece and Rome and quickened them into new life. The historian Stade, whom no one would accuse of being unduly influenced by the traditions of the church, is authority for the statement that the creations of the Greek and Roman mind influence the intellectual life of the modern world only so far as they came in contact with the religion originating in Israel. Wonderful are the effects of this religion as told in the story of our own civilization. Under its tuition a race of barbarians became leaders in the thought of the world. No less wonderful are its doings within the last century among the wild men living on the islands of the sea.

The religion of the prophets is indeed a healing stream such as that flowing from the temple in the vision of Ezekiel, or like the one seen by John on the isle of Patmos when he was in the spirit on the Lord's day. In the Old Testament the source of the stream is the temple where God manifested his gracious presence to his people; in the New it flows from the throne of God and the Lamb. So in both it is the gift of God and carries life and blessing wherever it goes.

The Religion of the Prophets is World-wide in its Mission.

Life must manifest itself. He who has really caught the Master's spirit feels that necessity is laid upon him; he is a debtor to all the world. As President Hyde, of Bowdoin College, has said, "Christianity is essentially self-extending; the Christian is under spiritual compulsion to be a missionary." He takes to heart the call of Jesus, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation." He increases his joys and blessings in Christ by sharing them with others.

There is no more striking figure on the pages of divine revelation than "the Servant of Jehovah." One picture of him after another passes before us as we read the Word of God. Now we see him blind and deaf, insensible to the lessons that God would teach. Now he is called to a wonderful salvation; but he can not enter upon it at once. He must save himself by saving others; he must lose his life to save it. Is one in the church for the sole purpose of saving self? Are you there because there is such joy in singing and praying, in holding communion with the saints and feeling sure that you have a passport into heaven? Let us remember that the only path to lasting communion with Jesus, in whom we must abide if we are to live and bear fruit, lies through service.

A beautiful legend of the monastery contains a lesson that we do well to ponder. One day a monk at his devotions sees the glorified form of his Redeemer. As he gazes entranced, the bell rings calling him to feed the beggars at the gate. How he longs to continue in the divine presence! But the voice of duty calls to service and he obeys. When he returns, his Lord is waiting for him and greets him with the words, "If you had stayed, I would have gone." If we wish to have the Savior abide with us, we must make his work our work.

Some churches failing to catch the spirit of the religion which they profess have tried to live each unto self alone.

They may be Orthodox and take great satisfaction in the morals of their members. Yet is their fate bound to be that of Narcissus in the myth. Narcissus, so the story runs, was a youth who saw himself reflected in the stream and was so struck with his own beauty that he gazed upon it until he became a flower, a thing of joy and grace for a moment. Soon, however, it withered and dried up. Then the wind carried it away and it passed into nothingness. The non-missionary church is doomed because it is false to the law that called it into being.

The Christian born of God inherits from his Father the missionary spirit that counts no sacrifice too great that the whole world may have the Gospel. To return to the Servant of Jehovah in the Old Testament, we see him, stricken, smitten of God and afflicted, pour out his life unto death. But after bearing the sins of many he makes intercession for the transgressors. It is his mission to carry light to the Gentiles and salvation to the ends of the earth.

The prophets on the mountain-top of inspiration with vision purified by the Holy Spirit see the kingdom of heaven embracing the whole world. A characteristic passage is found in Isaiah 19: 23-25, "In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria; and the Egyptians shall worship with the Assyrians. In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the earth; for that Jehovah of hosts hath blessed them, saying, Blessed be Egypt my inheritance." When we consider that these three nations meant for the hearers of the prophet all the earth, we have in his words a picture of universal peace and good will because all men worship the one true God. That these Old Testament ideals and promises may be realized as soon as possible the Church must understand that its mission is world-wide and must let the heathen hear God's gracious invitation, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."

The vision of a glorious destiny for humanity

is another distinguishing characteristic of the religion of the prophets. The promises of God resting upon his eternal truth form the background of these visions and give assurance that the glories seen in the future are to be realized. He who trusts in them and permits his life to be guided by them can no more suffer disappointment than the germ of the seed, when it has struggled up through the ground, can fail to find the sunlight that quickened it into life. These soul-inspiring visions serve as beacon lights kindled by our Father helping us on the way to perfection. The prophet Joel looked forward to the time when the Lord was to pour out his Spirit upon all flesh and the young men should see visions. All the great prophets had their visions. Even Jesus for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and so became the Savior of the world. We sometimes smile at the fancies of the youth because he builds castles in the air. But one thing is sure, no man ever lived in a castle that was the product of his own brawn and brain that did not first have a castle in the air. Our life and its goal depend upon the visions that we see and the hopes that we entertain.

Let the heathen see the visions and hear the promises, for they as well as we have a capacity for divine perfection in Christ Jesus. What Christianity has done and is to do for us it can do for them. If its promises have filled us with enthusiasm and given us the hope of a blessed immortality, they can do the same for all the children of God. "Great lives are trained by great promises. The world has never been without a great promise singing in its wondering and troubled heart—something to rely upon; something to appeal to when difficulty was extreme. . . . . God's presence in the soul is a life-expanding and a life-glorifying presence." Christianity enriches the soul, dignifies and ennobles man by making him the child of God.

We must not measure the possibilities of the heathen by what we can see of him in his present condition brutalized by generations of ignorance and superstition, but rather by the perfect Man, Christ Jesus, the firstborn among many brethren. A kernel of grain held by a mummy's hand in the darkness of the tomb for three thousand years gave no hint of the latent power contained within it. But when it was placed in the ground and the rains of heaven fell upon it and God's sunshine warmed it into life, it sprang up and yielded the golden harvest. Let the brightness of the Gospel shine into the benighted souls of the heathen and quicken into life the latent divine nature that is within. This religion of the prophets has already done wonders for the race and is fitting humanity for a glorious destiny in a future life. Death is swallowed up forever. Sin and sorrow have passed away. Men have realized their ideal in the service of God and in the light of his glory they shall reign forever and ever. May we do well our part that we live not only now but in that unending golden age when men have attained unto perfection.

BETTER THAN PIE

Not Only the New Food But the Good Wife As Well.

When they brought the new food, Grape-Nuts, into the house the husband sampled it first and said, "It's better than pie!" When it brought back the glow of health to the wife's cheeks, his admiration for it and her was increased, so she says, and the rest of her story follows:

"From childhood I was troubled with constant and often acute indigestion, and when my baby was born it turned out that he had inherited the awful ailment.

"A friend told me of Grape-Nuts and I invested in a box and began to eat according to directions. It was after only a few days that I found my long abused stomach was growing stronger and that the attacks of indigestion were growing less frequent, and in an incredibly short time they ceased altogether. With my perfect digestion restored came strong nerves, clear, active brain, the glow of health to my cheeks, and I know I was a better wife and mother and more agreeable to live with under the new conditions.

"When the boy came to be 10 months old he developed such an appetite (his dyspepsia disappeared with mine) that his mother's milk was not sufficient for him. He rejected all baby foods, however, till I tried Grape-Nuts food, at Husband's suggestion. The youngster took it at once and has eaten it daily ever since, thriving wonderfully on it. He now demands it at every meal and was much put out when he dined at a hotel a few days ago because the waitress could not fill his order for Grape-Nuts." # The Annual Convention at Tokio

By Clifford S. Weaver.

The annual convention of the churches of Christ in Japan was held in the city of Tokio. This meeting sustains somewhat the same relation to our work in Japan as does the national convention at home to our work there.

Tashiro San and family, native evangelists of the Foreign Society at Osaka, Japan.

The last convention was one of our best. It was a democratic body, composed of our missionaries, the Japanese preachers and evangelists, and the believers from the various stations, although the attendance, outside of the preachers, is largely local. The program consisted of sermons, Bible readings, lectures, etc., the chief features of one of our home conventions being incorporated. In point of attendance our meetings are small, probably about like a county convention in America. This year the presence of Miss Griffith, H. C. Saum and wife and D. O. Cunningham and wife, en route to India, was a blessing and inspiration. Brethren Saum and Cunningham, with their wives, sang sweetly for us. Although their words were not understood by the Japanese, yet they were appreciated by our own misisonaries, who were present.

Sunday-school children at play in C. S. Weaver's yard, Osaka, Japan.

Mrs. Axline, of Ohio, and Miss Susan Mitchell, of Kentucky, also attended some of the sessions, the latter rendering a most beautiful and appropriate solo at the morning service on the Lord's day.

Just at present in some Japanese circles there seems to be a certain clash between Japanese and foreign workers. In some of the churches this is quite apparent, but in our work here this problem has never troubled us. We have no creed nor ecclesiastical machinery to harness upon the people, and hence there is no issue between the Japanese worker and his foreign helper and adviser. There is nothing for each to do but to exalt a common Lord and Savior, and wherever one is busily engaged in exalting Christ Jesus there is little time for religious or other controversy.

One of our Sunday-schools at Osaka, Japan. C. S. Weaver and wife appear in the picture. They are graduates of Eureka College.

The convention of 1905 showed a genuine fellowship to exist between the Japanese, and the foreign missionary. I speak this in reference to our own people.

There was never a better time than to-day to preach Jesus Christ in Japan. To those willing to do this, and this only, there is plenty of room, and such a one will not be unwelcome in most Japanese circles. Japan is not yet Christian, although some enthusiastic writers have so painted her. It is estimated that three-fourths of the people have not heard the Gospel.

Japan is not all the mission field in the world, but our Foreign Missionary Society is not doing work in any field of greater importance than is Japan at the present time.

The present force of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in Japan is 24, with 44 native helpers. Besides this force, there are upward of a half-dozen working independently of our board, who receive their support from various churches and individuals in America.

In so far as these missionaries, whether under the board or independent of it, seek to preach Jesus Christ and him crucified will their work be blessed.

So far as I know all the missionaries of the Church of Christ in Japan are doing their best under many and varying difficulties. For all success to God be glory and honor. For all our mistakes we pray our heavenly Father's grace and forgiveness.

Osaka, Japan.

The churches under the control of the American Board and the London Missionary Society in South India and Ceylon have united. The union follows a similar action on the part of the Presbyterians in India. This is just one more indication of the tendency toward Christian union through the foreign field.

Retracing the Old Survey

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

However well grounded in the truth, no man is out of reach of the temptation to apostasy. "Hold fast the form of sound words," was the exhortation of Paul to a Christian minister. "Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them." By "form of sound words" is meant the plan, skeleton, or outline of the divine scheme for the salvation of men which Paul had revealed to Timothy. The figure is taken from painting or architecture. "Form" is equivalent to the design, pattern or plan of the Gospel structure. Man is not to invent his religion; the divine mind reveals it. The perfect plan is unfolded in the Scriptures; the outlines of everything necessary to man's present and eternal welfare. The conflict, weakness and loss which have come in the history of the Christian religion have been the direct result of human departures from the divine plan, and the introduction of the inventions of men within the sphere of the authority of God. Attention to this admonition of Paul is the foremost religious need of our time.

What is "the form of sound words"? Two elements enter into it: Paul's method of building on the foundation, Jesus Christ; and the building up of the kingdom throughout the world. The first matter in the plan, as is true of any structure, is the foundation. "According to the grace of God, which is given unto me as a wise master builder, I have laid the foundation and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." The design of the building is from God. The structure must be raised after the pattern God has given. The execution of the plan is entrusted to a wise and experienced builder. The foundation of the spiritual building is Christ, and can only be Christ. Paul does not build upon Abraham, or Moses, or John the Baptist, but Christ. So at Cesarea Philippi Peter confessed: "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God," and Jesus declared: "On this rock I will build my church." This confession is the one article of faith in the Christian system, the only confession of faith to be required of any man, the universal creed of the universal church. Then human authority in religion is not to be regarded; human legislation touching the commandments and ordinances of the Gospel is not to bind the conscience; human organizations for the Church of Christ, human creeds for the Word of Christ, human names for the followers of Christ, and human substitutes for the ordinances of Christ, are not only unauthorized, but positively sinful interferences with the divine order.

Accepting this, we turn back to the beginning of things, start at Jerusalem, take our bearings and run our lines, and retrace the old survey. We must undertake not to reform any institution of men, but to restore Christianity in word, faith, spirit and practice. The pages of the New Testament must be searched for the religion of Christ, and according to the plan of the apostles the work go forward. The ancient order of things, the apostolic order of things, is the best order, the truest order, the triumphant order.

First, the corner stone must be built into the walls, according to the inspired plan. How is it done? Paul went down to Corinth and "earnestly testified that Jesus was the Christ." A divine person was proclaimed as the object of faith; no formulated system of philosophy, no body of divinity, arranged by school or council, no creed or declaration of opinion, philosophical and speculative, concerning the Trinity, or election, or transubstantiation, but the personal Christ, the Son of God and Savior of the world. So Peter, on Pentecost, preached Jesus exalted to be both Lord and Christ. So Philip went down to Samaria and preached Christ unto them. So Philip preached unto the eunuch Jesus. So thousands at one time, after hearing a single sermon, believed unto the saving of their souls. It was faith with all the heart in Jesus as the Christ; faith that came by hearing the Word of God, and not in a mysterious or miraculous way; faith that involved the whole moral nature; faith that responded to every known requirement of God's holy law. "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest."

But not by faith alone were men builded on this foundation. "Faith without works is dead, being alone." "You see how that by works man is justified and not by faith only." Conversion is more than the exercise of faith in Christ. "God commandeth men everywhere to repent," and Christ declares, "Repentance and remission of sins" must be preached. In Jerusalem, on Pentecost, where the Gospel is first preached, and men cry under conviction, "What shall we do?" the first word is "Repent!" Such recognition of sin and sorrow for sin there must be as leads to change of heart and amendment of life, "repentance toward God," "repentance unto life."

Not faith alone, nor repentance alone, however, nor faith and repentance combined will bring men into personal relation with Christ. Obedience is essential. When Paul earnestly testified that Jesus was the Christ "many of the Corinthians, hearing and believing, were baptized." "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," said Jesus; and Peter preaching the first sermon under this commission commands: "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Paul himself, when he seeks in Damacus to know what he must do, receives from Ananias the instruction: "Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord"; and this apostle declares to the Galatians: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Upon what did our Lord make salvation to depend? What did Peter command the believing Jews to do, and for what purpose? To what act did Ananias attach the idea of the washing away of sins; and how does Paul say we put on Christ?

According to the form of sound words then, these are conditions on which forgiveness is promised to the sinner. There is no such thing taught in the Scriptures as baptismal regeneration. Baptism is in no case to be administered without previous faith and repentance. Water has no magic virtue, no abstract efficacy. But one whose heart has been changed by the Word and Spirit of God, and is under the power of a heartfelt faith and sincere repentance must solemnly signify his faith and repentance in Christian baptism; and in his obedience to the ordinance of Christ, not in peculiar emotion, special revelation or supernatural token, receives assurance of pardon and acceptance.

If we would hold fast the form of sound words must we not lay the same foundation and build on it after the same plan? Can we invent our own design, and work in gold, silver and precious stones after our own invention, and yet claim ours is the temple whose corner

UNDER WHICH KING?

"The More Postum the More Food—the More Coffee the More Poison."

The Pres. of the W. C. T. U. in a young giant state in the Northwest says:

"I did not realize that I was a slave to coffee till I left off drinking it. For three or four years I was obliged to take a nerve tonic every day. Now I am free, thanks to Postum Food Coffee.

"After finding out what coffee will do to its victims, I could hardly stand to have my husband drink it; but he was not willing to quit. I studied for months to find a way to induce him to leave it off. Finally I told him I would make no more coffee.

"I got Postum Food Coffee, and made it strong—boiled it the required time, and had him read the little book, 'The Road to Wellville,' that comes in every pkg.

"Today Postum has no stronger advocate than my husband! He tells our friends how to make it, and that he got through the winter without a spell of the grip and has not had a headache for months—he used to be subject to frequent nervous headaches.

"The stronger you drink Postum the more food you get; the stronger you drink coffee the more poison you get." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Our Budget.

—Every church in line March 4.

—Take an offering to evangelize the nations of the earth.

—The demands on our columns continue to be very great, and our friends will please be patient.

—We stand for the old survey as seen from the Dome. We say this as some are trying to create an impression that we do not.

—The March offering is a part of the "four years' campaign" which will close with the great centennial celebration in Pittsburg, 1909.

—If 6,000 preachers will do their part on the first Sunday in March and before that day, those black squares on the diagram will be reduced to insignificant proportions.

—Read the latest telegrams and reports from our evangelists. What telegrams in the daily papers are so inspiring? Think about the victory at Council Bluffs; imagine what Yeuell, who had 260 converts at Niles, can, by the help of the Lord, do for New Hampshire; be inspired by the 612 additions under Harlow and Taubman at Portsmouth; rejoice and be thankful with Scoville and De Loss Smith and Grafton at Anderson for the greatest number of additions ever recorded in a single meeting in the annals of the brotherhood! And note the good work in a hundred other places.

—St. Louis has just been favored by a visit from President McLean, Dr. Drummond and A. E. Corey, of the Foreign Society. A fine rally was held at the Union Avenue Church, at which nearly all the ministers of the city were present. The value of such rallies is very apparent where an interest is taken in them. In St. Louis we are confident that more real interest in foreign missions has been inspired during the past week than in any similar gathering held in the city. The trouble with many of these rallies is that the ministers themselves who have promised to take part in them fail to appear when the occasion comes around. When every minister is in earnest his people will respond in some degree. These representatives of the Foreign Society were prevailed upon to stay over Lord's day in St. Louis in order to get a little rest for themselves after the fatiguing series of journeys, and they spoke in different churches.

—J. C. Reynolds is dead. He passed away last week suddenly from heart failure. Brother Reynolds was one of the few still left to us of the race of pioneer preachers. We shall publish some particulars in our next issue.

—George L. Snively, of this city, preached to large audiences in Keokuk, Ia., last Lord's day. M. J. Nicoson, of Memphis, Mo., assumes that pastorate early in March. In the afternoon Brother Snively lectured on "The Fundamentals of Our Faith" before the men's meeting of H. G. Waggoner's church, of Hamilton, Ill. Brother Waggoner has created great interest in church matters at Hamilton, making our church there much stronger now than ever before. His report of a very successful meeting now drawing to a close will appear next week.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Hebron, Neb., Feb. 19.—Closed at Fairbury with 309, 101 grown men, 135 grown women; 41 husbands and wives came together; we now have the strongest church in the state. We began at Hebron yesterday. R. A. Schell is pastor and the outlook is good.—Wilson and Lintt, Evangelists.

—The work at California, Mo., under Herbert Corwine, is in fine condition.

—J. D. Pontius will give half-time to the church at Golden City, Mo.

—A Baptist preacher has just taken membership with our church at Capitol Hill, adjoining Oklahoma City.

—A Second Christian Church, colored, has been organized at Guthrie, Okla. They will meet every Lord's day.

—J. M. Blalock, of Marshall, Mo., who has been dangerously ill, is improving slowly.

—R. S. Smedley is in field work again as a living link evangelist and has gone to Gotebo, I. T.

—O. D. Maple, of Marion, O., is to engage in a debate with an Adventist elder March 6.

—The church at Akron, Ohio, under George Darsie is aiming at $900 for the first Sunday in March.

—E. G. Merrill has just received evidences of the appreciation of the congregation at Troy, Mo.

—J. W. Famuliner has left Bentonville, Ark., for Sulphur Springs, Tex., to which he will give full time.

—J. P. Rowlison's removal from Tampa, Fla., to Clarksville, Tenn., is to succeed Robert Lord Cave as pastor there.

—W. Y. Allen reports that they will dedicate the new building at Salem, Ind., which is nearly completed, free from debt.

—Paulding, O., where J. P. Myers is minister, has practically unanimously decided to undertake the building of a new church.

—F. D. Eisenhart reports that a new building is now being planned that will satisfy the needs of the church at Burlington, Ia.

—It has been well said that the extension of the Gospel is hindered not so much by the wickedness as by the littleness of men.

—G. P. Rutledge is one of the executive committee of the big union meeting being held in Philadelphia by Torrey and Alexander.

—B. F. Stallings has closed his pastorate at Oxford, Kan., though he will live there until April 1. He can hold a meeting in March.

—Two Indiana sisters have just given our National Benevolent Association $700 on the annuity plan in memory of their parents and brother.

—There are reports of continued revivals in India, where there is a population of over 100,000,000 entirely unreached by the Gospel.

—Henry W. Hunter, who is located at Butler, Mo., has recently added to his work the charge of the church at Pleasant Union, Jackson county.

—"The congregation has supplied itself with the best hymnal among us—'Gloria in Excelsis'—much to the delight of all."—Howard T. Cree, Augusta, Ga.

—Mrs. E. A. Gray, the oldest member in the church at Lyons, Kan., has presented the congregation with a handsome individual communion set.

—General Nogi on his return from the war found that none of the Christian Japanese soldiers had been punished, but that many had received medals.

—A church at Nottingham, England, has for its motto, "Not parasites on the past, but pioneers of the future." A good motto for churches and preachers in our land.

—Joseph Gaylor, state evangelist of Missouri, has for several weeks been suffering from blood poisoning, but is now recovering, and hopes to be about again soon.

—George E. Lyon, president of the convention of the seventh district of the Kansas Christian Missionary Society, announces that this will be held at Oxford, March 6-8.

—An equivalent of two years of time was recently volunteered by some native Corean Christians, each giving from a day to a week or a fortnight to going around telling the Gospel story to their neighbors.

—If all the missionaries in the Congo state were distributed over the whole state each would have a parish of 4,736 square miles, with about 150,000 souls to care for. We have just five missionaries there.

—Victor Dorris is engaged with John P. Sala, minister of our church at Elyria, O., in a meeting where the definite aim is to educate and develop the spiritual life of the church people and those with whom they come in contact.

—The date for the dedication at Jellico, Tenn., has been set for June 10. A Senior Endeavor Society has just been organized by Brother Grinstead and the Bible school and teachers' training class are doing fine work.

—Mrs. D. B. Wells, in an address on Africa, told of a little Congo girl who, looking into a glass, ground it beneath her feet, saying: "Do I look like that? Make me over, quick!" So the church is studying how to make Africa "over."

—The North Texas Christian Missionary Society has been holding its semi-annual convention at Bonham this week. J. W. Holsapple, of Greenville, is the president. From the program we imagine the brethren had a good time.

—Harry G. Hill made such a hit last year with his lecture to the church at De Land, Ill., that he was called back to give a week's course, and Brother McConnell, the minister of the church there, writes that the people have been delighted.

—The church at La Junta, Col., is now entirely self-supporting, and has just made a $300 increase in the salary of A. L. Ferguson, its preacher. J. T. Stivers has just held a very successful meeting there, and has gone on to hold another at Rifle, Col.

—"Every member of Fullerton Church is pleased with 'Gloria in Excelsis'—undoubtedly the best hymnal published. The price is very reasonable. We can not think of a criticism to make, if we wanted to."—Charles C. Chapman, Fullerton, Cal.

—"'Gloria in Excelsis,' as expressed by local sales, is the most popular and attractive hymnal we have. Its fresh editorial view point will keep our hymnology from stagnating in old channels.

Sarsaparilla is unquestionably the greatest blood and liver medicine known. It positively and permanently cures every humor, from Pimples to Scrofula. It is the Best Blood Medicine.

It has enriched our devotional services."—Reuben Butchart, Toronto, Canada.

—In 1905 Americans gave for foreign missions less than $8,000,000 and over 30 times as much for work in the homeland; but the same year they gave 325 times as much for confectionery and chewing gum, millinery, jewelry and plate, tobacco and liquors.

—When preaching your foreign missionary sermons remember that concrete facts are more convincing than generalities. Give the people the facts, the facts of missions. Facts tell. Facts convince. Facts warm the heart and generate interest.

—M. O. Johnson has been called indefinitely by the church at Stroh, Ind., and at the same time has been released from pastoral work and the morning service in the summer time, in order that he may preach in the open air and seek to regain his nerve force.

—F. Hooker Groom has just closed his work at Weleetka, I. T., to accept the position of state evangelist of Montana. He has already started for Helena, which is to be his location. During his year and a half at Weleetka the membership was trebled, and the church is now one of the best in the Indian Territory.

—C. E. Chambers has declined the call to remain with the church at Mystic, Ia., with increase in salary, in order to accept a call from the Davis Street Church, Ottumwa, where he will begin work April 15. A preacher will, therefore, be needed at Mystic, and the salary that can be paid is about $900.

—The work at Malden, Mo., continues to grow under the ministry of R. S. Robertson. There have been some 22 additions since he took charge last November. He has added the Home Department and Cradle Roll to his Sunday-school, which has increased about 50 per cent, and there are now two Bethany reading circles in operation.

—W. T. Hilton, of Atchison, Kan., proposes to visit the churches in his county that have no ministers and see that the March offering is taken. Other ministers will do the same in their counties. It is possible to bring a thousand churches into line in this way. That would be a great thing for these pastorless churches and for these ministers.

—Louis S. Cupp writes that the leaders at the Hyde Park Church, Kansas City, will use the entire month of April rallying the school, as per our announcement of week before last. The enterprising superintendent, H. H. Borgman, is publishing a weekly bulletin called "Rays of Sunshine." There are 32 in the teachers' training class, with nearly as many more who attend the sessions.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

—"'Gloria in Excelsis' is undoubtedly the best hymnal ever issued by our brotherhood. Some great hymns and some great tunes, that have for many years enriched the worship of other religious bodies, are for the first time made available to our people, and the chaff has, for the most part, been sifted out, and, I trust, burned up."—E. M. Todd, Pastor, North Tonawanda, N. Y.

—Do not forget that the meeting in Manchester, N. H., is to be held in March, and that its object is to establish a church of the reformation in the only state in the Union in which we have none. Bro. Herbert Yeuell, one of our most successful evangelists, has been secured to hold this meeting. It will require several hundred dollars to pay the evangelist and his singer, the expenses of the hall, and advertising. Brother Garrison has planned for this meeting, relying on the co-operation of the brethren with him in this enterprise. During his absence from the office for a few weeks, the assistant editor will receive and acknowledge all money contributed for this purpose. Since receiving Brother White's subscription only one other has reached us. It is the modest sum of ten cents, and the donor does not make known his or her name. Though the sum be small, and given out of perhaps straitened circumstances, he or she who has sent it will, we believe, receive a hundred fold in the way of joy at having taken part in establishing a church in the only state of our great country where the message of the reformation movement has not yet achieved a victory.

Herbert Yeuell,

Who will be our evangelist to open up work in New Hampshire. He has just held a fine meeting at Niles, O. (See page 245).

—DeForest Austin writes that as a result of a tent meeting in Los Angeles there will be a new church, with a pastor located. A $3,000 lot has been purchased and lumber is on the ground for a new building. This is the second meeting of this character held in Los Angeles by Brother Austin and Frank McVay, the colored singer, from whom he will not again part.

—There is an effort being made to acquire for the Sunday-schools of St. Louis and vicinity the most valuable part of what is known as the Jerusalem exhibit at the recent World's Fair. If the money be forthcoming, the exhibit will be installed in the St. Louis public museum, and will be accessible at all times to the Sunday-school children of the city. We cordially endorse the plan and believe that money paid for this purpose will be wisely spent.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY,
Y. M. C. A. Bldg.,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

—F. M. Burgess writes us that the work at the Southern Christian Institute is going along well. Allison Hall and Belding Hall are comfortably filled, and the attendance at chapel is probably the largest in the history of the school. On Lord's day a week ago there were four baptisms. President Lehman is patiently and carefully working out some of the great problems of negro education.

—J. H. Bicknell has left Elmwood, Neb., to go back to Minnesota. He will act as pastor of the Central Church at St. Paul and corresponding secretary for the state. Brother Bicknell was formerly state evangelist. During his past year at Elmwood there were 75 additions, 55 of them being by baptism. At a farewell reception given to him the treasurer announced that all indebtedness had been paid, so the church starts with a clean slate for any preacher who may take up this work.

—The Board of Ministerial Relief has recently received from the estate of John Reed, Worcester, Mass., by John F. Kyes, executor of the estate, the sum of $1,000 for the permanent fund of this work, and $557.83 for the general fund. Brother Reed's good spirit and Brother Kyes' good management thus extend a helping hand to the worn-out heroes of the faith. Write the Board of Ministerial Relief at 120 East Market street, Indianapolis, Ind., concerning bequests, annuities or other gifts. A. L. Orcutt is president.

—We are grieved to hear of the sudden death of Mrs. W. H. Book, the wife of our pastor at Columbus, Ind. She had been ill but a few days, and leaves a family of nine children ranging in age from 20 months to 17 years. The funeral was held at the church on Feb. 15, Dr. Jabez Hall, of Butler, preaching the sermon, and other ministers of the city taking part. Will A. Harding, writing to us, says: "Sister Book had one of the strongest, sweetest Christian spirits I have ever known, and although they have been with us but four months, they have endeared themselves to the entire community; the whole city is in mourning and is sympathizing with the father and children in a way that is bound to comfort them and in some measure lighten their heavy burden."

—The fifth international convention of the student volunteer movement will be held at Nashville, Tenn., from Feb. 28 to March 4. The long list of missionary representatives contains so many well known names that special mention would be almost invidious. Of course, the "only Archibald" will be present. This is one of the most important conventions to be held this year, and it is likely to call together 3,000 delegates from schools, colleges and universities, from the foreign missionary boards and their foreign fields, from the many young people's organizations, and from editorial sanctums all over the land There will be addresses, discussions and sectional conferences, while the opportunity for meeting personally the leaders interested in missionary work and seeing the missionary exhibit is a very important aspect of this annual gathering. Mr. F. M. Turner, Chamber of Commerce Building, Nashville, Tenn., is the general secretary.

Missouri Joins in the Campaign.

An agreement has been entered into by the superintendents in several states to inaugurate a campaign during April by the Bible schools of our whole brotherhood, for larger numbers, new schools, better methods and a greater number of conversions from the schools. Of course Missouri must take a leading place in this campaign. There are said to be 400,000 boys and girls in this state of school age who are not in Sunday school at all. We have about 400 churches that have no schools. Let the movement result in gathering large numbers of these young people into the schools we already have, and in putting schools into many congregations that now have none.

I appeal to every superintendent and every minister to take this matter up and prepare thoroughly for this movement. Let April be given up to this effort; and then let it be continued not only through April but until the object aimed at is accomplished. Write me if further information is desired, or if there is any help I can afford in prosecuting the campaign.

All Who Preach—Attention!

Every time you change your permanent address, many who wish to communicate with you are unable to reach you for weeks or months. Whenever a temporary change is mentioned in the papers many get the impression that it is a permanent removal. In many and obvious ways it is an advantage to have your address known. An occasional undesirable circular will not hurt you.

If you will simply send to the undersigned one postal card statement: "Please change my address from —— P. O. ——, State, to (street, P. O. box or rural delivery No.), —— P. O. —— county, —— state," all the papers, colleges and general and state missionary secretaries will be given the information promptly, without further trouble or expense to you. If at the same time you will indicate what your relation is to the church at your new address, or elsewhere, this will also be reported.

W. R. WARREN,
Centennial Secretary.

Brother Updike's Letter.

We have a letter from Brother Updike. We want all of the readers of this department to read it.
